

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

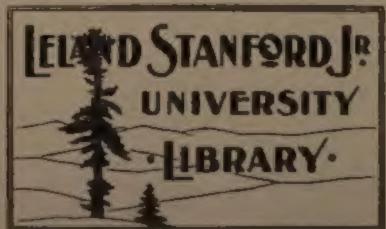

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

PRESENTED BY THOMAS WELTON STANFORD

THE

ANNUAL REGISTER,

OR A VIEW OF THE

H I S T O R Y,
P O L I T I C S,

AND

LITERATURE,

For the YEAR 1770.

The FIFTH EDITION.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Dodsley, in Pall-Mall, 1794.

a.350/3,

DaAT

[•]

PREFACE.

HE year we treat of, afforded much matter for History, and perhaps still more for Speculation. Though fruitful in great and extraordinary events, it seemed to threaten more than it expressly told. A war which desolated a great part of Europe, and might in its consequences have affected the political system of the whole, appeared at this time, as little more than a secondary object of consideration. Battles and sieges, the destruction of armies and fleets, and the ruin of countries, however distant the scene of action, would, in times of less business and importance, have nearly superseded all other matter, and have been considered as the only objects, that demanded the care of the Writer, or that claimed the attention of the Public.

In the present instance it has been otherwise; and however interesting these subjects of observation or discussion may be, others have arisen nearer home, by which, as a nation, we are more immediately affected. The extraordinary movements of some of our great neighbours, and the hostile appearances for some time, on the side, at least, of one of them, were more than objects of curiosity; and though the storm seems for the present blown over, it has afforded sufficient cause for reflection. The issue of the present convulsions in France, whether they terminate in increasing the despotism of the Monarch, or in regaining or enlarging the rights or liberties of the People, must be to us a matter of great importance. Fortunate, we should think it, if in this precarious and critical state of affairs, when almost every part of Europe prefents an ample field for discussion; our own domestic concerns were in so happy a situation, as not to furnish the Patriot and Politician with the most just and serious anxiety for the welfare of his own country.

PREFACE. vii

We hope that so much matter, and such various subjects of discussion, as have swelled our History beyond the limits usually assigned to it, will sufficiently plead with the Public, sor our being later this year than we intended: And that if, upon the whole, we have endeavoured to give the clearest and most impartial account of foreign and domestic transactions, which the limited and impersect information, that can be obtained so near the time of their being acted, will admit of, we shall still continue to meet with that indulgence, which we have hitherto so happily experienced.

ANNUAL REGISTER, For the YEAR 1770.

THE

HISTORY

OF

E U R O P E.

CHAP. I.

State of the Belligerent Powers. Russia. Conduct of the Neutral Powers. Probable consequences of the war. Turky. Firmness of the Grand Signior. Probability of a peace. Spain. Falkland's Islands. Great Britain. Portugal.

Russians in the two last campaigns, though flattering and brilliant, have not been productive of those immediate advantages, which would have attended conquests of the same nature in other parts of the world. The fertile and extensive provinces between the Danube and the Niester, if they had been situated in the cultivated parts of Europe or Asia, and subject only to the well-regulated rapine of a disciplined army under an Vol. XIII.

able general, would in themselves have nearly provided for the support of the war.

In the present instance, the conquered countries are in so ruined a state, that instead of contributing to desray the expences of the war, they cannot supply the common articles of subsistence; and sorage is the principal, if not the only aid, which they can afford to their defenders or assailants.

The Russians will, however, derive great advantages in the future opera-operations of the war from this accession of territory; and being in possession of all the fortresses, and the Turks driven totally beyond the Danube, this state of security, as well as that arising from the submission of the Budziac Tartars, will encourage the remaining natives to cultivate their lands and rebuild their houses, and the fugitives to return to their country. Nor will the Turks find it easy now to renew the war on this fide of the Danube; an attempt, in which they will experience many of the same difficulties, which we had formerly shewn would attend the progress of the Russians, if they were to extend their operations into Bolgaria, In either case the river will be sound a very important barrier.

Though the Tartars of the Crim and Little Tartary, as well as those of Oczacow, have hitherto continued firm in their attachment to the Porte, and have despised all the offers as well as threats, which have been used to detach them from it; yet it can scarcely be conceived by the present appearance of affairs, that without the intervention of . fome other power, or fome extraordinary and unexpected good fortune on the fide of the Turks, they can be able to withstand the power of Russia for another campaign. The Turkish operations on the Danube can be confidered as little more than a divertion in their favour, and in the present wretched state of their marine, the support by the Black Sea muit be weak and uncertain. Nor is any extraordinary defence to be expected from the fortress of Ozzacow; fingle and exposed as it is, without support, and the dreadful fate of Bender before its eyes.

While the Russians triumph upon the Danube and the Niester; by their expedition to the Mediterranean, they feem to have enclosed all Europe, from the bottom of the Baltic, to the Streights of the Dardanelles, within the line of their hostility. Extraordinary events are seldom brought about, without a fingular concurrence of circumstances to facilitate their execution; and it may perhaps be found, that most of the great revolutions which have taken place in the history of mankind, would have failed, if they had been attempted at any other time than that precise ara, which seemed calculated for their completion, and to have removed or imported every obstacle to their success. This expedition is one of thole remarkable events which could have as little taken place, as the attempt could have been believed or foreseen, at any period of time prior to the present.

It had become the policy of the great European commercial powers, long before Russia was mittress of a flup, to suffer no new maritime state to spring up amongst them; nor did the antiquity of the republic of Genoa protect her from the jealouly of Lewis the Fourteenth, when the, who had before aspired to be a rival for the commerce of the world, was rettrained from building ships in her own docks; and even restricted as to the possession of more than a specified number. trary precedents of the same nature were not unknown in antiquity; and it is no wonder that the modern European states, whose avidity for commerce, as foon as they had talled her sweets, was beyond all former example, and involved them in continual wars themselves for the share they should

posses

HISTORY OF EUROPE. Γ3

vert such precedents to their dvantage, and behold every val for it with the extremelt

y.

r the Great's efforts to create and a navy, were behild with tion as a novelty, and as the dinary attempts of an extray man. His great thips and d admirals were amuling to and to others in the Baltic, aftructive to Sweden in the ng state of that kingdom. naval force as could be formfuch a fea, and locked up it, was of little confequence great commercial states; and the strict policy of these, as of later times, that it should ired to those limits.

particular jealoufy with which editerranean povers have at es regarded every intrusion . fea, which being furroundtheir dominions, they feem : measure to consider as their r property, would in any other flances of public affairs, have an infoperable bar to this ize. Nor is this attempt repugnant to the principles 1 by the commercial states, is to the general political of Europe, which has been and to eagerly purfued, and o preferve a due equilibrium lly averse to the making of conquelts, or to the formaa new dominion. To all banding impediments to an . of this nature, may be ade general dread entertained wer-grown power of Ruffia, onviction of the confequenk have already enfued from preme ascendant which the uired, and which the fo arin her favour, should eager- bitrarily displays in all the affairs of the north.

> Such, however, are the peculiar circumitances of the present times, and fuch the extraordinary fortune of the Emprets Catherine, that with a very moderate naval force, ill found and ill provided, and manned with raw and unexperienced failurs, the has fent fire and (word into the shores of Greece, and the ifles of the Archipelago.

Great Britain, indeed, beheld without uncalinels, the aggrandizement of a power, in whose alliance the is to look for a balance to the family compact. France does not chule to interfere in a quarrel which might bring into the Mediterranean an English, to the aid of a Russian The distress which the Levant trade suffers, is more felt by France than by Great Britain; and Great Britain profits more by the prosperity of the Russian arms and empire, than the fuffers by a temporary fulpention of her commerce in that part of the world, where our dealings are not near to extensive as thole of France. If the progress of the Ruffian arms fhould meet any check, it must be owing to the intervention of Pruffia and Auftria; neither of which powers can fee, without 2 rational alarm, Ruffia becoming the miffreis of Poland, and the total defroyer of the Turkish empire; out of whofe rains fomething truly formidable might arite in time.

This Mediterranean expedition has however, hitherto, answered more the purpost of damage to the enemy, than of direct benent to Russia. The pailage of the Dardanelles has not been made good, nor does there feem any great probability, as it was not effected during the first furprize and confusion, that it should focceed, [A] 2 succeed, after the Turks have had so long a time, under the conduct of able engineers, to prepare for its desence. Neither have the Russians been able to possess themselves of an island or port in the Archipelago, of any consequence, during the whole summer. This expedition, however, contributed to embarrals and distract the councils of the Porte, to keep back some of their best troops and officers from the Danube, and by cutting off the supply of provisions by sea, to increase the tumults and disorder at Constantinople. It is also probable that it encouraged, in a confiderable degree, the rebellion that has broken out in Egypt.

None of these consequences, except the destruction of the Turkish sleet, seem equivalent to the vast expences that have attended it, and which at present are ill adapted to the state of the Russian sinances. It may also perhaps be doubted, whether they have not been counterbalanced by the ruin and slau, hter of the Greeks, who seem by some statility, to be devoted to inevitable destruction, wherever the Russians appear in their favour.

This consequence was however to have been expected, from the excessive ignorance of the Greeks, and the inability of the Russians to support them with effect. It does not indeed appear to have been good policy in Russia, to have made so fatal and useless a trial of the dispolition of these unhappy people. It was natural enough that they should with for a deliverance from their oppressors, and that, vain of their antient national glory, they should think themicless potretled of the virtue of their ancellors: their ignerance or geography, of the flate of Europe, and even of the ability of Russia to assist them, would sufficiently account for any act of madness that they were capable of committing. The Russians are, however, too well informed to imagine that a people immerfed in a corruption of two thousand years, broken by long flavery, and funk thro? every state of degradation; whose depravity, and total intentibility of condition, were become proverbial, and whose imaginary bravery only depended upon their having never seen the face of an enemy, should all at once do more than inherit the valour of their ancestors, and without discipline or knowledge of any thing martial, not only encounter regular forces, but subdue those conquerors to whom they had basely fubmitted when they were yet a people, and the remains of a great empire. It would feem that this trial should at least have been referved for a better opportunity; when they could have landed a fufficient body of forces to have kept field independently of the Greeks, whom they were to consider only as feeble auxiliaries, but willing subjects.

Upon the whole, this war has placed the military character of Russia in a very high point of view. And while their armies have gained the greatest honours in the sield, their failors have learned to traverse new leas, and to navigate and fight under the direction of English offi-An admiral of our nation of high note, and of superior knowledge in all the parts of his profesfion, has gone lately into their i rvice; and there is lutle room to doubt under his tuition, and from his acknowledged judgment in the construction of thips, but their ma-

riac

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

۲s

able figure.

In other respects there is no doubt et Ruffia will obtain the most solid advantages, in confequence of her faccesa in this war; among which the enablishment of fuch a barrier, as will fecure her whole European frontier from the future infults of the Tastars, may be confidered as an object of great importance: as helides their depopulating and preventing the cultivation of her finest provinces, the was at the expence of employing 50,000 men in peace and war, in guarding the lines upon that long extent of frontier. It is also little to be doubted in the present circumstances, that the court of Petersbargh will gain the grand and favourite point which has been fo long and foreagerly coveted, of establithing a port, or perhaps more than one, upon the Black Sea; and it is as probable that it will urge, to the atmost extent, the obtaining a liberry to trade upon it in Ruffian pottoms.

The renewing of the fortifications of Azoph, which were defroyed in persuance of the treaty of the year 1739; or even the restoring or the part of Traitzs, or the Trinity, would not answer all the purpeles, nor at prefent gratity the am-bition of the court of Peterlburgh. This city, which is the metropolis of the Cuban Tartary, lies on the Afatic thore of the ancient Tanais, now called the Don, a few miles from its junction with the eastern extremity of the Palus Meotis, which now takes its name from the city. Though the harbour of Azoph was capable of receiving vellels of conaderable fize, yet from fome (boals that croffed the raver near the mouth, table of a certain burthen could not nice will foon make a very respect- fall down to the sea, without taking out their heavy loading and guns. For this reason, the Russians built the port of Troitza, a few miles lower down, but immediately on the fea, where they had a good harbour, capable of building and receiving ships of any burthen. The Streights of Caffa are the only navigable communication between the Black Sea and this of Azoph; and as the Tucks are masters on both fides, by erecting proper fortifications at Jenicola in Crim Tartary, and on the opposite shore of the island of Taman, which form the Streight, they might command the navigation of it. Notwithstanding thefe impediments, Azoph has always been confidered as a place of the greatest importance to Russia, and was accordingly the first object that attracted the ambirion of Peter the Great; who, as foon as he found himfelf fole master by the death of his brother, and that the Turks were engaged in a loting war with the Emperor and Venice, took that opportunity in the year 1696, to be-The bad state of fiege and take it. the Turkish affairs, together with his being included as an ally by the other hoftile powers, obliged them. to cede it to him by the treaty of Carlowitz; and nothing but the imminent danger in which both he and his army were involved many years after upon the banks of the Pruth, could have obliged him to restore it.

Parts that lie immediately on the Black Sea, are the least that it can be expected will now content Ruffis; and those of Oczacow and Kimburn, fituated on either fide of the mouth of the great river Borythenes or Nieper, are ready to drop into their hands. These fortresses, together with Bender, and Bialgorod, both on the Niester, and which are already in their possession, would, besides a sufficient tength of sea-coast, and a great exlent of country, give them the sole command of these great rivers, and shut in the remaining Tartars in such a manner, as would totally prevent their suture incursions.

Another part of the great primary defign formed by the court of Petersburgh, still remains for completion; and is a matter of such importance, as to render its issue much more doubtful than those we have The obtaining already mentioned. of a free right of trade to and from the Mediterranean, directly through the Streights of the Dardanelles, is an innovation of such a nature, and pregnant with such consequences, as cannot fail to be ferioufly alarming to most of the commercial states of Europe. Without pretending to enter into the motives which may operate upon the present ruling system of policy, it is certain that in the war of the year 1739, the ministers of the maritime powers at Constantinople, though their respective courts were directly adverse in all other politics to that of Versailles, in this instance coincided with it, and equally opposed the Russians obtaining any share of the Levant or Mediterranean trade. Nor is it to be thought that any thing but the most extreme necessity, and every other hope of preserving a temporary existence being at an end, can ever bring the Porte to submit to so fatal a conceilion. The Turkish empire no longer exists, when Russia becomes mittress of the Biack Sea.

We take these to be the outlines of the great purposes, which the court of Petersburgh wishes to accomplish, in consequence of its success in this war. To secure for the suture, with little expence, an almost unbounded length of frontier, which has been hitherto badly maintained by lines, and an endless chain of forts; to gain, along with security, a large accession of new territory and new subjects; to acquire a great and extensive commerce; and to become a first-rate maritime power, are objects adequate to such success.

The Grand Signior has borne with amazing firmness, the heavy losses and misfortunes of the war; nor have his licentious soldiers, nor tumultuous subjects, gone to those extremities, which past experience of their conduct would have given room to expect, under such a series of calamities. Neither have these mighty evils, nor the dangers with which he is surrounded, disturbed the equanimity of this prince's mind, or precipitated him in the manner of his ancestors, to acts of injustice, violence and cruelty; on the contrary we see, that with a lenity before unheard of at the Porte, the most unfortunate of his commanders (except in the fingle instance of the capatan-pacha or high admiral) not only escape with their lives, but without any other punishment than their removal to other departments, from those offices, in which they were unfortunate. The same moderation is observable to his Christian subjects; and notwithstanding the rebellion of the Greeks and the unheard of violences and barbarities they committed, we hear of no vengeance that he has taken, either upon the persons or goods of their The vilinosfending brethren. lainies committed by the sailors and deterters, or the mitchiefs occasioned the rage of the populace in cities, are out of the question; our g equally outrages to gotent as to the sufferers, and as severely punished at different

ΟF

HISTORY

Such enormities, in less tryid less heating circumstances, been too often practifed in ies where a more perfect form vernment, and a purer relivere boasied.

atever the confequences of the ay ha, this prince has not his Jegarte .. . rom his proper digavoid them; and if he has confirme in fame support which the public are unaced, his constancy in this inis truly remarkable. We to withitanding the suparaloffer of the prefent year, that m-king every preparation port the war, and to carry enfuing campaign with viand it has been rumoured e intended to command the army in perion.

Turks are, however, no lontaine; and it would require han the abilities of the Czar o make them again great; as uch eafier to civilize the fad inftruct the ignorant, than im the degenerate from rivethabits. "I his vaft, ill foundunweildy empire, feems ined ing to its fail, and nout its fituation could support i longer. its European pofbring it, in a connderable within the fynem of the uropean republic; a happy fance at pretent to the Ut-noble provinces of Greece, atic Purky, and Egypt, toaith the numerous Mediterillands, the Signory of the Black Sea, and its adjoining provinces, from fituation, products, and numberlets other advantages, might become in any other hands, and any other form of government, the center of commerce, riches, and power; and the greatest empire perhaps in the world. Even a division of the fpoil would totally change the face of affairs in Europe; and perhaps caule as great a revolution in riches, power, and commerce, as the difcovery of America did. While the indolence, religious principles, and wretched policy of the Turks, prevent their making a proper use of those bleffings, which fortune has fo truttiefsly bettowed npon them, it is the general interest of the rest of Europe, that they should continue in fuch improvident hands. In any other, fuch powers would have been dangerous, if not fatal.

EUROPE.

It may perhaps be worth remembrance, that within little more than two hundred years, a bold pirate, with only the four and outcasts of the Levant, became fovereign of the fea, destroyed and founded kingdoms, and made half the shores of Europe tremble. The military genius and knowledge of the Turks are now extinct. They are no longer terrible; and belides the fafety . that ariles from their weakness, and hom their ignorance in maritime axairs, the commercial flates carry on an advantageous trade for and with them; and thro' their want of industry, have the additional benefit of freight, for conveying their

Such frems to be the prefent flate of the belligerent powers; and notwithflanding the great fuccesses of Russia, we cannot think that peace, upon such advantage-commodities from one part of the empire to the other.

 $[d]_{+}$

ous terms as the may equitably require, can be an undesirable object to her. The expences of fo complicated a war, carried on by sea and land at such a distance from her dominions, are far beyond what her finances can bear. Recruiting, in Russia, from the valt distance of the provinces, the length of time taken, and the difficulties that occur in traversing fuch boundless and inhospitable desarts as lie between them, and above all from the mortal aversion to the service which possesses the people, is attended with greater loss and difficulty, than in any other country in the world. though the districts are obliged to furnish their quotas of men, they must be strictly and strongly guarded by a superior force, from thence to the place of their destination, fo that the number of troops employed upon this business is almost incredible; and notwithstanding the utmost care that can be taken, they frequently lose half the recruits, before they join their regiments; which can be easily conceived from the numberless opportunities of escape that must prefent, in a journey perhaps of three or four thousand miles, and which frequently lasts for several months: nor does the evil rest here, for as the deserters (from the particular form of the government) can never return to their homes, nor mix again with the community, they are obliged to retire to the woods, where they herd in considerable bodies, and continue for the rest of their lives in the most savage state, subsisting by robbery, and committing innumerable ders.

It is also observable, that the Russians, though bred in a northern climate, and naturally robust and of strong bodies, lose more men by fickness in a campaign than any other armies in the world; this, in a great measure, may be imputed to the constant habit of the extreme hot vapour baths, which they use regularly twice a week when at home, and thereby cause a most violent perspiration; and with which it is impossible they should be supplied in a camp. The severity of their lents, which take up more than half the year, contribute also to this mortality; for though clergy, not only dispense with their keeping them when on service, but by order of the court have taken great pains to recommend the contrary, they are, notwithstanding so superstitiously attached to them, that they will endure any thing, even death, sooner than be guilty of the smallest violation of the rules.

Depopulation is the bane of Russia; and the loss of lives in this war must be prodigious, and for the length of time, greatly exceed that of any former period. How sensible she is of the heavy expences of the war, is evident from the large loans which she has negociated at Amsterdam and other places, and which she had attempted at Venice, till the reverse of fortune in the Morea damped the spirit of the lenders.

As to an intention of pushing her conquests much farther, or even an obstinate determination of retaining the Danubian provinces, it is probably no part of the prefent system of Russia. Such a con-

dnA

OF EUROPE. HISTORY

duit might give too much umbrage to her great and jealous neighbours, who though filent spectators, fland ready armed, watchfully agreentative to all the events of the war. She has the balance now in her hands; the confequences that may attend a perfeverance in the war must be very ancertain; but no peace can be proposed in her prefeat faperiority, that will not add highly to her power, splendour, and advantage. On the other hand, the great loffes which the Porte has fullained, the hopeleffness of being able to recover them in the prefent flate of their armies, the danger to which their islands are subject from the inability of the marine to protect them, and the revolution in Exypt, which requires to be speedily checked, before Ali Bey extends his conqueits, and has time to establish his government; all thefe causes make peace much to be wished for at chase, at any price, almost, which it can be supposed Rustia will think it prudent to fix upon it. Upon the whole, from the prefent appearances on both fides, we should imagine peace not to be at a great diffance. While the rage of war was laying waste the countries from the north-east to the fouth of Europe, its calamities were very near being extended to the west and center, and might possibly in its confequences have nearly involved the The violent act of hostility committed by Spain, in dispossessing England by force of its settlement in Falkland's illands, accompanied with a new and unheard-of infult offered to the British slag, by the frigate for twenty days, and the taking off of her rudder, in time of prefound peace between the two nations, was an injury of fuch a nature, as scarcely left room for a hope that these evils could have been averted.

An accommodation has, however, taken place fince the end of the year, which, for the prefent, has in some degree thinned over the fore, without removing the causes from which it proceeded. The continuation of the general repose, seems, indeed, principally owing to accidental or unforcieen events: of thefe, may principally be confidered the calamities of the people in France, proceeding from civil diffractions, from tempelis, torrents, an earthquake which nearly ruined the island of St. Domingo; and a famine at home from the inclemency of the featons; to all which may be added the almost total loss of public credit, from the extra-Confiantinople, and worth the pur- ordinary measures taken last year, and purfued in this, in regard to their funds : to thefe causes we are probably only to look for the prefervation of the general tranquillity, as it cannot be imagined that Spain would have ventured upon the commission of so daring an act of hostility, against a nation whose power the had to lately and to tatally experienced, if the had not a full afforance at the time that it was resolved on, of being effectually supported by all the other branches of the Bourbon line. Nor was the object of contention in any degree of sufficient worth to authorize the risque of a war, if it had not been blended with other matters: if the ill disposition of that family to Great Britain, and the forcible detention of a King's jealousy arising from the progress of the Russians in the Levant, had not operated with superior force.

The whole attention of the court of Spain has accordingly been taken up during the pretent year in preparations for a war. have formerly observed, that no pains or expence had been spared, for some years past, in putting their West-India possessions in a most respectable state of defence: this has been continued with redoubled diligence, while large bodies of troops have been successively embarked from Europe for that quarter, and a very formidable naval force was preparing at the Havanna.

At home every thing bore the face of war. Levies were made with the greatest industry; all young men above the age of fifteen were enrolled; the troops were marched from the interior provinces to the sea-coasts, where great quantities of heavy artillery and stores were also sent, to put the fortresses there in the best state of defence. The city and port of Cadiz were particularly attended to, and fuch speedy measures taken for its defence, as sufficiently indicated the apprehension of an attack. The navy was already in such a state, as shewed that the present event was by no means unexpected. ilrong fleet was formed at Ferrol, and there were confiderable squadrons stationed both at Carthagena and at Cadiz. Every thing both at sea and land seemed to threaten an immediate attack upon Gibraltar, which was but weakly garrisoned, and could have expected no timely assistance from home for its protection. A similar design seemed to be formed in the West-Indies against the island of Jamaica, which seemed to be in equal circumstances of danger, as there was no naval force in that quarter that could have prevented its taking place. Upon the whole, whatever the circumstances were that prevented a war at the present juncture, they seem to have been highly fortunate to England, as, thro' some unaccountable negligence, we were totally unprepared, both at home and abroad, for an event which all Europe expected to take place; and our navy was far from being in that immediate state of service. which it should always be in a great maritime country like this, whose power and security depend in so great a degree upon its ma-

The same weak and cruel system, which has so long disgraced the government of Portugal, becomes every day more glaring and dreadful in its effects, and seems finally to threaten the total ruin of that country. Real or pretended conspiracies with all the cruel consequences peculiar to that government, are now fo common as to excite neither surprize nor pity. At the same time, private executions, without any form or pretence of trial, the most dreadful and abhorred by mankind, of all the vices of despotism, are said to be the prefent favourite mode of removing the obnoxious, and may be considered as the completion of this system. The prime minister, the principal actor in the tragedy, does not seem to be much more at his ease than the spectators; and has arrived at that ultimate perfection of tyranny, the fear of being seen by his fellowcitizens, without a strong military grand as a protection against their releasement.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [11

We have frequently had occasion to observe with regret, the unfriendly treatment which the Enghis have for tome years met with, in the course of their commerce with this country; and which has been continually increasing, ever fince the despotism of the present minifer has been fully enablished. Great hopes had been formed at different times, upon the appointment of new ministers to that court, that they were endued with fuch powers, and would have purfued tuen measures, as by reinstating matters upon their natural bafis, and recurring to the spirit of the treaties subulting between the two nations, would have finally terminated all disputes, and have guarded effectuall, for the future, against third oppressions and continued causes of complaint, under which the British merchants and factory had fo long laboured. The public, belides being deeply interested. were the more languine in thele expectations, as it feemed to require no great depth of argument, nor any very specious colouring, to convince the court of Portugal how conducive it was to its interest, and how necessary even to its safety, to cultivate the friendship of Great Bricain, and to preferve inviolably those treaties, which had been founded upon the wifest policy, for the mutual benefit of both nations. Befides, no new claim was fet up, no right nor privilege demanded, but what had been established by mutual concurrence, and confirmed by the uninterrupted usage of a long succession of years; and it could be eafily proved, that the advantages ariting from the alliance and friendship sabsisting between the two nations, were to the full as much in favour of Portugal as England.

CHAP. II.

War on the Danube. State of the armies during the winter. Account of the countries that were the jest of the war. Battle at the river Larga, in worth the Kan of the Tarturs is defeated. Grand Vizir croffes the Dan be. Great cattle fought between the Pruth and the Cahul, in which Gineral Remanzow gained a compleat willowy. The Turks purfue to the Danube, and obliged to cross that rever with great loss.

Bey, did not arrive at the camp near the Danube 'till the latter end of the year, though he had uted the utmatt expedition for that purpose, as the diforders committed by the Jinizaries and other foldiers, became every day more al rming. The restoring of any degree of order and subordination, among such licentious and mutinous troops, who had long indulged themselves in the most intoterable excesses, and had already mustacred several of their principal officers, and were more dispoted to sheath their swords in each others breasts, than to sace an enemy, presented such dissiputies, as perhaps neither the courage, nor abilities of the vizir could have surmounted, if he had not taken the prudent precaution, of being attended by fourscore mules, loaded with gold and silver coin. A proper distribution of this money, had however its effect, and enabled him, in some degree, to bring about a reformation that was so much wanted.

12] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

As the provinces of Moldavia and Walachia, were objects of the greatest importance to the Porte, the vizir determined, if possible, to profit during the winter, of the distance of General Romanzow's army, and however contrary to the genius of his troops, to triumph for once over the inclemency of the This project was the more capable of success, as the Turks were not only masters of the Danube, but were still possessed of Ibrailow, and some other fortresses in Walachia. The design worthy of a commander, and if it succeeded to its full extent, the vizir would have had the honour to have retrieved during the winter, the fatal miscarriages of Moldovangi Ali Pacha, and the campaign would again have been opened on the banks of the Niester.

In consequence of this determination, the Russians, who were stationed in the conquered provinces, found that neither the leason, nor the successes of the late campaign, were sufficient to procure them rest or fafety in their quarters. tinued and cruel war was carried on during the long ensuing winter and spring, in which a number of small but bloody engagements were fought, of which we have but few particulars, and those that are given very imperfect, and contradictory in every circumstance of place, time, and event.

Upon the whole, these actions were not productive of any consequence of great moment; at the fame time that they were attended with the loss of a great number of men, and the troops were haraffed and ruined on both sides. Russians were in general successful in the held; which indeed may be concluded, as well from the fucceeding, as the preceding fortune Thus the and conduct of the war. grand vizir's design did not take place in its full extent, which was to drive the Russians beyond the Niester, and make that river, so far as the fortress of Choczim would admit, once more the line between the two armies at the opening of the campaign: it however succeeded in part, and if every thing else had been equal between them, the confequences might have been very considerable; having it in his power to throw fresh troops whenever he pleased over the Danube, he not only removed the enemy totally from the borders of that river; but he by degrees so streightened them in their quarters, and they were fo weakened by fatigue and the continued loss of men, that he recovered the whole province of Walachia, and the lower part of Moldavia, and thereby opened the communication again by land, with Bessarabia and the Tartars.

In the mean time the country presented a scene of the most dreadsul desolation; every thing was destroyed; such of the wretched inhabitants, as had not the fortune to escape to the neighbouring countries, naked and destitute of every thing, became either slaves to the Tartars, or victims to the revenge and sury of the Turks. At length, having compleated the reduction of the province, the vizir appointed Monalechi, a Greek of great courage and ability, to be Hospodar of the grand vizir's army would have it, in the room of Gregorio Giko, who was then at Petersburgh, and was charged with betraying the country to the Russians. The country to the Ruffians. Turkish revenge being also sated, it was too late confidered, that a country without inhabitants could be of little use to the possessor, and the vizir iffued an ineffectual proclamation, to affere the Greeks of protection, and to encourage the fagitives to return to their coun-

HISTORY OF EUROPE. 13

The Ruffian generals were not much more at cafe, though in fervice of less danger, who were employed during the winter upon the long extended froatier of Poland and the Ukraine, than those who were stationed in the Danubian provinces. Here the Tartars renewed their customary ravages, and though these incursions were attended with various fuccess, and that they were fometimes feverely chastised, their route, whether victors or vanquished, is generally fatal to the inhabitants of the countries through which they pais.

The Ruffian troops dispersed in different parts of Poland, were as fully employed by the confederates. who seemed to increase in courage and boldness, if not in numbers, by their continued losses. Thus the army under the command of General Romanzow on the banks of the Niester, was the only part of the Ruffian forces, that could enjoy any rest during the winter, and that was exempt from the fatigues and dangers of the war,

Great preparations were made on both fides for the opening of the compaign; and the Porte feemed to Brain every nerve to retrieve rowski advanced toward. Oczahow, its pail lotter. It was reported that at the head or a confiderable body amounted to two hundred thousand men; and it is probable that if the Tartars are included as a part of it, and the different detachments taken in, it may not fall short of that number. It was however very fickly; malignant fevers of the most dangerous kind, which finally terminated in the plague, having through the whole course of the year made a dreadful havock in it, The war in the Morea contributed to lessen its numbers considerably, and its force much more, as the Albanians and Epirots, who were employed upon that fervice, are among the braveit foldiers in the Turkish empire.

We have feen no authentic lift of the Russian forces that were on actual fervice in this campaign. By the best accounts that have been published of the flate of this empire, it appears that Ruffia cannot by any means support above 130,000 regular forces, for any confiderable length of time out of the country; and that the armies employed in herformer wars, were generally much fhort of that number. As to the irregular troops, of which the can employ tuch amazing numbers, they are only of use in such wilds as are generally the scene of their operations, and against such enemies as the Tartars; if they were to act against regular forces, and in an enclosed country, they would ruin their friends inkead of their enemies. Whatever the numbers were, they were this campaign divided into many parts; the grand army was commanded by General Roman-20%, another en the fide of Bender by Count Panin, General Profoof troops, and General Berg against Crim Tartary with another. As no fervice was expected from the two last, more than to chastise, and keep the Tartars in awe, it is probable that their detachments confisted almost entirely of irregulars, and that the two armies commanded by General Romanzow and Count Panin, contained the greatest part of the regular forces.

The campaign, from the desclate state of the adjoining countries, could not be opened early on either side, and it was not till the end of May that General Romanzow's army had passed the Niester, near Choczim, though there was no enemy in that quarter to impede his progress. The greater part of the Grand Vizir's army, also crossed the Danube in the beginning of June, and it was computed that in that month, there were above 300,000 combatants mortally bent upon each others destruction, enclosed in the provinces of Moldavia, Walachia and Bessarabia.

These three provinces, along with Transylvania, formed much the greatest and most considerable part of the ancient Dacia. They lie between the 43d and 48th degrees of latitude, and are defended on three fides, by the Niester, the Black Sea, and the Danube; the former on the north separates Moldavia and Bessarabia from Poland and Little Tartary, the Black Sca is the boundary on the east, and the Danube shuts in Walachia, from Bulgaria and Servia on the fouth; Transylvania and the Bannat of Temeswar, form the western boundary. These countries, whether we consider the happiness of the climate, the extraordinary fertility in general of the soil, or the excellency of the products, are parhaps equal to any, and are certainly superior to most in Europe. From the furprizing luxuriancy of their pastures, which are scarcely to be paralleled in any part of the world, they produced, besides admirable horses, almost incredible numbers of excellent oxen and sheep, with which, notwithstanding the repeated calamities they have undergone, they have long supported the markets of Constantinople. Their other products in corn, wine, oil, honey and wax, befides a great variety of mines, were, in a state of culture, equal to those we have already men-The people were calculated to enjoy these blessings, being able-bodied, brave, and warlike. Their power was such, that notwithstanding their groaning under a cruel and execrable domestic government, the prince of Walachia, a few centuries ago, was able at a short notice, to bring from that province only, 70,000 men into the field against the Turks.

All these advantages were insufficient to protect them against sinister events. The primary cause of their ruin, was the cruel and arbitrary conduct of their despots: the bad neighbourhood of the Germans and Turks, equally infidious and oppressive in their designs, and ever watchful to take an advantage of their dissensions, precipitated their destruction; the wretched policy, and cruel government of the Porte, have compleated it. Thus have these fine countries been reduced to little better than a desart; and such are the unhappy effects of a cruel and despotic government, to render vain all the bounties of nature, and to make the finest parts of the globe, equally sterile and inhospi-

HISTORY EUROPE.

with its most barren moun-

ieral Romansow, after crofting efter, moved very flowly tothe Pruth: both thefe rivers Poland, and hold a parallel , running from the north-well fouth-eaft; the latter enters wia above Choczim, where it s way through the Carpathian ains, which fill up the narrow y between the rivers, that nt bere above twenty miles r, and form the dangerous de-:alled the fireights of Ticheri, or Precop, celebrated in for the number of remarkattles, that have been fought near them. The Proth runs rhole length of Moldavia, it divides into two parts, the y between the rivers growing eally wider, from its parting contains to near its configrith the Danube, where they ear 200 miles afunder, and e the whole province of Beft between them.

Ruffian army first directed arfe to Jaffy the capital of via, fituated on the Pruth, 100 miles to the fouth-east of im : a great part of the interte country is naturally a deing totally destitute of water, : they were obliged to carry ticle, as well as every other of provision along with them. perations of a war in those s, must feem very strange to s have been only acquainted. sat art in the cultivated parts ope. It appears that in the igns made by Count Munich, the war of the year 1736, which naver exceeded, but was gonerally much under $0,000 men. For the protection of this engrances train of carriages, the ermy med be thrown into feveral large divifions, which are formed into great fquares, in the center of which the provisions and baggage are placed, and in this order they are obliged to march; a method of fecurity that could only be adopted in their boundless and level plains, which create the necessity.

Such impediments eafily account for the flowness of General Romanzow's motions, which were probably guided at the same time by those of Count Panin, who was marching along the Niester with a train of heavy artillery, and all the other apparatus necessary to form the fiege of Bender. Several great detachments from the hoftile armies, were also contending for the poffcffion of the country, which lies between the Moldan, the Prath. and the Sereth; in the course of which feveral engagements had happened, and more than one of the Ruffian Generals were faid to have been roughly treated. These events, though fo obfcurely and imperfectly told as not to admit of a detail, and afterwards totally abforbed in the glare of fuccess then followed, had probably an influence on the conduct of the grand army, as it is not otherwise easy to account, how it should have spent near a month after its departure from Choczim, without an enemy, that we have any account of being in the way, in advancing lefs than 200 miles.

However this was, General Rodeneral found a necessity of massow having left Jassy to the itly employing 90,000 wag- right, advanced along the course of for the supply of an army, the Pruth, till he arrived at that part of the river, which, so far as we can comprehend the account, seems to have been nearly parallel to Bender; from which it was distant about 120 miles. In the mean time a considerable army of Turks and Tartars marched along on the same

16] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

June 25th. them. When the two armies came in fight, the Turks immediately, and with great judgment, changed their position, and took possession of a most advantageous camp, which they as suddenly fortified in the strongest man-

ncr.

This army was commanded by Capian Ghieri, Kan of the Crimea; a mark to him of the greatest hobour, and of uncommon confidence in the Porte; for as these Kans are heirs to the empire, in failure of issue in the Ottoman line, it has been the constant policy of that family, not to entrust them with the supreme command of a Turkish army. This prince had three basha's under his command, and the army was faid to confift of about 80,000 men. The ground on which they encamped, was a steep, rocky, and almost inaccessible eminence, which the Russian account calls a mount in, covered on one file by the Pruth, and on the other by the little river Larga.

This camp was so well chosen, and the ground so difficult, that notwithstanding the repeated efforts of General Romannow to bring on an engagement, it was above three weeks before he could hazard a general attack. The Torks not being inured to that frict discipline, nor tempered by that long service, which enables veteran soldiers to bear with patience, the fight and coatinued infaits of an enemy, twenty thousand of their bravest partizans descended from their strong camp, and attacked the Russians wi h great resolution; but were repulsed, and beaten back to their camp with considerable loss.

At length, some difficulties having been probably removed, or fome favourable circumstances occurred. with which we are not acquainted, the Russians, three days after this engagement, mounted July 18th. the hills at the dawn of the morning, where they found four great and strong entrenchments, covered with a numerous artillery; these they attacked with great resolution, and met with as obstinate a defence. Russans however triumphed over all opposition, and beat them successively out of the four entrenchments, after which the Turks abandoned their camp, and fled in the greatest disorder. The victors became possessed of a great booty upon this occasion, besides thirty-eight pieces of brass cannon, and several other trophies.

No account is given of the loss on either fide, in killed, wounded, or prisoners, in this engagement; it is only faid that of the Russians was moderate, confidering the length and importance of the action. are as much in the dark as to the manner in which the retreat was conducted, and whether there was any purfuit; even the route which the Turks t ok after the battle, is only to be discovered by comparing other circumstances, which had no immediate relation to this action. In a word, the account given of this battle, though attributed to General komanzow, is so inaccurate, that it is only by deduction, from the tormer and subjequent conduct

HISTORY OF EUROPE

fide of the Preth on which it happened could be afcertained, as by one part of it the Turkish camp forms to have been upon the right, niver.

The victory at the river Large was only a prelude to, and contrier; which at the same time that it does the greatest honour to the military abilities of General Romannow, effablifies the infinite supericrity of the Ruffian troops beyond a doubt; and eviaces almost to a demonstration, that in the present file of arms, and discipline among the Turks, there is scarce a possibility of their being able to cope with them.

The Kan of the Tartars having retreated towards the Danube, the Grand Vizir thought proper to cross that river at liatha, at the head of the grand army to support him. General Romanzow in the mean time purfued his murch along the Pruth, towards its confluence with the Danube. The two armies came in fight of each other in the evening, and at eight p'clock the Torks encamped at about 4 miles diffence from the Russians, both armies lying between the Pruth and the river Cabul. The Tartara formed a feparate corps on the left of the Ruffigns, but afterwards spread a great detachment which General Romanzow had made for the efcort of a convoy of provisions. In cerzain fitnations boldness is prodence; je is in thefe that great genius is di-Ringuished from common abilities; the prefent was one of them, and discernment to perceive it. A mary cafe, to have settred in fafety from dad of the campaign, that the cautious commander might have befitated till he had loft his army.

Yot. XIII.

The Ruffian army was greatly weakened by making this detache ment; and the inequality of pumand by another on the left of that bers was fuch, as in common cares would have made it inext afable to have rifted a battle. The General however having duly weighed the beted to accelerate one much great- goodness of his troops, the con-er; which at the same time that it fidence with which they were inspired from a long course of success, and the confequences that might refult from the dangerous defign formed by the Tartars, resolved boldly to attack the enemy aext morning. The Ruffian army was accordingly in motion before light, and began its march at the break of day. An unexpected incident which took place in the night, would have flaggered a mind of less firmness, and damped the courage of any but Veteran troops, As soon as the morning had cleared up, the General perceived to his great aftonish vent, that the Turks, notwithstanding their prodigious numbers, and the daring countenance they bore in the evening, had fortified their camp during the night with no less than three great and frong entrenchments, superior to those which he had lately forced in the Kan's camp, and defended by a host, which as to number and appearance, should have despiled any other protection themselves in their rear, so out off than what their arms and their valour gaye them.

The die was however cast, and the General bravely perferered in his resolution. His figuation was truly critical, for a defeat must have been attended with the total lofs of the army; nor would Count General Romanzow did not want. Papin have found it easy, in that Bender.

Bender, even with the loss of his Aug. 2d. artillery and flores. a word, the whole fate of the war seemed to hang upon this day.

The Turks did not however wait to be attacked in their entrenchments, these were only intended as the last resort, and the Russians found themselves almost surrounded, at a considerable distance from the camp, by feveral large bodies of troops, who attacked them in front and flank with the greatest bravery. A desperate engagement enfued, in which the close order and excellent discipline of the Russians still prevailed, and they continually gained ground on the enemy. As they advanced nearer the entrenchments, which were covered with a prodigious artillery, the battle grew every infant more terrible; at length the Grand Vizir made a fally in person, at the head of the Janizaries and all the bravest troops in the army. The conflict now became dreadful, and was supported with the most determined resolution and obstinacy on both fides. After a continued fire of artillery and imall arms, which lasted for ave hours without intermission, the Russians, by the united force of their bayonets, penetrated to the ark entrenchment, which they carried by a desperate assault,

A pause then ensued, which was only preparatory to a new engagement, between the entrenchments, if possible more furious than the first. In this the Turks used every possible effort to retrieve the fortune of the day; one body still coming on and renewing the engagement with fresh ardor, as anosher was deseated. At length seeing that the bravest corps of their janizaries, and all the other best bodies of their infantry were fuccessively defeated, and unable to withstand the closeness of the Rusfian array, the continued weight of their fire, and the irrefillible force of their bayonets, they loft all hope and courage, and the second and third entrenchments were successively carried. The rout then became general; and the Grand Vizir secing every thing lost, made the best of his way, together with his principal officers and the celebrated Count Potocki, to the Danube, which was about twenty miles from the field of battle.

The whole camp, tents, equipage, a vast quantity of ammunition, 143 pieces of brass cannon, and above 7,000 carriages loaded with provisions, became a prey to the conquerors. The fugitives were pursued to the Danube, where the crowds were so great as to render the passage very difficult and dangerous, and some bodies of horse, it is faid, were obliged to fwim over; others crossed the Pruth, and directed their course to Ibrailow, and other parts of Walachia. It is said that above 7,000 Torks were killed on the field of battle, and that the roads to the Danabe were covered with dead bodies; a great number of prisoners, among whom were many of confiderable rank, were also taken. Some accounts make the lols amount to 40,000 men, and lay that the Grand Vizir's army confilled of 150,000: i eneral Romanzow, in his letter to the Empress, does not give the numbers that engaged, nor the loss on either side; he however takes notice of the great inferiority of his own army. The loss of mon in fach a battle must undoubtedly be very great, and in its confequences much greater.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [19

Nothing could be more decifive than this battle, nor more glorious eo General Romanzow and to the troops that he commanded. Et might be faid in the language of poetry, that the genius of Ruffia particularly predominated upon this occasion, and had chosen the Pruth as the fcene of victory, to wipe off the difgrace which Peter the Great had formerly met with on the banks of that sizer. The General acknowledges in his letter to the Empreis, that the Tusks behaved with great bravery, and fays that the Ruffans were never engaged in any battle that was more obfinately disputed. The great superiority of the Russians may he attributed, to their quickness and dexterity in the management of the artiflery, in which they are particularly excellent, and fearcely rivalled by any other nation, to zhe constant and regular are of their (mall arms, in which the Torks are very deficient, and to their charging with screwed bayonecs, against which the fabre can scarcely be confidered as a weapon. In other respects, there seems to have been no fault in the conduct of the Turkith Generals; and it is evident that there was no want of refolution in their troops.

The Tartars had engaged the convoy without fuccess during the battle, the event of which perhaps had an effect upon their conduct; they were however totally separated from the Turkish army, and being mea, and the Ruffians in possession of the intermediate countries, it was a long time before they could make their way home, after having been reduced to great straits, and suffering very considerable losses. We do not hear of the cavalry having been engaged on either side in this battle; it is probable that the greater part of the Ruffian had been detached to escort the convoy, and perhaps the nature of the ground did not admit of the Turks making use of theirs.

It would from that the Turks have not known in any part of this war how to make a proper use of their cavalry. Their European horfe were long efteemed among the best in the world : they have fill great courage, able bodies, good horfes, are excellent horfemen, and know the use of the fabre from their infancy: an army of foot without discipline is worth nothing; but a body of horse with these qualifications would, if properly conducted, he at all times formidable. The extensive plains, van wastes, and inexhaustible grawth of herbage, in the countries that are the feat of the war, point them out as the proper scene of action for fuch troops, and where they might undoubtedly be employed with very great effect. As to the Turkish infantry, it is evident, that unless they adopt the improvements in arms and difcipline made by the European nations, they never will be able to make any figure against them in the field.

C H A P. III.

Bender besisged by Count Panin. Brave desence made by the garnison and inhabitants. The Governor in a sit of despair poisons himself; another chosen by the garrison in his room. Globe of compression; a kind of mine so called by the Russians. The place taken by storm and hurned; a great slaughter made. Budziac Tartars conclude a treaty with the Russian. General Romanzow sixes his head quarters at Calpouk, near the Danube. Ibrailow besieged. Kilia Nova taken. Bialogrod taken by Baron Inglession. Turks abandon the citadel of Ibrailow, after a long siege. The Turks being entirely driven beyond the Danube, the Russian armies go into winter quarters. War in Georgia.

HILE the arms of Russian were thus victorious on the Pruth, under General Romanzow, Count Panin was not less industrious in profecuting their fuccess on the Niester. He had for some time invested Bender, and was expediting all the necessary preparations for belieging it in form. Bender was fituated upon the Niester, about 180 miles to the south-east of Chotzim, and 100 north-west of Bialogrod or Ackirman, which lies at the mouth of the river; and was from fize, strength, situation, and the number of its inhabitants, a place of the greatest consideration in these countries.

We have already seen that General Prosorowski had been detached early in the campaign, to scour the country between the Niester and the Nieper or Boristhenes, thereby to keep the Budziac Tartars in awe, and prevent their impeding the operations of Count Panin. This service he performed with great effect, having laid waste and ruined the country, taken a great booty in cattle, delivered several thousands of the por Walachians who had been carried into slavery, and proceeded successfully with his incursions to the very gates of Oczakow, which lies at the mouth of the Nieper, about 130 miles to the south-east of Bender.

This success greatly facilitated the operations of Count Panin, who divided his army into two parts, to besiege the fortress effectually; a measure which could not have been attempted with safety, if the enemy had any army in the field, to take advantage of the separation made by so large a river. Every thing being at length prepared, the trenches were July 30th.

opened on both fides of the river at the same time, and the garrison next day set are to the suburbs, after which a furious cannonade and bombardment was begun from all quarters, and vigorously returned by the town. The fortress was very strong, and the garrison very numerous; who, besides the Governor, were headed by several Bashas and officers of rank, so that the place was defended with the greatest bravery.

In fixteen days from the opening of the trenches, the garrison made seven desperate sallies, in which though they lost a great number of men, they gave sufficient proofs of their their resolution; and though the town was twice on fire in that time, they were neither discouraged nor disconcerted by it. The Seraskier, Mahomet Wafa Walissi, who was Governor of the place, was so overcome with grief and despair, upon receiving an account of the loss of the two late battles, that he put an end to his life, by taking a dose of poison. Another Basha was killed by the falling of a bomb; the garrison however were not discouraged, and appointed Demin, a Batha of three tails, and a brave man, who had more fortitude in opposing ill fortune than his predecessor, to be their Governur.

In this manner was the fiege carried on for near two months, with the greatest labour, industry, and resolution on the one fide, and an obdinate courage not short of desperation on the other: as the garrison and inhabitants were in that unhappy fituation, which from the beginning scarcely admitted of a hope of relief or deliverance. Continual fallies were made, with little advantage, but great lois on both fides. The Burghers and inhabitants, who were very namerous, had from the beginning gone through all the hardships and dangers of the fiege, which they bore with the same constancy and intrepidity that the foldiers did; they fought like men wedded to the old dwellings and habitations, in which their ancestors had lived for a long succession of years, in which they first drew breath themfelves, and who were determined so perish along with them.

In the mean time the Russians were pushing on their mines with indefatigable industry; particularly one of an extraordinary con-Aruction, in which they placed great confidence, and which from the pedantry of a modern French Engineer, who was either the inventor or improver of it, received the ridiculous appellation of globe of compression, terms that convey no ideas, either of its construction or powers. In this mine, or rather complicated labyrinth of mines, interwoven and inclosed one within the other, it was pretended that a given quantity of gunpowder, would cause a greater explosion, and throw up a greater quantity of earth, than in any other method. This excited all the eagerness and expectation that naturally attend the result of an untried system; it however generally appears, that the greatest operations are produced by very fimple means.

Count Panin had made several overtures during the siege to induce the garrison to treat of a capitulation, to which they obstinately refused to listen. At length the globe of compression being brought to its due state for service, and charged with the amazing quantity of 400 poeds of gunpowder, each pood amounting to about forty pounds weight, every thing being besides prepared for a storm, and the army strengthened by the arrival of a reinforcement from General Romanzow, Count Panin once more summoned the Governor to furrender, which was again peremptorily refused.

Every thing was then prepared to make the affault that night; Sep. 27. the troops destined to that fervice were divided into three columns, and marched to their respective stations, with the greatest blence. The siring of the globe of compression [B] 3 was to be the fignal for the attack, which they hoped, besides ruining the outworks, might shake down, or make a breach in some of the principal walls of the town, and at the same time bury the defenders, either under the ruins, or the mountains of earth which it was expected would have been thrown The Russians themielves were apprehensive of the consequences of this dreadful mine, as it was not ealy to define how far the affects of such an enormous mass of guapowder might extend; and the troops who were to make the attack in that quarter, were accordingly stationed at a considerable diffance, with orders to advance with the utmost expedition as food as the mine had fprung. To be prepared for all events, the troops were provided with petards for burfting the gaies, as well as with ladders for scaling the walls; and while one part were thus employed, another was to throw up entrenchments with the greatest speed on the glacia, for as to secure a lodgment there if every thing else should fail. False attacks were to be made at the same time to divert and distract the attention of the garrison, and the whole army was ranged upon th wings of the first p rallel; eady to support the assault, none being lest in the camp but the sick and wounded.

The globe was blown up at ten o'clock at night, with a most horrible concussion, which shook the whole circumjacent country, and during the astonishment and confusion excited by this dreadful phenomenor, the three attacks were instantly begun, and carried on with the greatest vigour. It being soon perceived in the army, by the direction of the fire and the cries of the soldiers, where the assault was taking place with greatest effect, several of the most distinguished officers, and a number of others who wanted to signalize themselves, defired leave of the General to grant them an equal share of the honour and danger, with those that were already engaged, which he readily granted, and gave them sour companies of chosen Grenadiers to attend them upon that service.

This select detachment having eagerly joined the foremost troops, the example they gave, and the emulation they excited, foon became irrefistible. Nothing was able to withfiand their impetnofity. The double ditches at the foot of the glacis, were inflantly passed and filled up; the double palisadoes before the covered way, were as foon furmounted or destroyed; a great ditch with a convette, two fathom deep and fix wide, was no longer an obfacle, and an outward wall was not able to flop their career.

The ardour of the troops kept pace with the rapidity of their fuccess, and the body of the fortress was the next object of their impetuolity. The gates were tried in vain, for they were so closely and firmly plated with iron, that the petards had no effect. Scaling ladders were every where applied, and if they had not a sufficient number of their own, those they took from the enemy would have sufficed, who difinated every inch of the ground with the most obstinate bravery, and had used the ladders to get over the works, but seldom survived to carry them off.

The Russans at length got every where over the walls; and now a new and dreadful fight began in the dark, on and amongst the fortifications, in the streets, lanes, and passages, and from the houses. The conflict became so doubtful, so extensive, and so dangerous, that the Russians were under a necessity of setting fire to the town, which they did in several parts at the fame time: the flames raged every where, but not with greater fury than the combatants; and the burning houses increased the horrors of the night, by shewing its calamities. Every street and lane the Russians gained, was by dint of fire and bayonet; and at the next turning, the detendants rallied, and renewed the fight with all their former obstiancy and desperation.

This dreadful scene of rage, cruelty, b'oodshed, and horror, continued the whole night; prefenting to view every scene of calamity and distress that human nature is capable of undergoing, and every spectacle that is shocking and terrible to it. The gardens, the fortifications, the fireets, and one houses, recked with blood, and were covered with dead bodies, while the flames still pointed out fresh objects of revenge to the lus vivors.

At length, after ten hours continued fight, the flames and the affailants feemed to have vanquished every opposition, and at eight in the morning the foldiers began to shout and cry out victory. The Seraskier, who commanded town, with most of those that survived, had by this time retired to toe cafile, where they found the flames had already reached. A felect body of 1,500 cavalry, and 500 infantry, sensible that the castle could afford but a very temporary protection, took the nobler resolution of cutting their way through the enemy, or of perishing in the attempt. They accordingly made a desperate sally from the town, on the fide near the tiver, and cut their way through the Russian troops for some time with great fury, and seemed to have a fair prospect of effecting their purpose. Fortune, so generally the friend to courage, was, however, at this time wayward, and deferted it in its extremest need. A Russian Colonel of the Corps de Reserve, with a confiderable body of cavalry, happened by chance to come full in their way, in the course they had intended to take, which was to gain the road towards Ackirman, and make their escape that way. This casual rencounter having checked their impetuofity, the neighbouring troops had time to recover from their first surprize, and gathering round, attacked them furioully on all fides. All hopes of safety and escape being now at an end, they determined upon a cruel tevenge, and by a sudden motion, made their way to that quarter of the Russian camp, where the fick and wounded were lodged upon several eminences, for their security and better

Count Panin perceived the danger, and immediately dispatched several generals, with all the troops that could be gathered in the hurry from the fortress and suburbs, to prevent it, while he himself followed, and the whole accommodation.

[B]4

army was every where in motion. The Turks were foor furrounded, and attacked on every five by troops of every denomination; cavalry, infantry coffacks, and hunters, fell on promiteuously as they came up; and made a noble defeace; and the General was obliged to order the Artillery to be brought up from the h ndmost parailel to play upon them; they, however, still fought it out with the greatest intrepidity, and were almost totally cut to pieces.

On the General's return from this engagement, he met a deputation from the Schalkier, who demanded a capitulation; this being refused, and the calle at that time all in flames, he was obliged to surrender himself and his garrison prisoners of war; the fire being so urgent, that the Russians were obliged to remove them immediately to the camp for their prefervation.

The total number of prisoners, including the inhabitants of all ages, amounted to 11,749, of whom 5,554 were Janizaries and Spahis, with their commanders, bendes the Seraskier and two Bashas. The number of souls in the town at the beginning of the slege, were computed at 30,000; of whom one half were foldiers. the Russian accounts, which are the only ones we have, fay, that the defenders of the town, were, at the beginning of the last assault, near one-third superior in number to the whole army that belieges it. Such representations, calculated to particu at purpoics, are more or less ado tech by all nations, and should be received with many retirictions. In he present include, this account of the numbers, a wel: as of the small loss said to be suitained by the victors, tally very badly with the acknowledgments that are made of the despera: valour and resolution snewn by the Turks; as well as with the natural and inevitable consequences that must attend one of the most cruel and desperate engagements that we have almost any account of in modern history; supported for so long a time, and involved, along with the darkness of the night, in all the intricacy, confusion, and danger, which such a variety of ground, and so many different situations, among walls, ditches, narrow streets, and burning or falling houses, were capable of producing; where judgment and discipline were nearly out of the question, and every thing seemed committed to chance, fury, rage, and despair.

The fire continued for three days. and could not be restrained till it had confumed every thing. Thus fell, and totally perished, the celebrated town of Bender; famous, among other things, for the hofpitable reception and protection which it afforded to Charles the XIIth of Sweden, as well as for his long residence in it after the fatal battle of Pultows. As it was from its itrength and fituation the grand Magazine of the Turks for their northern provinces, the Russand found a vast quantity of arms. bombs, granades, gunpowder, and other military stores, besides above two hundred pieces of brass cannon, and eighty-five brais mortars; they also took four holle tails, sourteen butons of command, and forty pair ut colburs,

The country of the Budziack Tartars had suffered all it calamities of the war from its first breaking out; which affected them the nore fentibly, as they led domestic hon, were rich in flocks and hards, and cultivated the country in a confiderable degree. Their dispofant villages, rather than in towns, they were entirely at the mercy of any enemy that became mailer in the feld; or if they escaped barely with their lives, their property was to:ally lift. lais year had been particularly fatal to them: Geseral Protorowski had cruelly tayaged the country between the Nister and the Bog: the upper part of Beffarabia suffered in the time manner from the army under Court Pagin; and the lower part of the province, near the Black-82, was experien ing the same tratment, from the troops under Bron Inglestrom, who was fent by General Romanzow after the late victory, to lay fiege to Bialogrod, or Ackirman, at the mouth of the Niefter.

声のほ

In this fituation, totally abandoned, and not a hope left of any timely relief from the Porte, several of their Mirans or chiefs, to prevent the total ruin of their country, entered into a negociation, during the siege of Bender, with the Russians, and at length concluded a treaty, by which they renounced all coancetion and alliance with the Turks, and submitted themselves to be nuder the protection of Russia, on condiction of enjoying their religion, and all their ancient rights, liberties, and immunities.

General Romanzow, after the great victory of the 2d of August. fixed his head quarters at Calpouk, which lies between the confidence of the Proth and the Danube, and the Black fea; from whence he fent large detachments over the former, to dislodge the Turks from their posts in Walachia; this was easily effected, except at Ibrailow, which made as obstinate defence, and to which General Glebow laid siege in form.

Kilia Nova, a ftrong town, ficuated on the most northern branch of the Danube, not far from its entrance into the Black-fea, was belieged by another detachment of this army, and furrendered in the beginning of September, after eight days open treaches, on condition that the garrifon, confilling of 4,000 men, and commanded by a Batha of three tails, thould be transported to the other fide of the Danube; that fuch of the inhabitants as those to go, should have the same benefit, and in any case that their private property thould be fecure.

Bialogrod, held to be the capital of Beffarabia, though Bender was a place of much greater note and importance, furrendered in the fame manner, in the begining of Offiober, to Baron Inglestrom, after a sege of only ten days; the inhabitants, consisting of about 6000 people, and the garrison of 2000, were with all their moveables transported to the other side of the Danube.

The citad I of Ibrailow made a long and brave defence, the garrifon being continually reintorced by the Grand Vizir, with fresh trops from the other side of the Danube; and it was not till the latter end of November, that all their defences being nearly destroyed, and the fortress reduced almost to a heap of rubbish, the garrison took the resolution of abandoning it by night, and making their escape over the Danube. Several other posts upon that river have been since taken by the Russians, and they are now masters of all the northern banks of it, and some of their hunters made a successful incursion even to the other side.

their

The Grand Vizir continued at Hatska till the middle of November, at which time he recired farther into the country of Bulgaria. General Romanzow took up his head quarters, for the winter, in Jaffy; his army being partly cantoned in that neighbourhood, and partly flationed on the borders of the Danube, and in the newly taken fortresses. General Count Panin, after putting things into the best condition at Bender (that the ruined state of the place would admit of) and having left a confiderable body of troops for its fecurity, retired with the rest of his army into the Ukraine; whither General Berg also returned, after committing some devastations on the borders of Cim Tartary.

We are much in the dark as to the operations of Count Tottleben, on the side of Georgia: while the Russan accounts crown him with great succes-the Turkish tell us quite the contrary; nor have any consequences appeared that at all confirm the former. It feems pretty bertain, that being joined by a confiderable number of Georgians, he descended into Armenia, and laid fiege to Erzerum, the capital of that country; here the Turks say he was totally defeated by the neighbouring Bashas, and drove back to the mountains, with the loss of ieveral thousands of his men. This account must in part be true, as ne undoubtedly quitted Armenia, and no other cause has been assigned for it: at the same time it is said, that instead of wasting time at the siege of Erzerum, if he had marched directly to Trebisonde, which is situated on the Black-sea, was in no posture of defence, and not above 140 miles distance, he could not have tailed of success, and as the Russians have now a number of small vessels on that sea, might have been supported with effect.

been supported with effect. However this might be, we find this General has fince been engaged in a kind of civil and petty war in Georgia, where the Princes and Chiestains seem divided among themselves, and either the Russians, or those with whom they have acted, have changed fides, at least once. The celebrated Prince Heraclius, who it was supposed first encouraged this expedition, has fince been called a deceiver, and spoken of as an enemy; and a Prince Solemon, who at first opposed them, has lately been severely chassised by the Turks for acting in concert with them. In the mean time, the Rufsian accounts give a pompous list of conquered places, as if taken from the Turks, though they are most of them places of no confequence and unknown, or else that belonged to the Georgians. It is probable that the principal end of this expedition, was to gain a thorough knowledge of the country, to foment distenfions among the princes and great men, and by degrees, under the colour of friendship and religion, to prepare that flavery for the bravell nation in Asia, which the avowed enmity of the Turks and Pertians was never able fully to accomplish.

C H A P. IV.

Information of the Mediterranean. Count Orlow arrives in the Morea. Information of the Greeks; cruelties commuteed by them. Missing, Arcadia, and other places taken. Messalongs taken. Coron besieged. Navarino taken. Patras tuken, and the cossile besieged. Several other places in e-testually besieged. Greeks massacred at Patras, and the city burnts statements deseated. Turks army arrives in the Morea. Execution of severa of the principal Greeks. Modon besieged by sea and land; actions between the besiegert, and a body of Turks and Albanians; the stepe finally raised. Russians and Greeks totally separate; the latter retire to Nevarino, and soon after abandon the Peninsula. Admiral Elphinstone's squadron arrives from England. Engagements at sea. Turks fleet destroyed in the barbour of Cosme. Captain Pacha behaded, Lewant Track russed, Smyrna in danger. Castle of Lemnos besinged; relieved by Hussan Bey. Enermities committed by the runeway sailors and deseates. Plague at Constantinople. Revolution in Egypt. Alp Bey.

HE misfortunes of the Turks were not confined to the Niester or the Danube: the most foutherly, as well as the most northera parts of their European dominions, were now doomed to bear all the rigors of war, and the fea as well as the land to be a witness of their difgrace. The time seemed length arrived, when the wretched administration and condoct of their government, which they had for fo long a time totally neglected, and fuffered their military departments by sea and land to languith and ron to ruin, should now be exemplarily punished on both these elements: an error, into which ail the great empires of the world have, at a certain period of their existence, successively tallen; which has as constantly and farally brought its own punishment along with it, and which has, notwith-Randing, been continually adopted

rived at the fame zenith of power, riches, and feeming fecurity.

The Ruftian fleet, which had left England in the latter part of the preceding year, notwithflanding the great and friendly affiliance it had met with in this country, arrived at Port Mahon, where it wintered - fattered and fickly. The same kind offices being, however, repeated there, and the fame powerful and masterly affiftance. which characterises the Roglish nation in every thing relative to maritime affairs, beiog again freely given, the thips were put into as good condition, as the flate they were in could admit of; and the men, from the benefits of a fine climate, and plenty of fresh fruits and provisions, recovered their health very fall.

brought its own punishment along In the mean time, application with it, and which has, notwith had been made to the different Randing, been continually adopted Italian States, to know the degrees by their successors, when they are of friendship and succour that might be expected from them, upon fuch occasions as should induce or oblige the Russian ships to put into their ports. These states in general, shewed a considerable degree of reserve upon this occasion, and precifely restricted the number of thips that should be admitted into one port at a time, and the length of their continuance in it; and in the dominions of Naples, the quantity of provisions with which each ship was allowed to be furnished, was particularly specified: at the same time, the garrisons in the seaports were firengthened, the batteries mounted with cannon, and every other measure taken, which, if not sufficient to prevent surprize or danger, were fully so, to express an affected apprehension, and a jealous caution and dislike. have formerly seen, that the Venetians absolutely resused admittance to the Russians in any of their ports or islands; this resolution they have firmly adhered to, and severely punished by confiscation of lands and goods, and every other method in their power, such of their subjects in Cephalonia and other islands, as either fitted out ships, or went simply as volunteers to affift them. At the same time, they fitted out a confiderable fleet to guard the Adriatic, and to protect their illands and coasts. Grand Master of Malta was invited by the Russians to take an active share in the war, and a requisition made, that they might be admitted to make use of the port of Malta, as a place of general rendezvous for their fleets, and for the equipment and fitting out of their ships. These proposals, the Grand Master did not think fit to comply with; he totally refused taking any share in the war, and limited to three, the number of their ships that should at any one time be admitted in the harbour of Malta.

Some Ruffian officers of rank, had been employed in the course of the preceding year, to carry on a negociation with the Greeks, which was easily effected, not only from the intercourse and mixt boundaries of the Venetian and Ottoman territories on that fide; but partly through the remissincis, and partly the milduels of the Turkith government. The garrisons were thin and negligent; the ports and duties slackly attended to; the Greeks were in possession of the trade and the shipping; were almost the only inhabitants in the open country, and had a great majority upon the coalls, and even in the cities and towns. If to all this, we add the want of a necessary communication by post, and the taciturnity, reserve, supineness, and indolence of the Turks, we must conceive their opportunities of information very impersect, and that it must principally come through or from the christians.

We accordingly find, that the Rustian officers, not only carried on a negociation in the country, in time of open war, with the greatest safety, but sent ships to the coasts, freighted with arms and ammunition, which were landed and distributed with equal facility, long before the arrival of their fleet in the Mediterranean. The hopes excited by these means, were raised to the highest pitch of extravagance and enthuliaim, as foon as it was certainly known that the fleet had arrived at Minorca; and phrenzy of the Greeks upon this occasion, can only perhaps be equalled

HISTORY EUROPE.

d, by that beretofore thewn Jews, upon the appearance pretended Melian ambag

Ruffina fleet departed from a in the beginning of Fe-, and shaped its course for oren; but having met with zerms by the way, was fepaand much the greater numthe thips obliged to take in different parts of Italy, and Sardinia, in which fef them were obliged to conconfiderable time, to refit, pair the damages they had al. Count Orlow, who was ader in chief of the whole sut, however arrived at Cape in, the ancient promontory tarns, in the Morea, and the a extremity of the Peniathe laft of February, with wee thips of the line, and er.

country, the antient Peloso, the feat once of poets, and philosophers, being all I ground, is too well known ice any description; nor has ionity of modern travellers, l even its misfortanes, or wretchedness, to lie in ob-

The Count having defach land forces as he had m, at Maina, which lies a the wellward of Cape Meand about go miles to the reft of Minura, the antient g the Mainotea, the defcenof the Lucedemonians, and ill pellefied the country of scellors, under subjection to trks, immediately flew to rms in every quarter, and them by thousands. The ireeks immediately followed ample, or rather only waited to hear of the arrival of the Radane, to do what they had long intended; and the whole Morea formed every where in motion.

The open country was quickly over-run, and Mitten, Arcadia, and feveral other places as speedily taken: the Ruffian fitips that had been separated, or that pot into Italy, arrived faces fively, and landed their men in different quarters, where every fmall detachment foon swelled to a little army, and the Turks were every whose attacked or intercepted. In the mean time a dreadful maffacre was carried on, and the Greeks gave a loofe to the mon bale and effeminate revenge; the Turks were every where flaughtered without mercy; every act of finameful and horrid crucky committed; while, to the difgrace of humanity and the christian religion, neither age, fex, acquaintance or connection, were a defence against their favage barbarity. The governor of Meffalougi, finding himself unable to defend the fortress any longer, and expecting no mercy from the affailants, put his person into the hands of the Greek Syndia of the town, who, from acquaintance and connection, he expected fould either have protected or concealed him; but the villainous Syndic, as foon as he was in his power mordered him. It is faid, that the commander of the Greeks hanged the Syndic; and it may be wished to be a truth.

The rage and fury with which the inhabitants of the continent were feifed, extended itself to the iflands; the defire of novely, hope of plunder, and animofity to the Torks, operated every where, and produced every where fimilar effeffe; repeated afts of the mod barbarous cruelty, and of the blindest Three Turkish ships that were collecting recruits for the army, having put in at the small island of Micone, one of the Cyclades, the greatest part of their crews being on thore, were all murdered by the inhabitants; and those that remained on board, as well as the ships, only faved by a timely flight: an order was said to be isfued to maffacre all the inhabitants, but we have not heard of its being put in execution. The Venetian illands, notwithstanding the strictness of the government, and the severity of the proclamations that were issued to prevent it, were in a great measure deserted by their inhabitants, each hurrying to have a share in the spoil and the carnage. At Cephalonia, Count Metaxa, and several others, fitted out thips at their own expense, and joined the Russian sleet; and the inhabitants, who shewed themselves as well disposed for a revolt as those in the Turkish territories, had an open engagement with the troops stationed in the illand; in which, though they were routed and disperfed, a confiderable number were Llain on both fides.

Count Orlow, upon his arrival at Maina, had published a manifesto in the name of the Empress, in which she declared, that she looked upon it as a religious duty, to free the Grecks from the Turkish flavery; the at the fame time promised protection and rewards to those who should join her army, and the severest punishments to those who refused. It is a singularity, perhaps not unworthy of remark, and shews how strong national habits will inadvertently appear, even where there feems no cause to call them forth, that as fear is the operating principle throughout whole Russian empire, from highest noble to the lowest peasant, their public acts are tinged by it, though the matters they relate to are foreign, and out of their own dominions; and as fure as a favour or reward is offered in a Russian proclamation, it is clogged on the other hand by an opposite threat of extreme punilement.

From Maina, the Russian commander proceeded with the fleet to Coron, which was invested by sea and land. This city and cafile stands on the western side of the Peninfula, about forty miles to the north-west of Maina, on a fine bay of the same name, and were formerly places of great frength; but like most of the other fortresses in the Turkish dominions, have been long neglected, and suffered to go to ruin. The Batha of the Morea had, during these transactions, collected such troops as he could haftily get together, which being few in number, were overpowered and defeated in several small engagements by the Russians and Greeks, and he was at length obliged to retire with such as remained to Napoli de Romania, a great and strong city and port, on the castern side of the Peninsula. In the mean time the Russians made themselves masters of Nayarino, a considerable city, with an excellent harbour and two castles, about 28 miles to the west of Coron; which, from the goodness of the harbour, situation, and other advantageous circumstances, they made the general place of arms.

Patras was taken in the latter end of March, a very flourishing city, in which the Turkish inhabitants were more numerous than in most others of the Morea; it was the metropolis of the province of Clarentia, and fituated on the northwest extremity of the Peninsula, on the arm of the sea which separates it from Livadia, now called the gulph of Lepanto, about 20 miles south of Lepanto, which lies on the opposite shore, so we'll of Corinth, and 120 north-west of Mistra. This city, from the circumstances that attended it, seems to have been taken by surprize, and a most cruel and inhuman flaughter was made of the Turks, without regard to age or fex; the garrison, and such others as could escape, retired into the castle, which was immediately belieged.

As the Turks were unable to appear in the field, such of them as furvived the first effects of the revolt, made the best of their way to the nearest fortresses; and the infurgents were now fo numerous, that they laid siege to Corinth, Napoli de Romania, Modon and Trippolizza; befides Coron and the castle of Patras, which we have already mentioned. This was a fervice, however, to which the Greeks were very unequal, and the small number of the Russian land forces, which probably did not much exneed two thousand, did not allow of their supplying the deficiency. The Turks, besides, made every where a brave defence; at Trippolizza, the beliegers were totally ruined, and every Russian upon that service, except two, killed, by the continual and successful sallies made by the garrison. It did not happen better at Coron, where the Greek inhabitants being more numerous than the garrison, and the latter worn down with the continual danger and fatigue of guarding against a double enemy, within the walls and without, abandoned the city, (which was immediately taken possession of by the besiegers) and retired within the castle. The garrison afterwards sound means to let fire to the oil magazines in the city, with such success, that they reduced it totally to ashes, and making a fally during the confusion caused by the fire, made such a flaughter, both among the befiegers and inhabitants, that the furvivors were glad to make the best of their way to Navarino. Their success was little better in other places; and though it was faid that they defeated a body of Turks who attempted to pass the Ishmus of Corinth, we find immediately after, that they had retired from that quarter.

[31

The fiege of the castle of Patras still continued; in the mean time a body of Turks and Albanians having passed the isthmus marched to its relief, and attacked the besiegers at April 13th, break of day. The governor of the castle at the same time made a general sally with his garrison, the city was set on fire in the consict, and a dreadful carnage ensued; the Turks now retaliated all the cruelties of the Greeks, with the same barbarous spirit which had before inspired them; every thing became a victim to their ungovernable sury, and the city was barned to its foundations.

The foreign consuls had fortunately escaped to Zante; the son of the English consul, from some error, or imprudence, run a great risk of his life, and was most remarkably delivered. This young gentleman had shut himself up in his hotel, with his own family, two Neapolitan travellers, and several ladies of the best !amilies, and greatest distinction in the city, whom he had taken under his protection; his whole fuite amounting to about seventy persons. A body of Albanians came with axes to force his gates in the heighth of the confasion; but he representing to them, that his nation was in alliance with the Porte, the Albanians with a temper and humanity, which in the same circumstances and heat of blood, would have done bonour to more civilized, and better disciplined soldiers, took him and all that were along with him under their protection, and conveyed their safely to the castie.

his

Here however their fear, as well as their danger, was redoubled, Upon their entrance into the fortrefs, the first thing that presented, was the dreadful spectacle of a number of dead bodies lying round in heaps, and the executioners buily employed, according to the Turkith fummary method, in cutting off the heads of the principal Greeks, as they were taken and fent in from the action. As these ministers, whether of justice or tyranny, are little used to litten either to arguments supplications, the untortunate young gentleman and his compapions, were only delayed till it came to their turn, to undergo the same operation. Most happily for him and them, the governor arrived in the interim; immediately recollected the conful's fon, took them all under his protection, and sent them to his own apartments for their greater convenience and fafethey had the good fortune the fine night, to meet with an opportunity of being all safely ce to Zante.

Every thing went wrong a Greeks after the destruction tras. The Turks and All had scarcely compleated the vice, when they received gence, that a large body of notes were advancing toward lithmus of Corintin, with an tion of penetrating into This, they immediately me to prevent, and totally round Mainotes, after killing abothousand of them.

The Morea kill contin scene of the greatest bloodsh The carnage at cruelty. gave a new whet, which w at all wanted, to the barbare sanguinary revenge of the G which, together with the ci they were originally guil seemed to give a sanction Turks for taking that veng to which they were natura much disposed. It is, in mi stances, painful to treat or 1 of the transactions of the war, as it has through all it been fullied and uitgraced acts of terocity, oppression cruelty, which are happily t tle known, in the weltern an dle parts of Europe. The en of these polithed nations, ar pered by a generofity and h ty, which alleviate and in a mealure conceal the deform horrors of war; and a lift killed and wounded after a when attended with no c stances to excite horror or a causes little more emotion, th fight of an adjutant's roll before it.

The Seraskier, Basha of

arrived in the Morea at the head of 35,050 men, moftly Albanians and Epirotes, foon after the defeat of the Mainotes. This officer, who kad much diftinguished himself in the course of the present war, recovered all the northern part of the Penintula, as fron as he appeared in it; and all the Greeks, that were found with arms, or out of their villages, were inflantly put to death : at the fame time the archbishop of Trippolizza, and some other Greeks of diltination, who were charged with being the printical infligators of the revolt, were executed.

The principal force of the Rufhas and Greeks, was now employed in the fiege of Modon, which was vigoroufly carried on by feaand land. As this city, which lies thus 120 miles to the fouth-well e Ceriath, is well fortified, has a ter flroag caille and a fine baven, Ewas an object of great importance to the Russians, as under the prowhich of their fleet, they might have supported a garrison there, and by that means preferred a forting in the Peninsula, until by the arrival of reinforcements, they might once more be enabled to difpute the possession of it. Its retaxenels afforded a prospect of sucseeding before it could be relieved; #3d it was the only hope now lest, and was accordingly the last effort they made.

A body of Turks and Albanians Lowever traversed the Peninsula, and attacked the heMay 17th, siegers with great sury
in their camp, at one o'c'c.k in the morning; a d were well supported by the governor, who made a vigorous fally at the tame time. It now appeared evidently, that the spirit of the ancient Vol. Xill-

Spartans had totally forfaken their posterity. The Mainotes, funk and dispirited by the late actions, which thught them the difference fever-ly, between massacring a defenceless people, and engaging an enemy openly in the field, avandance their posts almost as foon as they were attacked, and were cut to pieces, almost without refisionce. The Ruffians however made a noble fland, and fought most couragiously; they did all that men could do, to protect their dastardly friends, who if they had afted with only a common degree of refolation, would undoubtedly have gamed a compleat victory. They were at length however overpowered by numbers, and having loft a great many men, and their commanders, the young Count Orlow, and Frince Dulgoroucki, being both wounded, they were obliged to abandon their camp, together with a Lattery of twenty pieces of cannon, and retire to the shore under the protection of their thips.

The Albanians now having no enemy to contend with, in the true spirit of irregular troops, fell to plander the camp with fuch greedinels, that they were toon in great ditorder; a tault not to be committed with impinity, in the face of their veteran enemics, who immediately took the advantage, and being joined by a detachment frem the thips, attacked them in turn with great fury, and routed them. in fuch a manner, that they again recovered their camp and their bat-This fucceis brought togetery ther the feattered Miniotes, and the flege was again renewed. The Ruffians now taw, that their only hope of fuccets depended upon expedition, and upon taking the place before the arrival of freth fuccours; [C] ti.ey they had a recent experience that the Greeks were of no u e against an equal enemy; but a confidence in their numbers might make them useful in an attack upon an inferior. The ships accordingly diew nearer the fortreis to become the attack, and a general assault was made; but the garriton behaved with such resolution, that they were repulsed with great loss. The Mainotes had now loft all hope as well as spirit, and separating themselves totally from the Russians, withdrew to the fastnesses of their native mountains. The latter retired to Navarino, which they kept for some time longer in their hands; but nothing remarkable happened after

this, till they entirely abandoned

the Peninsula.

During these transactions in the Morea, the Russian fleet was reinforced, about the middle of April, by the arrival from England of the squadron under admiral Elphinston. In the month of May, the Turkish fleet also arrived in those seas, and some engagements of no great consequence happened soon after between them. The Turks however, seem to have had the world, as they retired to the Archipelago; and the Russians having taken on board the remains of their land forces in the Morea, purfued them. The two Arcts came in fight in the channel cf Scio, which divides that island from Natolia, or the lesser Asia; where the July 5th. Turks were at anchor in a very advantageous fituation, their rear and flanks being covered by some islands and rocks, that lay contiguous to the continent. The Turkith fleet was confiderably fuperior in force, confishing of 15 ships of the line, from 60 to 90 guns, belides a number of Chebecs and Gallies, amounting in the whole to near 30 fail; the Russians had only ten ships of the line, and five frigates. Some of the thips engaged with great refolution, whilst others on both fides found various caules for not approaching near enough. The Russian admiral Spiritoff, encountered the Captain Pacha in the Sultana of 90 guns, yard arm and yard arm; they both fought with the greatest fury, and at length run so close, that they locked themselves together, with grappling irons and other tackling. In this fituation the Russians, by throwing hand granades from the tops, set the Turkish ship on fire. and as they could not now be difentangled, bo h ships were in a little time equally in flames. Thus dreadfully circumstanced, without a possibility of succour, they both at length blew up with a most terrible explosion. The commanders and principal officers on both fides were mostly saved; but the crews were nearly totally loft.

The dreadful fate of thefe ships, as well as the danger to these that were near them, produced a kind of paule on both fides; after which the action was renewed, and continued till night, without any material advantage on either fide. foon as it was dark, the Turkill ships cut their cables, and run into a little bay on the coast of Natolia, near a sinall town called Cisme; this fatal measure, was owing to the ignorance, obstinacy, and probably want of resolution of the Captain Pacha, who persisted in the execution of it, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Zaffer, and Haffan Bey, and others of the bravest and most experienced officers, who fore-

fat

which it was attended.

harboar, which was fo conthat feveral of the thips regreat damage, and tome falt in the fands for want of

Thus enclosed, and hadogether like birds under a Ruffian fleet furrounded bouth of the harbour next p. and call anchor within that of them; at the fame sadmiral Elphinston was imely employed in the prepaof four fire thips, whose opewere intended to take effect with which the Russians ot acquainted, it appeared artible, and they thewed a . English ligutenant, who had the service of his country ome dirguit, boldly underconduct and management fire thips, and commodore santher officer of the fame with equal spirit took the ad af the thips that were to elve o'clock at night, com-Greig, with four ships of and two frigates, having shed to the mouth of the engaged the enemy within and bomburdment enfued : e o'clock a figual was made enant Dagdate, to run in ed, and bare down himself e weathermost ship, one of forts upon the next in the a the two others he ordered board the two leewardmoft Turkith floor; at the fame pointed out all the dangers time a fortunate that having fet the rigging of one of the thips in the Turks eretted some batte- center on fire, it added much to the a sver toe entrance of this confusion and danger, in a place where they had so little room to act. The failors on box a the lieutenant's fire-ship, were so overpowered by the horrors of the night, and dreaded to much the result of an operation which they did not comprehend, that it was only by dint of fword and pillol he could keep them on board when he approached the enemy; and at length, when within a few yards, he being obliged to run forward to take a closer view, the man at the helm immediately deferted it, and with the whole crew jumped into the boat, and totally abandoned him. The lieutenant bravely lashed the helm, and feeing a boat full of Turks ready to board him, before he had quite reached the ship, he with the tame intrepidity fired the fuzee with his piftel, and though he was nearly blown up, and terribly burnt, by some loose gunpowder that lay on the deck, he run forward and hooked the cable of the Torkish ship, so that the fire was immediately communicated to her. The lieutenant after this brave exploit jumped into the fex, and was with great difficulty faved.

The fire took place to effectually, that in five hours the whole fleet, except one man of war and a few gallies that were towed off by the Ruffians, was totally defiroyed: after which they entered the harbour, and bombarded and cannonaded the town, and a caffle that protected it, with fuch fuccefs, that a lucky that having blown up the powder magazine in the latter, both were reduced to a heap of subbish. Thus, through the fatal misconduct of a commander, there was scarcely a vestige left at nine o'clock, of a town, a castle, and a fine sleet, which had been all in existence, at one, the same morning.

[C] 2

It is faid that the Turks lost this occasion, 6000 men upon which does not however feem probable, confidering the nearness of the ships to the shore, and the number of boats that the fleet as well as the port must have afforded. The run-away failors filled the whole coasts of the Levant with flaughter and confusion, murdering the Greeks where ever they met them, and endeavouring to burn the towns and cities. these russians massacred several hundreds of the Greeks, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the Janizaries prevented them from treating the other Europeans and foreign merchants in the same manner, as well as from burning and plundering the city, which they teveral times endeavoured; nor was tranquillity thoroughly restored, till the arrival of Cara Olman Oglou, a Turkish nobleman of great power and riches in that country, who came with all the pomp of a prince, at the head of 3000 of his vastais and followers, and having made some examples, and corrected the mal-conduct of some of the civil officers, dispersed these incendiaries. In the mean time, the unfortunate Captain Pacha, who was wounded in the engagement, and who notwithstanding hore the total blame of this fatal misfortune, was Leheaded by order of the Grand Signior, and Zuffer Day appointed Captain Pacha in his place.

The Russians, by this great and mexpected success, became undisturbed masters of the shaving blocked up the Streethe Dardanelles, intercept totally ruined the trade Levant. Count Orlow rather brave Lieutenant, we conducted the fire-ships, we command of the Turkish war that had been save which carried 62 brass he also gave Commodore the rank and title of Admiran assurance that it should lized to him, as soon as ar could return from the empr

In the mean time they the neighbouring islands, ing joined by great num the Greek inhabitants, as by tho:e who had follow fortunes from the Morea, finge to the caille of Lemi pessession of which, from nity to the Dardanelles, a ing a good harbour, was a of great importance to While some of the Gree employed in this siege, greater part betock, example of their ancestors racy, plundering indifcriz under the pretended fanctic Rullian flag, both friend and filled the Archipela their roliberies and crueltie

The once celebrated great and trading city of was now in a most critical si its domestic dangers seeme equal to its powers of and an attack from the which was every day expected to threaten its utter de The inhabitants were acly in the greatest conse but the apprehension an event, was more pardreadful to the foreign great member of European meter confinetly resident, to it would probably have fatal in the first inflance, had nothing less to expect become victims to the fury Names of the populace. A ion to Come Orlow, it was might prevent fach a dein was formed, from being icto execution; to this, r, the jealouses which the must entertain, of any comtion or intercourse between dent Christians, and an enemear and-fo dangerous of en profesion, seemed to prearmountable difficulties. ninal jealouly of the Turks

d upon this occasion, and lece to the common falety; mbarked in this measure much cagernels as the proand fernished a fmall vestel fing of truce, for the depuwell as fome Janizaries to him on his course, from their ople. An English merchant rvailed upon to ondertake mardous office, as it was from the great friendship. g between the two nations, was more likely than any) focceed in the negociation: e reasons, however, doubled ger to him and his countryany misfortune had fol-

This Gentleman, after great rifts in his voyage he Pirates on both fides, lount Orlow builty engaged fiege of Lemnos, who rehim with great diffinction, wed every mark of respect and for his country. The informed him, that neither tructions nor inclinations to offer any injury to the Christians of any nation; that the English in particular were held by the Empress in the highest degree of effeem and friendflip, and that he should think himself happy in every occasion that offered, of fulfilling her friendly intentions, and expreding his own affection to them. The Count then observed, that it was a thing unheard of in the process of a war, to let an enemy know, what was, or was not, within the intended line of operation; that it was belides beyond his knowledge, as foch operations mak in a great mealure depend upon intervesing circumflances, as well as upon the englaave will of the Sovereign.

This was the general answer to the deputation; but Count Orlow at the same time treated the Gentleman with fuch uncommon marks of friendship and attention, and gave him such affurances that nothing but the utmost necessity could induce his miffress to order, or him to take any step that might prejudice his nation, as fully removed his apprehentions, and convinced him that he had met with the defired fuccess. The Count at parting gave him several Torkish prisoners to take along with him, and told them they owed their liberty only to that Gentleman, and to the country which he belonged to, and defired himfelf to attribute every particular fatisfaction he had received to the same cause. This favourable reception of the deputy, reflored quiet to the inhabitants of Smyroa, and fatery to the firm.

It would be an injustice to the character of Count Orlow, no: to take notice of the extraordinary, humanity and generolity, with [C] 3 which which he upon every occasion treated the Turkish prisoners that fell into his hands, in the course of this naval war. Among other noble instances of this nature, the Lady of an officer of high rank, was taken on her passage from the coast of Syria, together with her daughter, a fine child of about nine years old; the Count immediately ordered them to be removed from the cruizer on board his own ship, where they were lodged and treated with every degree of respect, attended by their own people without the smallest restraint, and all their rich baggage and effects returned. With the same spirit of generolity, he, in conformity with the Turkish manners, abstained from feeing the Lady; but treated the child when the chose to come to see him, with all the tenderness of a parent, and made her several valuable and curious presents. length, the first opportunity that presented, he sent the family at his own expence, on board a neutral ship, to the husband and father at Constantinople. Such actions should not be forgotten, and require no praise but the relating.

The fiege of the castle of Lemnos went on but slowly, and continued a long time; the Greeks, who were almost the only land forces that the Russians now had, were languid operators in a service that required patience, labour, and discipline, and which presented no immediate, nor raised no golden hopes of plunder. At lenth Hassan Bey, who we had occasion to mention in the late sea-sight, crossed over by night from the continent of Romania with 3000 men, and conducted matters so well, that the befiegers never heard of his being in the island, till he attacked them suddenly before day in their camp. The consequence was, that the Russians were routed, and the survivors obliged to take shelter in their ships; and the Greeks were almost totally cut to pieces: the sew that escaped, and the inhabitants of the island that assisted the Russians, were hanged without mercy wherever they were caught.

Later accounts fay, that the Russians returned to the island, and not only recovered their former footing in it, but obliged Haffan Bey and his troops to experience all the severities, which they had before inflicted on the Greeks. These accounts, though there has been more than sufficient time for it, have not however been properly auth-nticated. The Ruffians have made several attempts to force their way through the Dardanelles; but without effect; and notwithstanding the unparalleled fortune that attended them in destroying the Turkish fleet, the consequences have not hitherto been equal to what might have been expected from so extraordinary an event.

During this state of extreme loss and misfortune, the Turkish Empire seemed convulsed in all its parts; order, submission, and respect to government seemed totally at an end; massacre and confusion took place; and to fill up the measure of calamity, the plague made the most cruel ravages, above a thousand persons dying daily in Constantinople only, for several The destruction of their ficet was better known in that metropolis, and was in itself more immediately alarming, than any other misfortune that could have happened:

mes and as if the dangers rithout were not fafficiently! t, the ron-sway failers filled Rougheer and confusion, Beatty for fire to the city barbs at feveral times: at thefe mistrenets were so bened, by the accession of eds and villains of all serticularly by the crowds ercers from the Danube, id nothing to fubfit on but r, that they came to an ingagement with the Janiin the foborbs of Pera, fome themands of them were dly cut to pieces, and the perfed.

le mean time, every immosenfore was taken for the foof the Dardanelles, and all saining thips and gallies were sut with the greatest expediaffift in defending the paf-The late Vizir, Moldavangi cha, was recalled from his and fent at the head of men for the same purpose; the first enemies he had to per were the rebellious faithe landed in a body in of the Captain Pacha, and neal for their religion, a or their avarice and licenti-, intended to have planderburnt the city of Gallipoli, have maffacred the Greeks: ere however happily disap-I in this croel design, by the and resolution of the late who leverely chaffiled their scy, and after killing a great r of them, reduced the rer to order. The Chevalier t French Gentleman who en conful in Tartary, and is be an engineer of the first ngether with feveral others of his countrymen, were also precored, to wait new basteries on the fireights, and to put the castles into a proper fines of defence. By these means, together with the succrtainty of the winds and currents necessary to facilitate such an enterprise, all the attempts of the Russians, to force their passage have hitherto proved fruitless.

Nor has the revolution in Egypte nor the intercepting of the trade from the leffer Afia and Syria by. the Ruffinns, been attended with the fatal confequences to the metropolis that were expedied, as amida all'its calamities it has been configurity and plentifully supplied with provisions; a felicity for which it is principally indebted, to the long extent of fea-coast from the month of the Hellespont to the Black Sea. In the meantime, the winter feafor having obliged the Aufhans to quit their flation near the Dardesclies, the trade through the fireights has again been opened.

While the Forte has thus fatally experienced, all the vicifitudes and havock of war, the calemities of pestilence, and the headlong de-Structive evils of anarchy, in their European dominions; the fame reinous lykem of policy, and weaknels and relaxation of government, have extended their effects into other parts of this great empire, and have produced a new and extraordinary revolution in Egypt. The celebrated Ali Bey, who has so long made a diffinguished figure among the factions that for fome years have torn that country to pieces, has at longth thrown by the mak, and taking advantage of the prefent flate of diffress and danger, has boldly mounted the [G] 4 throos throng of the ancient Sultans of sion; while the Governors, by cethar kingdom.

It appears that the Ottomans, have from the beginning made but a lax use of their authority in the government of Egypt. The distance and climate made it difficult to Jupport any confiderable number of troops there; while from its peculiar fituation, and the number of barbayous nations on its borders, who would naturally join the natives, or at least afford them shelter and protection if overcome, nething less than an army could enforce a very Satisfied with firict obedience. the great benefits that rejulted from its being a granary to Centlantinopie and other parts of their dominions, as it had formerly been to ancient Rome, the Turks were content with a very moderate tribute, not ab ve one-third of which came into the treatury. A garrifon of Janizaries was kept at Cairo, where a Basha with the title of Governor, but with little more power than what the great men of the country choic to allow him, conflant's refided. The Princes and Grandees of the country, had abfolute power in their respective territories, and heid a general effembly or council. every year at Carro, where they fettled the proment of the revenues. ujen fuch other natidented or il mutters as demanded confiderlo prevent any referaint from the Covernor, or their being overa ved by the Janizaries, as well ze from the continual quarrels among themselves, they all came attenued by their armed vallals. Such affemblies, among to barbarous a people, naturally factious and treacherous, presented continual feenes of bloodhed and confucationally supporting one against the other, endeavoured so derive that power and confequence from their dissensions, which the authority of office was incapable of procuring.

Ali Bey, who seems to be a man of throng natural parts, and co fiderable abilities, appears to have improved upon the line of policy struck out by the Governors, and by dexteroully shifting for a numher of years frem one side to another, and deltroying by degrees fuch parties as were obnoxious to him, he at length formed one great one, which like Aaron's rod swalup all the others. content with the kingdom of Egypt, he has laid claim to Syria, Paleitine, and the part of Arabia that had belonged to the ancient The ulurper accordingly marched at the head of an army to support these pretensions, and has actually subdued some of the neighbouring Provinces both of Arabia and Syria.

At the same time that he is engaged in these ambitious purfuits, he is not less attentive to the establishing of a regular form of government, and of introducing order into a country that been so long the feat of anarchy and confution. His views equally extended to commerce, for which purpose he has given great encouragement to the Christian Traders, and has taken off iome thameral restraints and indignitles, to which they were subject in that barbarcus country; he also wrote a letter to the republic of Venice, with the greatest assurances of his friendship, and that their Merchants should meet with every de-: gree of protection and safety. His great design is said to be, to make himself master of the Red-Sea; to open the port of Suez to all nations, but particularly to the Eutopeans, and to make Egypt once more the great center of commerce.

gree

Though this conduct and these views, show an extent of thought and ability that indicate nothing of the harbarian, and bespeak a mind equal to the founding of an empire; yetisthe Porte can conclude a tolerable peace with Russa, there seems no great probability that this new government will be lasting. The people over whom Ali

Bey has assumed the rule, are effeminate, cruel, treacherous, and daltardly; who, for a long fucceffion of ages, have been the eafy prey of every barbarous invader. and corrupted with every vice, that debases human nature. If it could be imagined that fuch a people would act like men in the defence of their rights, their own malice and treachery would propably afterwards execute, what the enemy was incapable of effecting in the field. It could be only the total subversion of the Ottoman empire, that could afford a prospect of fuccels to this undertaking.

C H A P. V.

Unbappy state of Poland; the plague breaks out in that country. Germany. Conduct of the Emperor. Of the King of Profile. Profile troops enter the territories of Dantzick. Changes in the Ministry at Copenhagen. Danish expedition against Algiers. Swedin. Difference between the states of Holland and the Elector Palatine.

DOLAND full continues to groan under all the calamities of a war, in which her share is only to toffer. While labouring under the voke of foreign cruelty and oppremon, and convulted in every part by the domestic rage of her citizens, these complicated evils have this year been increated, by the addition of that most dreadful kourge the pestilence. This diftemper broke out in fome villages ca the frontiers of Turky, from whence it foon spread into the adjoining provinces of Poland, and made the most cruel ravages in Podolia, Volhinia, and the Ukraine. Having penetrated into the frong frontier city of Kaminicck, where it made great havock among the garrison as well as the inhabied that important fortrels, which continued expeled and deferted for feveral months, neither Ruffians nor natives venturing to take polfession of it. All the pealants of a village belonging to Prince Czartoriski were swept off in one day, and nine monasteries were left without an inhabitant.

It would feem that this fatal feourge of mankind, in the prefent lawlets state of that country, continually scoured by independent, or opposite bodies of armed men, together with the constant communication occasioned by the taking of prisoners and plunder, and the carrying off provisions, could not by any auman means have been restrained in its progress. The line:

lines however that were drawn, and the great care taken to prevent its spreading, have providentially succeeded, and confined its rage to those provinces where it first began, where it is said to have swept off 250,000 of the people. By the latest accounts, the severe cold of the winter has effectually checked its fury; happy if the returning heat of the summer, operating upon the misery and distresses of the people, does not again call forth its latent feeds into action.

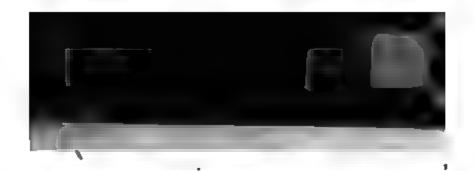

The continued losses of the confederates have by no means lessened their exorbitances, nor even in appearance their numbers; on the contrary, they feem to multiply and sequire new strength by repeated destruction, are in possession of several provinces, and that extensive country presents nothing but endless scenes of ruin and desolation. If we are surprized at the assonishing perseverance which still produces confederacies, we cannot be less so, that the country should in any manner be capable of supporting them: it might be imagined that in such a state of insecurity and anarchy, where there is so little hope of enjoying the future crop, the husbandmen would wholly abandon the cultivation of the earth. It appears by a calculation said to be accurate, that the confederates had exacted above a year ago from the inhabitants of the province of Great Poland only, fince the first commencement of hostilities, above 16 millions of florins: to which if we add the provisions and forage furnished to the Russians, the plunder and ruin of private families, and the loss sustained from the great number of exiles, who carried off their most valuable moveables, some idea may be formed of the deplorable state of the country.

The great Germanic powers, still observe the same mysterious conduct with respect to the affairs of Poland, and the events of the prefent war, which we have before more than once taken notice of. The breaking out of the plague, has afforded an opportunity to the Emperor as well as the King of Prussia, to form lines composed of great bodies of troops along the frontiers of that country. The close connection that at present sublists between these Princes, the mutual completion of their forces, the attention they pay to their respective military departments, and the excellent condition of their armies, feem to indicate some great design in view.

The Emperor, in pursuance of his former conduct at Milan, the good effects of which had been fo happily experienced by the inhabitants of that dutchy, has fet apart one day in the week at Vienna, for receiving petitions and complaints from all his subjects, without any the smallest distinction as to birth or rank; and the officers of the court have express orders, not to turn away any perion whatever who may come to implore his protection, let their condition be ever so low. He at the same time nobly declared, that it behaved him to do justice, and that it was his invariable intention to render it to all the world, without respect of perions.

The camp and grand review this year at Neustad in Moravia, seemed calculated for the entertainment and reception of the king of Prussia, who paid a visit to the Emperor at that place. The meeting between Sept.3. these great monarchs was in appearance

mae to cordial and affectionreartly to affect the beholders, hirly the treops, many of venezabored, and had expe-, the fatal confequences of mostly that had so long subetween the two families.

people were disposed to e, that other causes befides s or cariosty, had conduced late vifits between thefe is and that the war between boaring powers, to which of them could be indifferent, s ultimate object of them. fit paid by Prince Henry of to the Court of Petersburgh, in fome degree to countsthis opinion; and made it not imposible, that such a parof territory might be agreed between the three courts, ld be highly advantageous 1, and which in the prefent Annees must have been subto, as well by the Porte as ablic of Poland. The City trick, and regal Pruffa, were of the most important and g sature to one of the parties; re the provinces of Moldavia alachia, left fo to another t Luffia might have been amply stated on the fide of Tartary s coafts of the Black Sea. rever this may be, flates that rest power feldom want am-; and the Emperor is now have the finest and best difrever this may be, flates that went power feldom want am-; and the Emperor is now have the finest and best disd army, that ever the house stria was possessed of. With ree, and the affections of the , which he so eminently poshe may well be supposed to reat designs, and the present on of affairs, seems in a parmenner to assord an opporfor their completion.

The city of Dantsick had an occasion this year, of experiencing one of the many misfortunes to which a fmall flate, which has great and formidable neighbours is frequently exposed. A body of Pras- Sept. 29fisa troops made a fudden irruption at two o'clock in the marning into the territories of that city, where they forprized feveral of the out-posts, feized the causes, and made the men priferers. They were afterwards reinforced to the number of five thousand, and encamped about four miles from the city, where they continued fome weeks, but observed an exact discipline. This violent transaction could not fail of being fufficiently alarming to the Dantzickers, who having fecured their gates, applied to all the foreign Ministers to write to their respective courts, to imploce their protection, or intercellion in their favour. It teems that the Magi-Araces had forbidden the Prussan recruiting officers to levy men within their free city; and the Postmatter had refused to past some cake of filver, which came for the Profina refident, without examination. The complaint founded on the last of thefe causes was the more groundless, as the post-office belongs to the King of Poland, and the Magistrates have no manner of authority over it.

The consequence was, that in about a month, the city, upon agreeing to pay 75,000 ducats, and subscribing to certain conditions, was admitted to depute two counsellors to make a submission to his Prussian Majesty. The conditions were:

1st. That they should settle and pay without delay, all the demands made by the King's subjects, on the city or burghers:—zd. That the

Profigu

44] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Prussians should have liberty to enlist recruits, agreeable to the treaty of Whelavar:—3d. That they shall not harbour any Prussian deserters: —4th. That the money consigned to the Prussian resident, shall not he liable to inspection:—and 5th. That the inhabitants shall comport themselves in such a manner, as not to give any suture cause of complaint to his Prussian Majesty.

At the fame time all the Prussian subjects that were residents of Dantzick, were peremptorily ordered to return to their respective countries. Nothing could be more arbitrary. nor attended with circumstances of greater cruelty than this act. Many of these people had married, had rermed all their connections, had ar quired confiderable fortunes, and had spent the principal part of their hves in that great trading city: fo that this order carried along with it all the pungent things of banishment from a native country, at the most critical periods, and in the most interesting fituations of life.

Several quick and unexpected revolutions, have taken place this year in the D nish ministry. Count Holke, the great favourite of the Ling, and supposed to possels an unbounded ascendency over him, was fuddenly, to the furprize of the world, with ut any motives publicly aligned, degraded from all his employments, and banished the court. Several other great changes, as rapidly, and aimost as unexpectedly, have fince taken place at this court: the Counts Moltke, Thett, Reventlau, and M. de Roiencrantz, have been dismissed from their employments, without a pention, or other mark of favour to any of them, except M. Rofer crantz. General Pailotophow, the Ruffian Minister, quitted this court abruptly without taking leave, immed upon these last changes, whice place just at the close of the

The cause of these move has not yet transpired. It i that the French interest has c gained ground confiderably a penhagen; and from the 1 departure of the Russian mi it might not leem unwarra to hazard a conjecture, the intrigues of that buly cour fome share in this change of sters. The King however con the fame patriotic conduct to his people, which has hither tinguished his reign; proof of which, as well as a disposition to the encouragem arts, sciences, and learning, this year freed the press fr restraints, and by a rescript d the castle of Hirscholm, exem Books published in his domi from any kind of centure.

The ill success of the expe which the Danes undertoo year against Algiers, is a recflance, that large thips, heav non, and a number of failor not constitute an useful and el navy, without that minitary b and skill, which is only to quired in actual fervice. dron fent upon this expedition conducted by Admiral Kaa confilled of four thips of th two frigates, two bemb veffels firethip. The Admiral having anchored in the road of Algiers, hoisted a white slag which he entered into a f negociation with the Dey, w to much displeased with a le had received from him, that dered the Algerine colours hoisted, and several clano being at such a distance as to be out of all danger, still continued in the same pacific disposition, without returning a single thot, and the white slag slying.

This strange appearance of war and peace, of avowed threat, and of real inaction, continued on the ide of the Danes for five whole days, though the Algerines fired at them several times with great fury, but without effect, as they were never within reach of their that. In the mean time the Algerines fitted out fix gallies and galliots, who made a bold attempt, in the night, to bring of the Danish bomb-vessels, in which, however, they failed of feccess. The inhabitants of the tity were notwithstanding in great contains, as the longer the cloud was gathering, the more dreadful they apprehended would be its effects when it burth; they accordingly deferted the place in great numbers, and recired with their most valuable moveables to the woods and moun-

On the 6th morning, the admiral hoisted the bloody flug, and the cannonade and bombardment at length began, which was immediately answered with great briskness by all the calles and forts about the city, and continued ail day, but without a fingle fliot having taken place on either fide. In the evening, the admiral again hung cut the white flag; and the Algerine gallies made another attempt in the night, with great resolution, to bring off the bomb vessels, but were overpowered by the superior fire of the fleet, which continued till morning. This fort of engagement was carried on to the 12th cay, during which time the Barbarians made several spirited. though inessectual attempts, as well by their gallies, as by a rast, or sloating battery, which they constructed, to have made the Danes repent of their visit.

On that day, the admiral hung out a white flag, and feat a floop towards the shore, under the same peaceable entign, which was met by the captain of the port, in a bark, who came to know the cause of its approach. A letter from the admiral was then delivered to the captain, which he was charged to deliver into the Dey's own hands. but which he foon after brought back, with an account that the Dev resulted to receive it. The Danca lingered two days longer, during which time, the Algerines were struggling with the weather, though it blew a florm, to endeavour to bring the ratt to bear upon them. At length, on the 15th day, the firet weighed anchor in the morning, and put an end to this unaccountable expedition.

Sweden has been productive of nothing very interesting this year. A sum of money having been allotted by the states, to enable the Princes of Sweden to gratify their curiosity, of making a tour to see the principal nations of Europe; the Prince Royal and his next brother, Adolphus Frederick, set out in the latter end of the year upon that laudable design.

A new ordinance relative to pomp and luxury has been silied, by which the severity of the former, of 1765, has been much relaxed. All wines, however, except those of France, the Rhine, and Pertugal, as well as punch, still continue to be prohibited; as are worked rushes, velvets, and alk laces upon liveries.

The

46] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The use of cossee, tea, and chocolate is permitted; but every samily that use them must pay for a licence in proportion to their rank and number. The importation of window-glass from England and France is permitted, but subject to a daty of 25 per cent. By another regulation, the expence of sune-rals is limited, and oak cossins are prohibited; as are heyducs and running footmen. The death of the King, which happened fince the close of the year, and the accession of a young active Prince, nearly allied to the King of Prussia, and who does not seem deficient in ability, may probably cause great alterations in the internal government, as well as in the general political system of this country. We have icen upon former occasions that the court have a very great party in the country: and a young Prince, if he has only common abilities, will find a dispolition very favourable to his augmenting the number of his friends.

A misunderstanding, which happened this year between the States of Holland and the Elector Palatine, relative to the navigation of the Rhine, and the payment of certain duties claimed by former, had for a time the appearance of being attended with ferious conlequences. The Elector, upon this dispute, stopped some vessels belonging to the republic. at Dusseldorp, and the latter published an interdiction of the navigation on the Rhine to his subjects, and prohibited all commerce and communication between the two states. This was resented so warmly by the Elector, that his troops received orders to be ready to, march at the shortest warning; whereupon the states issued an order for fifteen battalions to reinforce the garrisons of Maestricht, Venlo, and Grave, and a number of vessels were prepared to convey artillery and warlike flores to those places. Courts of Vienna and Berlin, and the Elector of Triers, however interfered upon this occasion, and by their friendly mediation, affairs were amicably adjusted, July 19th. the Rhine again opened.

CHAP. VI.

Proce. Sufferings of M. de Chalotais. Profecution commenced against the Duke & Aiguillon, at Versailles. A bed of justice held, at which the King puts a stop to the Profecution by his Letters Patent. Gondust of the Princes of the blood. Arret of the parliament of Paris against the Duke. The King issues an arret, by ambien that of the parliament is annulted. Grand deputation from the parliament to Versailles; the King's answer. Cradust of the other parliaments. Deputation from the parliament of Britany; two of its members sent to prison. The King arrives suddenly at Paris, and holds a bed of justice, at which all the papers relatives to the profecution are seized, and the decrees of the parliament erased from the Registers. Violent measures taken with the other parliaments. Arret from the King's council of state. Distrosses of the people from the scarcity of provisions. Corsea: Expedition to Tunis. State of Italy.

WHILE war has been laying wafte one part of Europe, and has been hardly withheld from the other, that reftless active spirit in France, which has so often urged its influence among her neighbours, feems now, perhaps, happily for them, to find domestic matter fuffitiest to give it full employment. The partiality and obitinacy shown by the king, in behalf of his favoarite, the Duke de Aiguillon, being opposed by the intrepid refolution of the parliaments in defence of the established and legal government, has already effected in part, and feems finally to threaten, some extraordinary alteration in the conditution of that country.

This Duke, who has occasioned fo much confusion in his native crustry, was several years governor of the province of Britany, and acquired some credit in the last war, from his having the command of the regular forces and militia, who attacked our rear in the well-known affair of St. Cas. Whatever degree of merit be might derive from that action, the adminiftration of his government was fuch, as to bring upon him a great degree of the odium of the people whom he governed: till at length a public profecution was commenced against him by the parliament of the province, for crimes of the deepest and blackest die. Whatever foundation there might have been for thefe charges, there must have been fomething very alarming and extraordinary in his conduct, that could induce the whole nation to unite against one man, with as much fervor, as the particular members of the province that he governed. Nor was this a popular odium only, founded upon the fympathy of the people, or proceeding from the veneration they owed to their parliaments; we fee that the Princes of the blood, and such of the Peers as were not under immediate influence, though the natural fupporters of the crown, were upon this occasion on the same side, and parliament; declared it to be an infringement of the royal authority, and commanded the Duke to take his place among the Peers.

This arret was followed by strong representations from the Princes and Peers, complaining not only of the illegal proceedings at the late bed of juttice, which annihilated the undoubted rights, at the same time that it sacrificed the honour of the peerage; but also of the King's arbitrary mandate, which forbad them to deliberate upon a subject, in which their most essential interests, and most valuable privileges were involved. Representations of the same nature, were made by the parliament of Paris, who sent a grand deputation of forty-two of their members 10th. to Versailles, headed by the first president, to whom the King returned the following answer:

"After the decree you gave on the 2d of this month, which I have annulled, I ought not to listen to your representations: I will never permit any opposition to the execution of my Letters Patent, of the 27th of lait month; and I forbid you, under the pains of disobedience, to throw any obstacle in the way of the Duke de Aiguillon's enjoyment of all the rights of peerage in your Assembly." peremptorinels of this command, had, however, no effect upon the conduct of the parliament; who, having met next day in full affembly, confirmed all their former decrees and resolutions, and only deliberated what were the proper measures next to be taken in consequence of it.

The other parliaments were not behind band in vigour or resolution with that of Paris. They declared the late transactions to be illegal, and as subversive of the King's authority, which was founded upon the laws, as they were destructive to justice, and to the rights and privileges of the peerage and people.

Arret followed arret, from the parliaments of Bourdeaux Toulouse, by which the Dutchy of Aiguillon was stripped of all the rights and privileges of peerage, until the Duke should be acquitted by due course of law, of all the charges laid against him. The parliament of Rennes, returned unopened the King's letters patent, which were fent to annul one of their arrets. They also burnt by the common hangmen, two printed memorials in favour of the Duke de Aiguillon, which they Aleclared to contain the most detestable tenets, totally subversive of the constitution, of the rights, liberties, and franchifes of the people; and founded upon principles that tend to overturn all legal government, and to loosen every band that unites mankind in a state of so-

The king's council being sent to court by the parliament of Paris, to know what day it would please his Majesty to receive their remonstrances, were answered by the chancellor, "That his Majesty would neither se nor hear his parliament." The Council, were however blamed, upon the assembling of the chambers to receive the report, for not delivering their message personally to the King, and for accepting any answer from the Chancelior.

A deputation of nineteen members from the parliament of Britany, received leave to wait upon the king at Compeigne; but were farted to pais through Paris, either going or coming back.

th

going or coming back.

Ang. 20th. The king did not suffer them to speak a sentence, told them that his letters patent should have imposed a most absolute falence on them; that their conduct was of too serious a nature to pass unpunished; but that he would content himself with punishing two of them, which he hoped would be sufficient to keep the rest to their duty. Two of the members were accordingly seized, and sent prisoners to the castle of Vincounces.

Notwithstanding the ill success which had hitherto attended the parliament of Paris, in all its applications to the king, it still perfected in sending repeated deputations and remonstrances to him, and though the season of the year for their vacation was arrived, residved not to adjourn, while the laws and constitution of their country were in so critical a situation.

At length the king ar-Sept. 3d. rived fuddenly at Paris, in the morning, attendd by his guards, who having immediately forrounded the parliament-house, he entered it, and held s bed of justice, at which it is faid be reproached the members in the Evereft terms; he then told the dambers of Inquests and Requests, that he had no need of them, and they might retire; after which all de decrees, acts and proceedings wink the Duke d'Aiguillon, were talled for and delivered, and orderet to be erased from their registers. The chancellor then made a speech, the king's name, in which he tild them, among many other things, " That their example had been the principal cause of fill more irregular proceedings in some other parliaments; that the king now imposed the most absolute filence, and forbid all deliberations upon those subjects. That he forewarned them, that he should look upon all correspondence with the Other parliaments, as a criminal confederacy against his person and authority. He ordered all his first presidents, and all other presidents and officers of the parliament, who should preside in his at sence, to break up all assemblies, wherein any proposal should be made for deliberating upon objects, concerning which he has imposed filence, as well as upon any letters or difpatches they should receive from other parliaments." Thus ended this extraordinary bed of justice; which had thrown the whole city of Paris into the utmost terror and difmay; and which was farther increased, by the profound filence that had been commanded, and was for fome time observed, in every thing relative to the transactions of this day.

The parliament however had refolution enough to meet again, and issued an arret, in which they obferve, talking of this matter, that the many acts of arbitrary power exercifed against both the spirit and letter of the constitution of the French monarchy, and indeed a. gainst the solemn yow of the king, leave no room to doubt of a premeditated delign to change the form of government; they however profelled their firm intentions, to perfevere in carrying truth to the foot of the throne, and postponed the farther confideration of what passed at the late bed of justice, to the following December.

 $\{D\}$ 2

În

ANNUAL REGISTER, 52] 1770.

In the mean time violent meafures were purfued with several of the other parliaments. The parliament of Britany, pefides the injuries it had already fullajned, particularly in the loss of two of its members, carried off from king's presence, though making part of a deputation that had the Sanction of his leave for its protection, and whose fituation feemed the more deplorable, as their fate was unknown, was now furprized by the intrusion of the Count de Gayon, a Major General, who brought the king's letters patent for them to regitter, and an order to erase their own arrets. Though the parlia rent declared they could not deliberate in his prefence, he notwithstanding refused to withdraw, upon which all the members quitted the house, except the first President, Solicitor General, and Register, to whom he produced letters de cachet, and who were accordingly obliged to attend him till one in the morning, at which time the business was finished. The parliament however issued a very strong protest against this act of power, which they shewed in the highest degree to be arbitrary and illegal, and declared it to be null and void in every part.

At Metz, Marshal d'Armentieres entered the parliament-house, at the head of eight companies of grenadiers, and after tearing to pieces an arret of theirs, banished several of their members to Vizoul. at Befançon, the parliament having committed the King's attorney there into confinement, Marshal de Lorges went at the head of a detachment, forced open the prison, and set the attorney at liberty.

The parliament of Rouen, which has always had the honour to diftinguish itself in support of the constitution, against the despotic will of the monarch, without regard to these violences, with its usual spirit, prepared a very strong remonstrance; and in consequence of its breaking up, charged the court of vacation with its delivery; as well as with the using all possible means to further its intention. The court of aids in Paris did the fame, and presented it, but the king resused to hear or accept it. This remonstrance was written with great energy, and, to the amazement as well as anger of the Court, was printed and published the next day.

In the mean time an arret of the king's council of state was issued, to annul the resolutions of the parliament of Bourdeaux against the Duke d'Aiguillon. In this arret, among feveral others, the following are laid down as maxims not to be controverted, "That the whole administration of the public power, resides in the king's person alone, and that he is accountable for that administration to God only; that it is from him alone that the magistrates hold their power; that they are, and can be nothing more than the officers of his majesty, charged with the execution of his will; that, if for the good of his people, he grants them leave to represent w him what they think conducive w his service, and advantageous to his subjects, it is their duty to do it only with the respect due to his facred person. That it is never allowed to oppose the execution of his-orders, but only to make the most respectful representations; and that when his majesty does not think proper to condescend, obedience 15 a duty imposed by all the laws:

HISTORY O F EUROPE. 53

majesty is sole legislator in gdom, independent and un-; toat he alone has a right ng the antient laws in exeof interpreting them, of ng them, and of making

e disputes between the king parliament of Paris, enterthe enfuing year, in which re finally terminated, by the Mototion of the latter, and bliftment of a new and extary tribunal in its room, we erefore defer our account of closion of them, till it apa its proper place, in our lume. By that time, some : niequences of the extraormeasures pursued by the 12y possibly begin to appear, v lights be probably thrown se causes that led to these is: at any rate, we may then iore accurate accounts than obtained at prefent.

ng these transactions the m was in a state of the greatlatisfaction and confusion; ocwithstanding the strong of government in that counlittie was prudence able to public discontent, that the and other state prisons were ich unhappy offenders. The im and heroic firmness of the ents, who, at the expence of and personal talety, perseo the last in defence of the d constitution of their counlacd all mankind to them, ry order, from the prince of 🚭 to the peafint was on their deed if we contider the teman by the people, it is not nceived, that any thing but neste flanding army, which i, on hand has to long ruled.

that country, could have hitherto prevented the most extraordinary confequences from taking place. How long this defirective power may continue to defolate the country, or whether, as has frequently been the case, it may at length fall by its own enormous weight, muft be left to time to difclofe.

We have already taken notice of the fearcity of provisions which prevailed this year in France. diffrestes of the people were so excellive, that it is faid 4000 persons perished by famine in Limotin and the Marche only; and in Normandy, the most fruitful province of France, barley bread fold at above two-pence a pound. This milery produced numberless rious and inf tractions in different parts, in which much mischief was done, and many lives loft. The ports were opened, and liberty given to foreigners as well as natives, to import corn, to store it, and to export it whenever they pleafed upon paying the cullomary duties, without any retrospect as to the price for which it might have been fold at any time during its continuance in the ports. Upon the whole, this country is at prefent far from being in an enviable fituation with respect to its domestic affairs; nor could a stronger instance perhaps be given of its internal ill government, than that fince the death of King Staniflans, notwithflanding every means being used to prevent it, above 2000 families, it is computed, have emigrated from the city of Nancy in Lorrain, which had been in to flourishing a flate during that prince's a hamiltration.

C - fica ' as in no - carce gratifind the rapacity of its conquerors; if that can be called a conquest, $\{D\}$ 2

where the people are upon every occasion in a state of desiance, as soon as the weakness of the invader, or the nature of the country, admits the smallest hope of success; where the French are atraid to stir without their walls for fear of being massacred; and where the governor was this summer obliged to make a kind of campaign at the head of 5000 men, to restrain the fury of the supposed subjects. Indeed the Count de Marbeuf gained no great honour by this kind of campaign; a great many examples of cruelty, and a few perhaps of justice, were made. I he real insurgents sled to their native and inaccessible fastnesses; they had no intention of engaging the French in the field, and they knew they would not follow them. As there was no doubt but their friends and countrymen, who dwelt in more exposed places, held a correspondence with them, and would aid and assist them, when it could be done with safety, it was thought necessary to strike a terror by numerous executions. A number of these poor people have also been sent in chains to France, from whence they are to be transported to the West-Indies; in this the French seem to have adopted the Eastern policy, of securing the conquest by removing the inhabitants to diffant parts of the world.

The French, however, from the heat of the weather and the unheal-thiness of the country, have paid near for this summer expedition; and it would seem, that while the present invincible aversion of the natives to their government continues, it cannot cest them life, unless they totally exterminate them, than 18, or 20 battalions to keep possession of the island. At an assembly of the states convened this year by the Count de Marbeuf, the following are faid to have been their demands. " That France shall have the supreme dominion of the kingdom of Corfica; but that the government shall be republican; that the public employments, churches, and benefices, shall be at the disposal of the Corsicans; that the people shall have a Speaker, to deliver whatever they may have to lay before the king; that all public acts shall be in the Italian language; and that they shall retain the privileges of falt, and of the mint."

A small squadron which was sent from France to bring the Tunifians to reason, succeeded much better in that enterprize, than the Danes did in theirs against Algiers. It appears that regency had concluded a treaty with the Corficans, while they were yet a free people, and seem never to have approved of the invasion of that island: since the conquest of it, they took all Corfican barks that they met under French colours, and made flaves of the crews: they allo drove the French African company from a valuable coral fishery, which they possessed on their coasts. When the French squadron, which confifted only of two ships of the line, together with some frigates, bombs, and Malteze gallies, appeared before Tunis, their demands were fo high, being 800,000 livres for the expence of the expedition, and 200,000 for the loss of the coral fishery, that the Bey equivocated for tome days without giving a direct answer.

Mir. Broves, the French commander, did not however chuse to be tritled with; and after drawing the inhabitants of his nation out of the city, who were suffered to depart

th their effects, without the pleftation, or the receiving a infult from the populace, fome frigates to cruize at the of the harbour, and failed se reft of the squadron to d Biserta. This port, which so kingdom of Tunis, lies o miles north of the capital, puilt near the fite, and pro- est of the ruins of the ancient the French bombarded it goar, and threw in between 500 hombs; some galliots surnt, and some other misone, but not very confiderafrom thence they proceeded , and some other places on E; but as the delign of the ion was only to obtain fatisand fecurity for the future, Boy was averfe to war, matme easily compromised. A was accordingly concluded, incipal articles of which, he restoration of the Corsies with their effects, an ac-Igment of that illand's being property of France, and the thery to be again put upon mr footing.

, which has been to often atre of war, now happily dl the bleffings of peace and

An advantage which is not ber, as the different flates vie, in improving their increasing their commerce, rishing those arts that propertain to peace. Without that violence that generally attends the first efforts of reformation, and which the Jefuits fo lately experienced in France, Spain and Portugal, the Italian powers feem unanimous in the general intention, of reducing the exorbitant power of the clergy, contracting their numbers, and leffening their riches; they do this however with fech a degree of moderation, and so firica a regard to justice, as to refrain from all acts of inhumanity, and from the rain of helpless and anfortunate individuals. By this means the reformation will be effectually, and almost imperceptibly brought about a with the greatest advantage to the flate, and with less clamour or discontent.

The present Pope, by his moderation, good fenfe, and the peculiar happiness of his temper, has conciliated all those powers, who were so adverse to the court of Rome in the time of his predeceffor. By this means, camity has died away, good humour taken place, and he will owe to kindoess, what his predeceffor loft, by a rigid, and perhaps harsh perseverance, in defence of what he deemed his rights. The breach with Portugal, which feemed irreparable, is already made up, and a papal nuncio received at that court; France, has almost refigned Avignon, and the territories feized, and claims made by the king of Naples, will probably follow.

CHAP. VII.

State of affairs previous to the mreting of parliament. General discontent upon the determination on the Middlesex election. Address: Petitions the consequence of the address. Parliament meets. Speech from the throne. Debates. Amendment proposed to the address; Affair of the petitions, we olently agitated: Amendment rejected. Resignations. Motion tending to desine the jurisdiction, in cases of contested election; amendment to the motion. Motion in the House of Lords. Protest.

HE general discontent ex-cited by the proceedings on the Middle x election, particu-Jarly by the final decision, given upon the petition presented by some freeholders of that county, at the close of the last session of parliament, did not at all subside during the summer. On the contrary, the remotest counties caught the alarm, and the body of freeholders, in general, throughout the kingdom, thought themielves wounded in the most vital part. It is, however, to be doubted, whether they would so soon have adopted the niethod of expressing their feelings by petitions to the throne, if it had not been for fame well-meant, though probably not weil-judged measures, that were taken some time previous to the ultimate decision on the Right of Election.

Addresses from great bodies or communities, that give a plaudit to the public management and conduct of affairs, must be very flattering to all ministers. They have trequently defined them, when any dishoult conjuncture in affairs, foreign or domestic, has made it necessary, to take along with them the collective sense of the people. At this particular time, when public discontents ran higher, and public measures were more freely and loudly censured, than at any other late period, such testimonies of popular approbation, if they could be pretty generally obtained, would not only have been pleasing. but highly uleful. They would have made it appear, at a time when a question of the most delicate and important nature was on the point of being agitated, that such cesfures were groundless, and proceeded either from interested views, or the particular animolity of a few; while the measures on which they were founded, were well received, and fatistactory to the nation at large.

Upon this principle, measures were taken at the spring assizes, to feel the temper of the counties; and as addresses, in their general acceptation, are considered as little more than matters of compliment and good humour, and that the Judges. Lieutenants of the counties, and Sheriffs, have great influence at these meetings, it was not doubted but a confiderable number, if not a majority, might have been induced to present them; especially as mederate men, even when lar from being fattsfied with the meafures of government, will feldom

bazard

a refeal, which, however the party that happen be warm in outward proof loyalty, will always cono an inflance of dilaffection. er probability appeared ide of these reasons in spe-, the defign answered but ently, when it came to be into execution; and if the sald have been perceived in y remotely trying the pubofition, which does not apnposible, it would seem sore prudent to have laid sture totally by for the prean by an obftirate perfe-, to thew a weakness which have been otherwise unor which at least must have ed a matter of doubt.

, Keat, Surry, and Salop, e only counties from which ireffes were obtained. The ment ufed to get fome, f this imall number, in a sgree frustrated the end that spoted; management, in a county, perhaps necessary, nch, in a popular caule, save been easily overlooked. siveraties addressed on this A confiderable opposis made to the measure at ; at Cambridge, the inof the Duke of Grafton. it with less difficulty. The of Briftol and Coventry, and poration of Liverpool, with other places of less note, ed addreffes. An address prefented, which purport-be from the Merchants, if Traders, and Inhabitants City of London, was into contradict the fentiments, interact the proceedings of grate body of this great metropolis, in which the party of the court was extremely weak. The manner in which this address was said to have been obtained, and the riot that ensued upon the delivery of it, our reader will see in the Chronicle, and its Appendix for the former year.

The spirit of addressing could be carried so surther in England. It was invidiously observed, that Scotland was much more ready in expressing the most perfect satisfaction in the conduct and character of the ministers. Addresses, which filled the Gazette for several weeks came from every town, and from almost every village in that part of the kingdom.

The flyle of many of their eddresses was not altogether proper: they were unnecessarily overloaded with professions of lovalty, which are needlessly repeated, except in cases of great doubt, or real danger, when they carry much the more weight for not being in common use. By representing the people to be in little icis than a flate of rebellion, they threw an oblique, and alarming imputation upon a confiderable part of the nation. It seemed to many, that they were called upon to justify their discontent, by shewing, in fome manner equally firong and public, that their opposition to the court was not taken upon falte or trivial ground. The final decition of the Maddlesex Election. whilst the nation was to a ferment from other causes, furnished a favourable opporturity.

Petitions were therefore fet on foot, in many places, for the redress of grievances, for the removal of bad ministers, and for the banishment from the royal prefence for ever, of those evil counsellors, who, the petitioners asferted, had endeavoured to alienate the affections of the subjects, and to deprive them of their dearest and most essential rights. County of Middlesex, as the most immediately affected, took the lead upon this occasion, and presented a petition, which, it was generally thought, would have had greater force, if it had not been clogged with a verbose and tedious detail of all the real and supposed grievances that had been plained of for the last fix or seven years.

The City of London succeeded to the County of Middlesex: This petition was pretty nearly in the same strain with the former. though the discontent spread fast and widely, and was even stronger in some remote places than in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, the course of petitioning seemed for some time to be at a stand; several doubts arole in the minds, even of those who were most animated against the conduct of the ministry; some questioned the legality of a petition to the crown against a decision of the House of Commons in matter of election, and did not see, though the complaint were legal, how it was in the power of the crown to give redress; others were disgusted with the pattern of the first petitions, which were filled with a variety of matters, some of which they considered either as stale or frivolous, or doubtful.

These difficulties were removed in several places by the activity of the opposition, who, it must be that the imprudent matter or expressions of any petition, formed no objection to the measure itself. That if the right of election was important, the violation was flagrant; and no remedy was to be expected for that flagrant violation of an important right, from the very body which had been guilty of the violation. The crown could not, indeed, rescind the act of the House of Commons; but the crown could fend that House of Commons to their conflituents; and these might chuse a House disposed to redress the grievance complained of. In this manner the crown might administer a remedy; the legality of an application for it could not be denied, fince the House of Commons had, by express resolution, admitted a right in the subject to petition the crown for the dissolving, as well as the calling and fitting of parliaments.

These arguments prevailed is about seventeen counties, and several cities and boroughs. petitions were faid to be figned by upwards of 60,000 of the electors Some of the petitions were principally confined to the violated right of election, others were more diffuse; Yorkshire, Westminster, and some others, prayed in express terms for a dissolution of parliament; some only infinuated it; while a good many prescribed no particular mode of redress.

Such was the state of affairs previous to the meeting of parliament. The nation had been in a great ferment during the whole summer—the like had scarcely been ever remembered. Many fast owned, exerted very great powers, friends of administration having with equal industry. They argued, found, that, whether from the nature

HISTORY O F EUROPE. [59

etentation, the power of deincapacities in the House nuncus, was extremely and ally unpopular, thought it be wife to give way to the disposition, and that it be no difgrace to relaind felion, their own refolation ber; that they would thereby ately remove that fatal of discontent, the Middleschion, let what would eife behind; and prevent its may longer a matter ferilarming to the most moded dispellionate part of the while it was wied as a by the turbulent and ambiof bringing themselves into

HPOČE.

he other hand, feveral of the erry cried out for measures ricy. The authority of Par-: had been trampled upon. - had been infulted on one, by proceedings at once abford and provoking: t petitions. A diffolution iament was defired from the and on what ground? benat parliament had complied e ministers, whom the King had appointed. How could rect to be obeyed in those critical emergencies, that eceffarily occur in any plan randizing the crown; when inifiers who formed fuch were given up, and the who had acted under their se was diffolved? 'Fo fupe ministers effectually, it ; only necessary to adhere to rand measure in the Mid-Election, as a perpetual policy; but to punish the who, otherwife, ferious thoughts. eners, the act, or the desterity of might continually keep alive that matter of complaint. Besides, if the subjects were suffered to proceed in this method, of remonfirating to the crown in their satural capacity, not only without but against their representatives; a majority in parliament would become ineffectual to the support of government; and so no ministry could be safe, except in courting the popular opinion, to the manifest detriment of the service of the sovereign. They would therefore have thefe petitions confidered as acts little less than trensonable, and to be examined and punished as crimes of the greatest magnitude.

The minds of all men were occupied on the one fide and the other with thefe confiderations, and great expectations were formed concerning the manner in which thefe great points would be handled in the speech Jan. 9th. from the throne. The speech began, by taking notice of a diftemper that had broke out among the borned cattle; touched on fome topics concerning foreign affairs, and the diffractions of America, and concluded with the afast recommendations to negrimity. No notice whatfoever was taken of the great domestic movements, which had brought on, or followed the petitions.

The public were much furprized at the filence concerning the petitions, and at the folemn mention of the horsed cattle, which filled the place of that important buffness. It became even a subject of too general ridicule, especially as the existence of the distemper, or at least the extent or danger, did not dispose the people to more

The opposition, however, did not copy the reserve of the speech. Upon reading the address, a motion was made for the following anendment, to assure his Majesty, that they would immediately enquire into the causes of the difcontents that prevail in every part of his Majesty's dominions. protion occasioned long debates, which were carried on with warmth and acrimony of expression, before unknown in that affembly, and in the course of which, the severest animadversions were made upon different parts of the speech.

The affair of the petitions was viclently agitated, and while on one fide, the grievances and difcontents of the people, were urged as the strongest reasons for the proposed amendment, some of the gentlemen on the other denied the existence of either grievances or discontents: another more moderate and smaller part of those who supported adminifirstion, did not deny but there night be some grievances, though much exaggerated; they acknowledged the discontents, and they declared themselves willing to conficier them at a ptoper time, as well as to re-confider the Middletex affair, though they were still of opinion that they had acted right in it, upon the principles of the law as it itood when they made the decision; these principles, they ailowed, might bear hard on the rights of the electors, especially in parlianients continued beyond the session; they said they were willing to liken to methods of redress toberly proposed, and at a time of leiture: but they objected to the moti a, as it would be to criminate themselves; to assure his Majesty, that by an abuse of power, they had been the cause of all the prevailing discontents, and in effect to join in a prayer for their own dissolution.

The far greater number, however, on this fide of the question, admitting the discontents, entirely charged them, as well as the petitions, to the gentlemen in opposition, through whose influence and industry, the people were persuaded to imagine the one and to fign the other; while the only cause for either, was the ill will of their leaders to administration. observed, that the majority of gentlemen of large fortunes, of the justices of peace, and of the clergy, in some of the counties, had not figned the petitions; that a majority of the counties had not petitioned; that the inferior freeholders, were not capable of understanding what they figned; that the farmers and weavers in Yorkshire and Cumberland, could neither know, nor take any interest in what beiel the freeholders of Middlesex, if they had not been fet on by seditious and factious men, by grievance-hunters and petition-mongers; that by these people, meetings were advertised, speeches made, writings published, government vilified, the parliament abused, and the people inflamed; that all this was done only to diffress government; but that if even a majority of such freeholders had figued petitions, without any influence or folicitation, they were only to be considered as the acts of a rabble, and ot an ignorant multitude, incapable of judging.

Such

OF EUROPE. HISTORY [6t

charges drew from the en in opposition, a spirited of the part they had taken the to the petitions, and of timents which they delito their conflituents: they er to their conflituents an of their conduct in par-, to give them their advice icion, when afked, in any hat related to their interests, meafores that were inbyertheir rights, or dangerous conflication. That in the inflance, they did not bunt ers fought them; for the that the unprecedented deof the majority on the Midelection was known, every freeholder in the n, was ftruck with the arming apprehensions. Sesely acknowledged, that they the meetings of the free-, whenever they were inad thought it their duty fo and to give them every Estance in their power to a redrefs of the injury done L. In confequence of fome threats that were thrown the other fide, they boldly their figning the petitions, red their opponents to putats in execution.

charges of meeting, and , and speaking, which had entioned by a great lawyer ider method, were ridicu-

was the language, belides other method people communicate sporobrious epithets, that their fentiments? It was observed, een wifer not to use, drawn that it had been infiguated, that the violence of party, and our grievances are imaginary, beand eagerneis of debate. Caule they are such as the pealants or artificers of Devonshire and Yorkshire would not immediately feel, nor perhaps discover till they felt. But if those who see opprefion in its diffant, though certain approach 4 if those who see the ed that they were bound subvertion of liberty in its cause, are always few, does it follow that there are never approaches to opsubversion of liberty? If the few who can and do discover effects in give them the earlieft notice their causes, open the eyes of others; if those who see the rights of clection invaded in Middlefexacquaint the graziers and cloathiers, in remote counties, with their minions or petitioners; the interest in the event, and its consequences, are they for that reason. leaders of a faction, and actuated by personal and selfith views ?

> As to the ensjority of gentlemen of large fortune, not having figued the petitions, the last was disproved in some inflances, in which it had been afferted; it was befides obferved, that many gentlemen were much influenced; that the justices of peace were immediately appointed by the crown; and that no body of men could be under greater influence than the clergy, yet that fome of their even had figured the pentions. It was afted if the onlic of the freeholders were of no accounty if their opinion was of no weight? and it was afferted, that they were that respectable body of men, who alone were superior to all menser, all fear, and all influence.

It was faid, that the petitioning id it was asked, in what counties, cities, and towns, were, in respect to opulence and number of inhabitants, far superior to those that had not petitioned: and that they contributed more to the land-tax, which was now a test of free-hold property in this country, than the rest of the united kingdom. That it was well known what steps were taken in several other counties to prevent their petitioning; that in some they wanted leaders, others, great men, who were passly influenced themselves, had such power that no body dared to oppose it; that it was much in the sherist's power to prevent or damp the meeting of a county, which power had been exerted upon several occasions; and that where the disposition appeared prevalent, hasty measures had been taken at some of the assizes to prevent the grand jury from deliberating as a body.

But was it to be brought as a proof that there was no discontent, because all the counties did not petition? what must that government be, against which every member of the community lodges a complaint? That, indeed, the present complaints, along with being more general, were marked with particular circumstances, which sufficiently distinguished them from all others, and shewed they were the general voice of the people, as well of those who had expressed their fentiments publicly as of those who had not. That at other periods, and i me of the most critical in this country, petitions militated against petitions; the whigs petitioning one thing, the tories against it; two parties always oppoting one another; but in the present instance, neither the whole weight of power, nor the influence of the great, had been able to produce one opposite petition or address from the time the first was delivered. Some gentlemen, coming from counties that had not petitioned, declared that even there the discontent was general.

Many other matters, foreign and domestic, were brought on in the course of the debates of this day; the conduct observed in regard to the colonies, was particularly scrutinized; and the decision on the Middlesex Election was largely entered into: both these will come in course before our readers in their proper place. Other matters were of a temporary nature, but all served abundantly to vent that ill humour, which so strongly predominated on both sides.

The first Lord of the Admiraty was called upon to declare, whether France did not threaten a war, because some concessions were refused, which would have been derogatory to the honour of the British stag, if complied with. To this it was answered, that a French bearing a royal comfrigate, mission, arrived, and cast anchor in the Downs, in the same road where some of his Majesty's ships then were, without paying the usual salute. That the Lieutenant who commanded a floop of war of twenty guns, fent an officer on board to demand the customary respect, which the Captain of the French veiled refused: having, as he faid, no orders to pay it, and not being sufficiently informed of the right to demand it, he could not, nor would not risque the honour of his nation in a point of fo great consequence. The Lieutenant returned for answer, that his pretended ignorance should not exempt exempt him from paying that act of obedience to the British flag, which his nation had ever paid to k in the narrow leas, and with a francis, becoming the dignity of a British officer, declared he would ink him if he obstinately resused. The French Captain was peremptory, and the Lieutenant drew up along fide of his veffel, and fired a fhot into her; at the same time he fent the officer who had carried the message, to strike the slag, which the French Captain thought proper to suffer to remain in the same situation during his stay.

That this was the nature of the present dispute; the French Minifry had complained of this act; but seemed by no means disposed to carry things to extremities in support of their demand of redress, as they found no disposition in our court to relax in the claim to that ceremonial of submission, the exacting of which was the occasion of the dispute.

After long debates, the proposed amendment was rejected by a great majority, and the address passed in the usual form. The King observed in the answer to the Address, "That his interest and those of his people must ever be the same; and, that in pursuing such measures as are most 'conducive to their real happiness, they would give to him the truest and most acceptable testimony, of their attachment to his person and government.'

Among other particulars that distinguished the debates of this day, the Marquis of Granby, commander in chief of the forces, made a public recantation of the opinion which he had formerly given on the Middlesex election: he said, that it was for want of considering the nice distinction between expulsion and incapacitation, that he had given his vote for the sitting of a member, who was not returned, in the last session of parliament: and that he should always lament that vote as the greatest missortune of his life. That he now saw he was in an error, and was not assamed to make that public declaration of it, and to give his vote for the amendment.

A few days after the opening of the fession, a great number of resignations took place; Lord Camden religned the Seals; the Marquis of Granby, all his places, except the regiment of blues; the Duke of Beaufort, his place of Master of the Horse to the Queen; the Duke of Manchester, and Earl of Coventry, of Lords of the Bedchamber; the Earl of Huntingdon, his place of Groom of the Stole; and Mr. James Grenville, his office of one of the Vice Treasurers of Ireland. Mr. Dunning, the Sollicitor-General, also resigned that employment.

The whole of administration seemed to be falling to pieces. A violent panic prevailed; but the court, resolute in its purpose of governing by men who had no popular views or a nuclions, was determined to fight the battle, notwithstanding this desertion of so many of its principal commanders, Mr. Charles Yorke, was with much difficulty prevailed upon to accept the Seals. He died three days ofter. Every thing seemed to conspire against the court.

Sir John Cult, refigned his office of Speaker of the House of Commons, through his ill state of health, and was succeeded by Sir Fiet-

cher

cher Norton. This Gentleman was proposed by the Minister, who was supposed to conduct the affairs of government in the House of Commons, and another was proposed by the Gentlemen in opposition; this brought on, by a division, a new trial of the force on both sides, in which however the former had a majority of near two to one.

A few days after, to the general aftenishment of the nation, the Duke of Gratton resigned his office of first Lord of the Treasury, and was succeeded by Lord North, who was already Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Various causes were assigned, or rather furmiles formed, upon the motives of this relignation. Some imagined, that he had been over ruled on various occations in the cabinet. and did not chuse to make himself any longer responsible, for measures which he did not entirely approve. Others attributed it to the pure effects of fear; they faid that a violent opposits in was foreseen in both Houles; that the murniers and dilcontents of the people were become truly alarming; that impeachments were talked or, and even threatened; and concluded that he had not hardiness enough to stand the slock of thele different encounters. However this might be, the writers on the side of government after the reneated time, praises which they had best med on his public conduct, particularly his firmn is, now fuddenly changed their tone, and reproached him with a cowardly defertion in the time of danger. His Grace however publicly declared, that he would thil continue to support the measures of Alministration; a promise which he punctually salalled upon every occasion.

As the decision on the Middlesex election was the grievance, of all others, which the people principally complained of, and what apeared to the Gentlemen in opposition, as a mealure more dangerous to the constitution, than any that had been adopted for many years, so it became during this session the principal subject of debate in both Houses, and was as weil within, as out of doors, the great object of public Though it was foon attention. found, that there was no prospect of rescinding the former vote of exclusion, it was still thought that some concession would have been made to quiet the minds of the peopie; and that whatever realous might particularly determine a perseverance in support of that single act; as the principle on which it was founded, was (whether right or wrong) deemed so alarming an invalion of the rights of the freeholders, it would be either effectually guarded against, or totally gives up for the future.

i he House having resolv-30th ed itself into a grand committee on the state of the nation, a motion was made, That in the exercise of its juritdiction, it ought to judge of elections by the law of the land, and by the custom and practice of parliament, which is part o' that law. This was understood to be the leading proposition to a string of resolutions, that were to lead to a condemnation of the principles of the determination in the The manner Middlesex election. of putting this beginning was full of paramentary skill; the question being conducted by an experienced and able Member, Mr. Dowdef-

well,

ISTORY OF EUROPE. [650

truth of the propodenied, a monfirous power would be aftriament. If it was ther propositions rethe determination of ald follow, connected perhaps equally hard

If got rid of for the previous question, it again to torment them

efore, after admitting mied the necessity of ch a refoldtion, which e might suppose that ected on its own acts: ared an amendment, at once put an end f their ever changing or giving way to the which was, that the ds thould be added to And that the judghouse in the case of , was agreeable to the id, and fully authorizractice of parliament. iment was totally fubprinciples upon which as founded, it was acpofed with great videbates renewed with ; till at length upon e numbers being 224 quettion with the ais cattried; and being to a public refolution, ecome a full confirmaerm r decidon on the ection, it put a final pes of those, who fill the former determihat fubject would have ty upon this question, ver so great, as it had spon other occasions;

and a motion was made in the fame committee next day... That by the law of the land, and the known law and customs of parliament, no perfon, eligible by common right, can be incapacitated by vote or resolution of that house, but by act of parliament only. In the course of the debates upon this question, a motion was made to adjourn the committee; but this proposal not being seconded was dropt; other matters were however called up which interrupted the debate, and it was paffed over wishout coming to a division.

Nor was the affair of the Middlefex election, lefs agitated in the house of Lords, where a great debate arofe upon it at the opening of the fellion. Upon this occasion, a great law Lord, as well as high officer of flate, whose opinion had been long wished for, and was held in much estimation by the public. pronounced it decilively against the measures pursued upon that election. This public dif-pprobation, befides the great weight it carried, from the particular circumstances of flation and character, was rendered more effective, at least out of doors, by the uncommon energy of the terms in which it was delivered: He declared, that he confidered the decision upon that affair, as a direct attack upon the first principles of the conflitution; and that if in the judicial exercise of his office, he was to pay any regard to that, or to any other fuch vote, palled in oppolition to the known and effablished laws of the land, he thould look upon himself as a traitor to his true, and as enemy to his country.

This public avowat of an opinion, fo contrary to the conduct, if not to the views of administration, was [B] considered confidered as a total defection, and seemed to carry a most threat refented as a defertion from that aspect towards it: nor could fide. It had however been precedministry perhaps have subsist equal circumstances, at almo ed, on the same day, by a similar declaration relative to the Middleother period. fex business, on the part of the Earl of Chatham; who now seemed disposed to recover, that almost boundless popularity which he once possessed, and which, in consequence of a subsequent conduct, he had in a great measure lost. We have before seen, the neglect and indifference with which this nobleman had been treated, by that administration, which was generally supposed to have owed its existence to him; and in all cases of election.

in consequence of which, and of his finding that the line of public sonduct which he had laid down, was broken through, and his opinion continually over-ruled, he first resired from public bulinels, and, upon an additional cause of disgust, at dength totally refigned.

He now emerged from that retirement, which was but ill suited, either so his habit of life or dispofition, and seemed, in spite of infirmity, to have recovered his former vigour and spirit. The incapacitaking power assumed by the House of Commons, was loudly and totally condemned by him, and the whole management in the affair of the Middlesex election, Everely cenfured. The censures upon this subject, were not however more heavily placed, than those which he soon afterwards passed, upon the general conduct, measures and views of administration, which he condemned in the krongest terms; and has fince sealed his disapprobation, by a constant and maiform opposition to them. Such a defection and oppo-Stion, in the present touering and disjointed state of administration,

A motion was made some after (by a noble Marquis had lately prefided at the be public affairs) similar to that we have just recited to have the subject of debate in the house; the design of which v procure a declaratory resol that the law of the land, as established customs of parlis were the sole rule of determi

Long debates enfued upo question, in the course of much of the same ground wa over on both fides, which w formerly fhewn to have been upon this subject; and the was at length over-ruled by a majority. The oppolers of question, having obtained this of their strength, were resol exert it to advantage: and the same principle, that pro the amendment to the late 1 in the other house, determi país such a resolution, as preclude all further attempts same nature in this. was accordingly made late at any relolution, direct indirectly impeaching a jud of the house of commons, matter where their jurisdic competent, final, and com would be a violation of the tutional right of the con tends to make a breach betwee two houses of parliament, an to a general confusion.

The assonishment excite the hardiness that ventured | meature of to extraordinar

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [674

, formed for a time to abforb e powers of opposition. It aid, that this motion included under of their most andoubted, , necessary, and facred rights ; wader as injurious to the cole body of the people, to their Contatives, and to the crown, was totally subvertive of the sity and digelty of that houle. the furrender of rights and rs, which were not given for own particular advantage, but ly as a confitutional truft, to servited for the benefit of the le, and the preferration of their and liberties, would be an act wachery to the conflitution. is would be in effect a decisa, that if the H, of C. were y of the greatest exorbitancies, to trample upon all the rights e people, and to subvert the s law of election; that eyen in a critical emergency of the itation, the people are to deof any relief whatfoever, from nade of direct or indirect inrence of the Lords. That th it is generally true, that or house ought lightly and anly to interpole, even an opiepon matters which the conion has entrafted to the jurifm of the other, it is no left that where, under colour of icial proceeding, either houle aces to itself the powers of the legillature, and makes the which it professes to declare, elser not only may, but ought ert its own rights, and those ? people. That by the prefent ition, this conflictional conwould be given up, which house, as appears by ancient nodera precedents, had always had daidy ; beliggons had be been also exercised by the other spon critical occasions, and for the purpose of which, the legislature had been divided into separate branches, that they might operate as mutual checks, and each be refirained from exorbitance by the interpolition of the others.

That the discontents of the perple, which are alledged as a motive for this measure, arise from the injuries they have received, and should be the firongest reason to induce the Peers, who are the hereditary guardians of their rights, to thew their confiant attention to their welfare, by a timely interpofition in their favour; thus by their healing mediation, to make up the unhappy differences between them and their representatives, and reflore that harmony and confidence which are absolutely necessary for the public happiness and safety. That by this resolution, they not only refuse to fland by the people at prefent, and renounce the power of doing it hereafter, even if they were to fuffer the most grievous injuries; but they also abdicate their sacient and unquedioned province and duty of being the hereditary council of the crown, rendering themselves unable to give their advice in a point, in which of all others, the crown may fland moft is need of the wifdom and authority of that house. And that it was as derogatory to their dignity, as it was contrary to their duty and interest, to make such a surrender of their rights, without at least the bolding of a previous conference with the other; to discover whether they were inclined to admit a correspondent immunity from interposition on their parts, in matters within the jurifdiction of the Peers.

[a] 3 Grent

*68] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

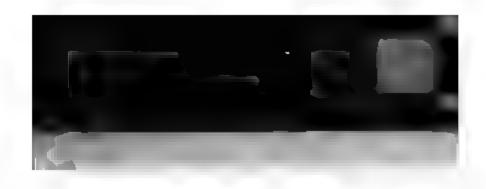

Great objections were made, to the time and manner of introducing and conducting this question. That a resolution new in matter, wide in extent, weighty in importance, involved in law and parliamentary precedents, should be moved at midnight, after they were spent with the fatigue of a former long debate; that an adjournment of only two days, to enable the Lords to consult the journals on so important a matter, should be refuled; and that an immediate division should be pressed; were represented as proceedings altogether unparliamentary and unjust; by which every possibility of debate is precluded, and all argument and tair discussion suppressed.

The principal stress, in support of the motion, was laid upon the necessity of preserving a good understanding between the two houses. This was inforced, by the licentioufness of the people, and the seditious spirit of the times. faid that in the present circumstances, it particularly behoved all the legislature, to draw together in the closest manner; as nothing less than their most cordial and intimate union, could support legal government, and prevent the madness of the people, from precipitating themselves into a state of anarchy and contusion.

The right of interference was called in question, or denied. It was said, that it was unusual and irregular in either house of parliament to examine into the juproceedings of the other; and as these decisions cannot be a into question by appeal, the to be submitted to without an amination eliewhere, of the ciples on which they are fou That in the present instance, an interference would be a and most alarming invasion (rights of the people, who ar jealous of their privileges to the Peers to meddle with t and that as the Peers are not allowed to interpose in the el of a fingle representative, what colour of pretence can assume a power of sitting in ment upon the whole body presentatives, and pronouncithe choice of every elector i kingdom?

The question being repe and eagerly called for, an enput to the debate by a division the motion carried by abou fame majority, that had reject These two question former. productive of two of the fle and molt remarkable protest we have met with, which wer ed by forty-two Lords. of these, the protesting Lords; themselves to the public, the will avail themselves, as far them lies, of every right and power, with which the const has armed them, for the good whole, in order to obtain ful for the injured electors of Britain.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [69

CHAP. VIII.

for disqualifying certain officers of the revenue from voting for the ion of Members of parliament: apposition to it: the motion over-t. Civil lift. Repeal of part of the late revenue all, for imposing to in the colonies: duty upon tea continued. All for regulating the vedings on controverted elections. Landon remonstrance: great debates: tops to his Majesty.

JRING the fitting of the committee on the state of the nation, a motion s. was made to bring in a Bill, for disqualifying s officers of the sevence from for members of parliament. gentlemen, who supported notion, fet out by shewing ull produce of the Customs stife at the time of the revo-, together with the little sility that then appeared of Hing to the prefeat enoramount of ax millions flerto this they attributed the cion of the patriots of that ho, if they had forefeen the titutional weight that muth een thrown into the fcale, on s of the crown, by the apent of officers for the colof fo valt a revenue, would, tadly, have taken proper iectual measures to prevent agerous influence, which it ford, in the election of remives for the people.

as observed, that the chief in the collection of these s, had been disqualified by arliament from utting in the of Cammons; and that the me reasons held for disqualifying the inferior officers from returning members to fit there. The danger arising from the influence, must be the fame in both cases. It was declared, that the motion was not made to diffress or weaken administration; and those who now supported it, faid they would do the fame in office as well as out. They faid, that, the great object of a minister in this country, was not fo much the procuring of the voice within doors, as it was to gain the confidence and opinion of the people without; that he may shuffle on for a little time by the aid of a majority in his favour there; but if the majority of the people were against him, he could never obtain power, with permanence and honour; he could neither be respectable abroad, nor useful at home. The proposed measure would, therefore, instead of weakening administration, give it the most effective strength; and a majority in the house, would be a pledge of a majority in the nation: [f the minister's measures were good, they would meet with a most effectual support; and if bad, no friend to his country could with that they were supported at all. No minister, that protesses to have the public $[E]_3$ good in view, can pretend, conlistently with such profession, that any measure tending to produce a real representation of the people, can impede his designs; therefore, those who oppose this motion, must profess to adopt measures, which a free representation would not approve.

It was said, that it became absolutely necessary to take some measures to quiet the minds of the people; that there was no doubt, but the proceedings of last year, which had caused so much uneasiness throughout the nation, were, by this time, safficiently segretted on both fides of the house; and that a measure that led to an equal representation, was, in the present circumstances, peculiarly calculated to restore quiet and good humour among the people; that, independent of every other confideration; the influence of the crown upon the electors in their choice of representatives, had the most alarming and fatal tendency; and that if Charles the First had had the same power in his hands to manage and govern the boroughs, he must have succeeded in his defign of enllaving the nation.

Objections having been made to the disfranchising of so great a number of people, it was answered, that it would not be the taking away of a franchise, it would only be a suspension of it: let him that prefers his franchise to his place, quit his place, and his franchise will return. Can it be pretended that officers will not be found for the cuttoms and excise, because such officers are deprived of the franchise in question? The right of sixting in parliament, is as valuable a franchise as the right of voting for a member to fit there Many offices disqualify for a seat in parliament; yet are these officer fought for with such earnestness, that members frequently even go out of parliament to obtain them. Can it then be pretended that it is unjust to separate the possession of a franchise from the possession of a place? or, that a man who knowingly and Voluntarily accepts a place from which a franchise is separated, has a right to complain for not bringing his franchise into place along with hith. That the influence of the crown, in the prefent inflance, was so glaring, that it did not admit of a question; that there could be no influence fo dangerous; and that there were many boroughs which the in officers of the revenue had a very great share in the elections; and it was too much to expect, that they would follow their free opinion, or their natural affection, against the will of a minister, on they were dependent for daily bread. Members elected by cultom-house officers, are therefore the representatives of the minister, not of the people; and are representatives that will certainly adhere to the interes, and obey the instructions of their constituent.

On the other side, it was said, that the bill, which was the object of the present motion, was wholly unnecessary. That as the law stands at present, no person in the customs, excise, or post-office, can intermeddle by persuasion or dissuasion in the voting for representatives in parliament, under very heavy penalties. The cruelty of depriving so great a number of people of their franchises, was expectated patiented upon; that it was a fileration, and that they were not new ready for such a motion; that it feemed in its consequences to drike at the liberty of the subject, and that no man could tell where bills of disqualification might stop.

That bendes, the motion itself feemed to be irregular; prior refoliations should have been propofed in the committee, to warrant bch a proceeding, and to shew its expediency, in the nature of heads of a bill, so as that the matter and defign of it might have been fully understood; but as it stood at present, the motion might perhaps extend to officers in the army and my; that no evidence had yet been brought of the undue influence of the crown; and that infinuations and proofs were to be confidered as very different matters.

The debates upon this occasion, as had usually been the case of late, were carried on with great warmth, and were branched out into a number of other subjects. Those diffinguished by the name of Tories, or Country Gentlemen, who had been for some time regularly engaged in support of administration, were reproved for their oppostion to this bill, as inconsistent with all their professions. It was affirmed, that the party had formerly brought in and supported a bill of a fimilar tendency, if not the very same, with that which they now opposed. On their part, they reproached the Whigs with taking such measures as tended to public confusion, and that in supporting this ministry they supported government itself: the esection being at length put, the motion was rejected by a very confiderable majority.

We have seen last year, that upon the grant made for the difcharge of the large debt contracted by the civil lift establishment, a promise had been obtained from administration, that as it was too late in the session to prepare the papers and accounts then required for the inspection of the House, relative to the expences of that department, and the debts incurred by it, they should, however, be prepared and ready to be laid before it at the ensuing meeting. Some of these papers being now before the House, a motion was made for an account of the civil list expences, from the 5th of January, 1769, to the 5th of January, 1770.

It was said, in support of this motion, that the civil list revenue, if misapplied, instead of maintaining the dignity of the crown, ferved only to beliege it with paralites; and in the place of promoting induitry, or arts, to subvert the freedom of the people. That though the funds allotted for this purpose, were fully adequate, not only to every necessary, but to every liberal expence, that was requilite to support the dignity of the regal character: yet, neither the greatness of the fund, nor the known economy of the present times, were sufficient to prevent an enormous debt from being contracted, and the people from being applied to for more money, at a time when all the thinking men in the kingdom were of opinion, that they had granted too much already.

That necessary expences, must have been much more confiderable

 $[E]_4$ m in the late reign, than at the present time; that the Royal Family was then grown up, and consequently demanded larger allowances: the jetries to the contineut, however expedient, were frequent, and at all times expensive; and no body would presend to fay, that magnificence was not as well understood, and perhaps better supported than at present; yet, the late King not only lived within the limits of the civil lift, but left a sum of 170,000 l. at his decease, which came to his present Majesty, and had been wholly faved from that revenue.

That as the people are now liable, from the lately established precedent, to be called upon for every occational deficiency in the civil list, it was therefore necessary to know the expences of the last year, and in what manner the public money had been disposed. That it was neither intended nor wished, to limit the crown to a stipend inadequate to its real dignity and greatness. On the contrary, if it appears upon enquiry, that the money has been expended in the advancement of useful arts, or the encouragement of liberal sciences; if it has been given to relieve the wants of the truly necessitous, or applied to reward the merits of the truly deferving, the promoters of the enquiry, will be the first to admire and applaud, such noble acts of benevolence, and real magnificerce—But if, on the contrary, it his been lavished upon the prorig to; it it has been squandered ugen these parricides, who are ic king the ruin of the unhappy con try, whole generofity poured it terch for nobler purposes; if, while resulting from the virtues, it has been employed to destroy the happiness of the people; it was their duty to remark with severity upon so scandalous a misapplication, and to prevent it, if possible, for the suture. That if it has been properly disposed of, there can be no reason to sear an enquiry into the manner, if improperly, it becomes doubly a duty to make the discovery, because the honour of the crown is not only concerned, but what is of still greater importance, the prosperity of the nation.

To this it was answered, that if an application had been now made, for an additional fum of money to make good any deficiency in the civil list establishment, an enquiry into the causes of it, would be nztural and justifiable, and it would be but reasonable, that the minister, in such a circumstance, should give satisfaction as to the excels, and shew the reasons why the provision was not sufficient; but, that until such a requisition was made, it would be untimely, improperdifrespectful to the crown, and unjust to enter into any examination of the royal expences. That a certain specified sum of money is allotted annually for the support of the civil list, and that it is not even pretended, that while the expences are confined within the stipulated sum, there can be the minutest pretence for scrutinizing the difbursements. How then is it known, that there has been the smallest excess in the course of the past year? how is it known, that a shilling of it has been improperly applied? or how is it even known, that there may not have been a confiderable faving made in the expenditures?

That

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [73*

t the argument brought on her fide, to prove the neof an enquiry, because a fum had been voted last year ily a deficiency, had quite a at effect from what it was ed for; that as it had been granted freely, without any y, it was a proof of fuch ince in the House, and of ing convinced, as well that emand was reasonable, as ne money would have been ly applied, that it precluded motive that could be urged a enquiry at prefent. That now become the popular of language, to charge, or ite, every act to be the effect ruption, and to arraign the ples, or call in question the indency of the reprefenta-

but that, however the ing of these notions may · the purposes of party, or rticular men, no person, in ber senses, could imagine, he H--- of C-s could ilty of a perfidy to its conts, or would wantonly lavich thole trealures to destroy, are notoriously collected to te, the happiness of the peot upon the whole, as the ift is entirely the revenue of own, the crown has a right to : of it at will. If future apons are made for additional :s, the expenditure may then mined with propriety. That are nine years accounts now upon the table, and the acnow demanded, even if to be brought in, being for inspection this session. It was therefore hoped that the motion would be rejected, and that all enquiries into the civil lift expences fhould be waved, till future aids were applied for.

The minister, who had been called upon to pledge himfelf, that in his time, the expenditure of the crown should not exceed its income, refused to engage absolutely; but promifed, that he would advise the greatest exconomy to be used in every department, and that the difbursements should be so cantiously attended to, as not to exceed the flated revenue, except where the utility of the excess would be so evident, as to make it certain of approbation. This motion of opposition had the fate of the rest.

Nothing had yet been done in the affairs of the colonies; but a petition having been now prefented by the American merchants, fetting forth the great losses they sustained, and the latal effects of the late laws, which, for the purpose of railing a revenue in the colonies, had imposed duties upon goods exported from Great Britain thither; the ministry March c.

thought it proper to bring in a bill, for the repeal of for much of the late act, passed in the feventh of his present Majesty, as related to the imposing of a duty on paper, painters colours, and glass; the tax upon tea, which was laid on by the fame act, being Rill to be continued.

The motives assigned for the bringing in of this bill, were the dangerous combinations which rily made up, not for a thefe duties had given birth to r day, but for an unusual beyond the Atlantic, and the difcould not possibly be ready fatisfaction they had created at home, among the merchants who traded to the colonies; which made this matter an object of the most Terious confideration. It was remarkable, upon this occasion, that the minister condemned these duties in the gross, and the law by which they were founded, as absurd and preposterous, that must astonish every reasonable man, how they could have originated in a British legislature; yet, notwithstanding this decisive sentence, proposed a repeal of but a part of the law, had still continued the duty upon tea; lest they should be thought to give way to the American ideas, and to take away the impositions, as having been contrary to the rights of the colonies.

On the other fide, it was moved to amend the motion, and that the act, which laid on these duties, should be totally repealed. this it was objected, that the colopies, instead of deferving additional instances of tenderness, did not deserve the instance then shewn, for their resolutions became more violent than ever; that their affociations, intead of supplicating, proceeded to dictate, and grew at last to such a height of temerity, that administration could not, for ita own credit, go as far as it might incline, to gratify their expectations; that was the tax under confideration to be wholly abolished, it would not either excite their gratitude or re-establish their tranquility; they would fet the abolition to the account, not of the goodness, but of the fears of government, and upon a suppoution that we were to be terrified into any concession, they would make fresh demands, and rife in their turbulence, inflead of returning to their duty. Experience fatal experience, has proved this to be their disposition. We repealed the stamp-act to comply with their defires; and what has been the confequence? Has the taught them obedience; has our lenity inspired them with moderation On the contrary, that very lenity, has encouraged them to insult our authority, to dispute our rights, and to aim at independent government.

Can it then be proper, in sech circumstances, while they deay our legal power to tax them, to acquiesce in the argument of illegality, and by the repeal of the whole law, to give up that power? Thus, to betray ourselves, out of compliment to them, and through a wish of rendering more than justice to America, retign the coatrouling supremacy of England.-By no means; the properest time to exert our right of taxation, is when the right is refused. To temporize is to yield, and the nuthority of the mother-country, if it is now unsupported, will, in reality, be relinquished for ever.

It was faid, that there was great stress laid, both within and without doors, upon the advantages of our traffick with America, and that the least interruption of the cultomary intercourse, was held up in the most terrifying colours to the kingdom; but that there were the best reasons to believe, that the affociations not to buy British goods, would speedily destroy themselves; for the Americans, to distress us, would not long per-

(CAGE

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

m injuring themselves; they fion. ady weary of giving an adprice for the commodities e obliged to purchase; and I the hardships, under which y their commerce grouns, I obviously their interest not imence manufacturers. It owed to be true, that our to America had tallen very flace; and that in the year they exceeded those of 1769, prodigious turn of 744,000 l. nounting in the former to 200 l. and in the latter, only 14.000 l. but this great difion was accounted for, by ag, that the non-importauch enfued, being then forethe importers, they prefor it, by laying in a double y of goods.

o the partitular duty to be ied upon tea, it was faid, e Americans had no reason I fault; because when that d, another was taken off, obliged them to pay near a in the pound upon an avewhereas the prefent only imthree-pence; therefore, as a in this article feels an eafe. -peace per pound, the canoperly accuse us of opprefrecially as every fession has been productive of material ages to her, either in bounee-ports, or other confiderduigences.

he other fide, many of the l arguments which we have ly given upon this subject, to the right and the expeepeated, and the whole prois with regard to America of the feverell animadver-

The minister observed, that the taxes were abfurd-How came he to support the administration that imposed them? How came he not to have discovered this absurdity earlier? All the world had been fentile of it, and the repeal of the act had been frequently pro-poied. That repeal was refused, as they were refolved not to relax in favour of America, whilk America denied the right. Has America acknowledged it? Have they yet departed from their combination? The ministers (faid they) condemn the concessions of their predecessors; yet they begin themfelves by concession; with this only difference, that theirs is without grace, benignity, or policy; and that they yield after a vexationa firuggle. I hat every reason given for the repeal of a part of this act. must extend, not only with equal, but with greater force to the whole, That the only cause affigued for not repealing the whole, was to preferve the preamble, because in maintains the right of taxing the Americans; an argument totally futile and ridiculous, as there are two positive laws declaratory of that right, and there are many other taxes at this moment existing, in exercise of the right, so that as the mischiess occasioned by the act in question, have at length been acknowledged by the other fide, no abfurdity can be more glaring, than their pretence for making only a partial repeal.

That a partial repeal, initead of producing any benefit to the moof our levying taxes, were ther-country, will be a real grievance; a certain expence to ourfelves, as well as a fource of perpeeiterated, and became the tual discontent to the colonics. By continuing the triffing tax upon tea, while we take off the duties upon painters colours, paper and glass, we keep up the whole establishment of the cuitom-houses in America, with their long hydraheaded trains of dependants, and yet cut off the very channels through which their voracious appetites are to be glutted. In fact, the tea duty will by no means answer the charge of collecting it, and the deficiencies must naturally be made up out of the coffers of this country, so that this wife measure of a partial repeal is to plunder ourselves, while it oppresses our fellow-subjects, and all for the mere purpose of preserving a paltry preamble, which is utterly useless and unnecessary.

That Parliament had plighted its faith to the East India company, to remove the duty of 25 per cent. from teas, in order that the company might be enabled to fell them upon terms equally low with the Dutch, whose moderation in price constantly obtained a preference at every market. That the 25 per cent. was indeed taken off accordingly, but what was done with one hand was undone by the other; a fresh duty was laid on the commodity, and laid in such a manner, that it must operate as an absolute prohibition to the sale of their teas through every part of the extensive continent of English America, where they were before in general estimation. That as a proof of this asfertion, the teas fent to America in the year 1768, amounted to no less than 132,000 l. whereas in 1769, they amounted to no more than 44,000 l. and probably this year, they will not exceed a quarter of that fum, as the proceedings here are hourly becoming more and more repugnant to the minds of the colonies, and as agreements have been lately entered into for the absolute disure of that article. In justice therefore to the East-india company, who have to confiderable a stake in the national welfare, and pay so liberally to the support of government, the promie made to them ought to be difcharged with the most punctual fidelity—that a discontinuance of the 25 percent. on their teas was not a ditenarge of that promise; it was only to be discharged by enabling them to fell upon terms as reasonable as the Dutch.

It was added, that as it feemed probable that a rupture between England and her old enemies, was at no great distance, it would be acting wifely in administration, to reconcile our domestic divisions, and to regain the confidence of our colonies, before such an event took That at the same time that the act in question was diametrically repugnant to all the principles of commerce, there was not the imallest plea of utility to be urged in its defence; that even upon the principle of a spendthrift, if immediate profit was only to be confidured, and all other confequences laid by, it had not that fordid recommendation; its whole produce, in its utmoß extent, not exceeding 16,000 l. a year, which was no more than fufficient to bear the expences that attended it. Let us then dismiss this pitiful preamble tax, and make the repeal total, unless the ministers would convince us, that a provision for their new custom-house instruments, beyond the Atlantic, is the only motive for this shameless profusion of the public treasure.

Such were some of the arguments upon

EUROPE. HESTORY O F

iterefting queftion; and irkable upon this occaeveral gentlemen in of-I the motion, even as it tood. The reasons given duct were chiefly thefe; cy on the part of pare general obstinacy of cans, and the violences in different parts of that particularly at Bofton. in for the amendment it was rejected by a z majority, the numbers to 142; the original afterwards carried with-30.

idst of this season of heat oo, which in a greater egree was extended to of the kingdom, a bill teft benefit to the connd importance to the nation, was brought into the House of Commons, member of the oppof though chiefly conhole adverse to adminin was also received by had always supported , and therefore happily a law. This bill was w All for regulating the of the House of Gemmons, ted elections, and is gowa by the name of the Bill, from the late Mr. enville, who brought it rufe. The minister opbill, with fome other o ased to be very prethis instance, however, nfaccefstul.

ne proper to lay before , a few of the causes that ed for the bringing in. ide it necessary to pais the better enabled to judge of its qtility.

Formerly, it was alledged that the trials of contested elections had been always by a felect committee, chiefly composed of the most learned and experienced of the house; and whilst this custom continued, the livigant parties, and the nation. at large, were generally well fatisfied with the decisions; but by degrees the committees of elections having been enlarged, and all who came having voices, a shameful partiality prevailed, fo that for a remedy, during the time that Mr. Onflow was speaker, the admirable order with which he conducted bufinels, induced fach as wifeed for a candid trial, to be heard at the bar of the house.

This method of determining contested elections, was, however, found to be very defective, and faulty in numberless instances, which was principally owing to the extraordinary number of the Judges, there not being to numerous a judicature in the world; and thefe not being bound by any tie, either by the giving of their oath, or their honour, to prevent any fecret bias from operating on them, were led by friendship or party connection, contrary to the rules of equity and right, and to the making of the most partial decisions. Such an unlimited discretionary power muß always be subject to numberless abuses; but in this particular instance, the greatness of the number gave a fanction to partiality and injustice; for they not only kept one another in countenance, but the crime was supposed to be divided into fo many shares, that while they were encouraged by the , by which they will be force of example to oppose the ed upon their injustice to be diminished in proportion to their numbers, and each at length thought his there of the guilt to be so inconsiderable, as scarcely to cost him a reslection.

•78] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

By this means, the suffrages of the people were wantonly sported With, and their most important and facred birth-right, that of chusing their representatives, violated with impunity, and without a possibility of redress. At the same time, the method of trying these questions at the bar, made them an insuperable obstruction to all other public bufinels; and especially in the first session of a new parliament, they took up so much time, that it was almost a matter of furprize how the house could attend to any thing elfe. Nor could any thing be more irksome to the members in genesal, than this mode of decision in election matters, as they were continually teized by applications from the contending parties for their attendance; and though their attendance was all that was avowedly required, the application tacitly included a requisition of their vote and interest; so that whatever part they took, even though they abfented themselves and gave no opinion, which was generally done when there was no immediate connexion, still it was a fource of diflike, if not of enmity: besides, though cultom and example had given a fanction to the acting contrary to conviction, and it was become so general, that there was frequently a kind of real necessity for going along with a particular party or connexion in opinion, the mind must, notwithstanding, frequently revolt at it, and regret that there was any occasion for such a necessity. To all which may added, that as it is always supposed that a minister cannot subsist in this country without a majority to support him in parliament, so in every case of contested election (and such cases might be multiplied in any degree that was thought proper) the representation must finally come into his hands; and instead of the members being returned by the free voice of the people, they would be eventually appointed by administration.

The plan of this bill was excellent, and was laid down upon the constitutional idea of trials by jury. Upon a petition being prefented, and a day appointed to hear the merits, and for the petitioners, witnesses, and council to attend, the house on that day is to be counted; and if one hundred members are not prefent, it is to adjourn until so many are assembled, at which time the names of the members is the house are in be put into fix boxes or glasses, to be drawn alternately, and read by the speaker, till forty-nine are drawn; the fitting members and petitioners may allo nominate one each. Lifts of the forty-nine are then to be given to the fitting member, the petitioners, their council, agents, &c. who, with the clerk, are to withdraw, and to strike off one alternately, beginning on the part of the petitioners, till the number be reduced to thirteen; who, with the two nominees, are to be fworn a select committee, to determine the matter in dispute. This select committee is impowered to fend for persons, papers, and records; to examine witnesses, and to determine finally: and the hopse thereto confirm or alter the re-

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [79°

rent which took place a few mr, as it renewed all the I debate within doors, so it ew force to the ill humour content without, and begeneral subject of discussion set the kingdom. This address, remonstrance, and of the livery and corporabe city of London, in coml affembled, to the King; for the diffolution of parand the removal of evil A piece as remarkable reedom and boldness of the ats which it conveyed, as extraordinary terms in they were expressed; and and like, in its confequentave been productive of the icat, and perhaps dangerires.

g other passages in this ance, it was afferted, that 'jodge removeable at the of the crown, had been . from his high office, for g in parliament the laws conflicution. That under : fecret and malign influvhich through each facdministration had defeated sod, and suggested every ation, the majority of the of C-s, had deprived de of their dearest rights. · decision on the Middleon, was a deed more ruito consequences, than the of thip money by Charles . or the dispensing power H—— of C——s, than without a legal Prince upon the throne. That representatives of the people are effectial to the making of laws; and there is a time, when it is morally demonstrable that men cease to be representatives. That time is now arrived, the present H—— of C——s do not represent the people.

It was faid, in the answer, which has been deemed by fome to have been uncommonly harsh, that the contents of the remonfirance could not but be confidered, as difrespectful to Majetty, injurious to the parliament, and irreconcileable to the principles of the con-The remonstrance was flitution. delivered by the Lord Mayor, who was attended by the theriffs and other city officers in their formalities, together with a few of the aldermen, and a great body of the common council; the cavalcade of coaches being attended by a prodigious concourfe of people to St. James's, whose shouts of approbation nearly thook the adjoining fireets; a circumftance that did not, leffen the indignation and animolity of thole, who being thoroughly fatisfied with the meafares of government themselves, confidered the whole proceeding, as the effect of faction, rior, and licentionlinels.

A motion was made on the following day, for an address, that a copy of the remon-flrance, as well as of March 15.

his Majefty's answer, of thip money by Charles should be laid before the houss. or the dispensing power This motion was vigorously opposite by James the Second. A fed, The debate was long and violate must vitiate all the lent, and strong threats were made ugs of this P —— t; for the use of on one fide, and as daringly use leg-slature itself can no urged to the execution by the other. The late Mr.

*80] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Beckford, who was then lord mayor, avowed the part which he had taken in the remonstrance, which he not only justified, but seemed to glory in. He said, it was he, who put the question in the court of common-council, and commonhall, and, though he had authority to put a negative upon the court of aldermen, in that case he would not do it: He was the great criminal, he said, and stood forth from the rest; the P——t was charged with corruption, the remonstrance faid so, the fact was now to be proved, and he was ready to abide the issue. He was seconded by the sherists, and one of the city members, who justified the remonitrance, and acknowledged share they had in it; said, that though they were the persons most immediately interested in any cenfure that might be passed upon it, they did not want to shelter themselves in concealment; they were ready and willing to enter into the merits of the remonitrance, either then, or at any other time; and were no less satisfied with regard to the justice, than the expediency of the measure.

Many other gentlemen, who opposed the motion, went upon ditferent ground, and several of the most moderate in apposition, who thought the principles right upon which the remonstrance was founded, highly disapproved of the terms in which it was conveyed. faid, that the House of Commons, being accused in the remonstrance, the motion tended to put the criminal in the place of the judge. That it was irregular to call for the remonstrance, without calling for the petitions, the neglect of which gave rife to it. That the house was not competent in the case, because it had no power but what it derived from its constituents.

The injustice of censuring any part of the people, for the exercife of a right, in which they are warranted by the conflitution; which is supported by the dictates of reason, the authority of precedents, and the politive declaration of our laws, was largely entered upon. Our sole consideration, is fimply, whether the people have or have not a right to petition; whether they are, or are not legally authorized to lay their grievances before the throne, wherever they imagine themselves oppressed; and whether all profecutions at law, for the exercise of this privilege, is not expreisly prohibited, in that pall diam of public liberty, the Bill of Rights.

Among the many bleffings arifing to the kingdom from the revolution, the privilege of complaining to the throne, afferted, not nequired at that time, without the danger of punifiment, is one of the noblet; the people in this respect are the fole judges of the necessity for petitioning.—!t is as much a part of their right, as it is a part of the royal prerogative to affemble Parliaments; or to exercise any other powerwarranted by the conflitution. As this is truly the case, with what studow of propriety, with what colour of realon, do we arrogate a liberty of examining their proceedings? with what countenance do we fly in the face of the laws, and conficiently affect that they facil be punished, for what the laws peremptorily declare, that they shall not even undergo a profecution? Even admitting, on the prefent question, that the people have been millaken,

that

HISTORY ΟF EUROPE. [81-

monfirance is as difrespectthe matter of it is unjult; the laws politively protheir right of petitioning, ir exemption from conferefecution, we are precludm every enquiry into their They may be indifcreet, ay be warm, they may be at ; but let us not be rafh, matable, and arbitrary. Let while we are so nicely atto the errors of others, ruth Ipable illegalities ourselves. wer is great-but the power aws is much greater. ey were to credit report; and d nothing elfe now before r any part of the proceeding, ser to the remonstrance, from me, did not fo much conay indecency in the remonas it feemed to firike at the petitioning itself, and supat the granting such petitiald be rainous to the con-. z which went not to the but to the subfrance of all itions; this evidently left the without any hope of redrefs; fequently the right of petifor a diffolution of Parliarecognized by the house, i in effect a dead letter. s observed, that one of the strors of lames the Second's was his punishment of the lithops for petitioning. effects .- The people may ary and oppression for a long int they will prefer annihichains. The prefent mea-:w, that the principle upon ey have erred, that there violated in the Middlesex election, eality no grievances to com- is to be supported in all its confe-, and that the manner of quences, and carried to its utmoft extent. The same spirit, which violated the freedom of election, now invades the declaration and bill of rights, and threatens to puwith the subject for exercising a privilege, hitherto undisputed, of petitioning the crown. The grievances of the people are aggravated by infults; their complaints not merely difregarded, but checked by authority; and every one of those acts against which they remonstrated, confirmed in the final refort, by a decifive approbation. In such circomflances, what are they to do? or rather, what is not to be dreaded from their desperation?

XIII.

The inexpediency, and perhaps danger, of fill increasing the public ill-humour and discontent, by taking violent measures against fo respectable a body, as the corporation and citizens of London, was particularly infifted upon; and the apprehended confequences, painted in the krongest colours. It was faid, that great city, had upon numberleis occasions, and in the most trying circumstances, proved herself the true friend to freedom; the undaunted supporter of justice, and the invincible champion of our glorious constitution.—A measure of this nature would at any time be extremely injudicious; put in a period like the present, was big with a thouland dangers. The metropolis is composed of the wealthiest citicauses must always produce zens in the British dominions, their number is great, their inflyence prodigious, and their proceedings are, in general, the rules of action for all the interior corporations in the kingdom. To brand them thereie rights of the people were fore at any time with a mark of ob-[I] loquy, would be to render an extenfive share of the people distaissied, either with the equity or moderation of government.—It is to make that very part of the community, to which in the hour of public exigence we sly for assistance, from which we supplicate our loans, and obtain the essential sinews of political strength, our declared and consirmed enemies; and out of a blind resentment to them, to commit a manifest outrage upon ourselves.

outrage upon ourselves. This would at any time be the consequence of offending the city of London: but in the present case, the evils are infinitely more complicated and alarming. To censure the citizens, for what nine-tenths of the whole empire confider as an act of the most exalted virtue, is to rouze the indignation of every honest subject in the British empire. It is to aggravate the fury of a discontent, already too pregnant with danger, and to open a scene of horror, that will not close perhaps, but on the total overthrow of the constitution. How then is it possible, that while the minds of the people are agitated almost to madness, any gentlemen can perfevere in a continued fucceffion of inflammatory measures, and hourly pour oil on the flame of that discord, which already blazes but too Sercely in this unfortunate country.

It was said on the other side, that though the right of petitioning was undoubted; law, reason, and necessity required, that the petitioners should be under the restriction of certain salutary limitations; that they should be instuenced by truth, and guided by decency; that the matter of the petitions should be real, and the manner respectful to the sovereign. That without these restrictions, the most treasonable matter, the most virulent libe the crown, or the confli might be covered by the fr name of petition; while M under that pretence, was lis he hourly infulted, and obli fubmit to the most groundles fures, and to fuffer the most ful reproaches. That und licence our foreign foes, or a meltic enemies, may at an itir up a multitude to comp grievances that never exit to make requifitions of th extraordinary, or moit dai tendency. That they may befeech the Prince to abdica pray that he may be pleased, to transfer his sc the expelled family; or if the reign should happen to cat prejudices, and thereby ac confiderable share of pop they may perhaps wish, in th long vehemence of their: ice him feated on an a throne; and in a constitution monstrance, like the present of debate, patriotically def not only to dissolve, but 1 hilate his Parliaments.

Thus our constitution totally destroyed, because no law to punish, no autirestrain, and no power what withholding the licentious petitioners; yet such must consequences in a state life every thing in the form tition was sanctified from mination of the laws; and count of its form, to be as a constitutional act of pr lt was faid that moders been much talked of, and mended; but that the no indignities which the hous late experienced, proceed

HISTORY OF EUROPE. [830

us of lenity and moderation; user's they would not punish, union of order supposed that ared not; hence in proporlenity on the one hand, liunes grew andacious on the

That they were hourly in the public prints, which ly trembled at the bare apson of their refentment, and es teemed with the groffest m their determinations. Thus a was at length rendered for cons, that the Livery of a, with the chief magistrate r head, had now the temenot only to folicit their difa, but to declare in direct e terms, that they are not the mentives of the people-That ation in such circumstances at of the question: that in of infinitely more danger w prefent, instead of supposat the maintenance of its goity was a dangerous meahat House looked upon a spizertion of its authority, to only the most noble, but the plitic conduct it could purfue. if they fubmit to the prefent infalt, and crouch under an : of to dangerous a nature, y their own dignity will be od; but the constitution de-, the whole body of the peogived at once of their reprees, and every act which has affed fince the time of elecift be utterly with at force. the fole question now was, r they were a parliament, or they were, what time could particularly necessary to eir authority, as the prefent, as Livery of London had ax'y declared at the throne cy were not. That if they were a House, they must prove themselves respectable; if they were not, they had no right to deliberate; their affembling must have been illegal. That much had been faid about the danger of irritating the people; but these gentlemen did not recollect, that the people of England were at prefent comprised. within them walls, and until their legal diffolution, could have no real existence as a body any where without them; that the nation-had cholen them as its agents for a term of years; that during that term they were virtually the nation. If they betrayed their truft, or proved unworthy of farther confidence, the people may discard them indignantly at the expiration of the term; but while they fat there, they were bound by and aniwerable for their acts.

That with regard to what had been thrown out about the feven Bishops in james the Second's reign; the cafe was not at all applicable: Their petition was entirely upon the point of religion, was couched in terms the most respective to the throne, and delivered with as much privacy as possible to the sovereign. Whereas the remonstrance in queftion, denies the authority of parliament, infults the throne, and is delivered with all the circumstances of tumultuous parade, that can be calculated to terrify the minds of the peaceable, and inflame the paifions of every mitguided member of the community.

After long debates, the motion was carried by a majority, of confiderably more than two to one. The papers being laid before the House, and the journals and other records examined, fresh debates arose upon a motion being made for an address to his Majesty, and another for the concurrence of the House of Lords to the address. These motions met with great opposition, and very long debates ensued. The legality of petitioning for a dissolution of Parliament was much discussed, and it was insisted, that it could not be illegal, to recommend the doing of a legal act.

[] :

*84] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The censure contained in this address, they alledged was conformable neither to the equity nor dignity of Parliament; not conformable to equity, because no body of men could be competent to pass a censure on those who accused them; and that if those who presented the remonstrance were not punishable at common law, they were not criminal, and if not criminal ought not to be censured: the address was not conformable to the dignity of Parliament, because it imputed an heavy crime, and proposed no fort of punishment; which was to shew a weak and feminine resentment, altogether unworthy of their fituation, and miserably short of the arguments that were used to support that meafure.

To the application for the concurrence of the Lords, it was objected, that such an act would preclude them from being judges, if any impeachment should afterwards come before them. Both the motions were however carried by a prodigious majority; and the address having received the concurrence of the Lords, at a conference, was accordingly jointly presented.

Great indignation was in the address, at the capter remonstrance, which was with being expressed in tertrary to that grateful and atter respect due to his with aspersing and calu one of the branches of the ture, and expressly denying gality of the present Parand the validity of its process.

The presenting of pet the throne was afferted to b at all times an undoubted ri free enjoyment of which w ed at the revolution and (fince; and it was with the concern, that the exercise portant and valuable a ri now feen to grofly perve being applied to the pur of preserving, but of over the constitution; and of p ing doctrines, which, if adopted, must be fatal to of the kingdom, and whic the subversion of all lawful ty. Thanks were returne answer made to the remo which was represented as proof of a determined perfe in adhering to the princip constitution. Some cenfu thrown out, against the suggestions of ill-designing and the unjustifiable exce few misguided persons, v in this instance seduced for duty; and the confidence the people in general, plauded and justified.

HISTORY EUROPE. O F 85*

CHAP. IX.

f affairs in Ireland, at the meeting of the new parliament. Augmentation affed. Privy-Council money bill rejected. Supplies raised in the al manner. Lord Lientenant's speech and protest; parliament prorogued. efiguences thereof. Metion made here for the Irish papers; rejelled. tion, and refolutions, relative to American affairs; over-ruled. Bill reverfing the adjudications relative to the Middlesex election. Debates the answer to the remonstrance of the city of London. Resolutions pro-led in the House of Lords relative to the colonies. King's speech. Parment breaks up.

Sicontent, occasioned a propothis fide, for a parliamentary tm. We have before feen the of the last parliament. ine hopes and expectations were formed in that kingdom, the passing of the offennial and the degree of popularity the prefent deputy had gainon the firength of that favour-More.

e great expences which at-4 the general election, bad that however abated their fa-

ion. The persons who held for many years there, thought Mant and unufual residence of rd Lieutenant, was intended for the deftruction of their and influence. A strong opa was prepared. But things see a placid outward form : and nothing appeared on the meeting of the new parliament but what probarmony and good humour, soules scemed to vye with ad gratitude to the throne, respect and regard to the Lieutenant. This season of

IM I late transactions in Ire- fundame was rightly judged to be land, having thrown that coun- the proper time, for the making to a flate of general diforder of another experiment to carry into execution the bill for the augmentation of the forces, which had by into the causes and nature failed of success at the breaking up

A mellage was accordingly fent, recommending this measure in the ftrongest terms from the throne, as a matter which his Majesty had extremely at heart, not only as neceffary for the honour of the crown, but for the peace and fecurity of that kingdom. This message likewife contained a promife from the throne, that if the augmentation took place, a number of effective troops, not less than 12,000 men, officers included, should at all times, except in cases of invasion or rebellion in Great-Britain, be kept within the kingdom for its better defence.

The propoled augmentation, was from 12,000, the former establishment, to 15,235 men, officers included; the strictest economy was promifed to be observed in this fervice. The augmentation was to ther, in their expressions of be made by an increase of the common men, without any additional corps or greater number of officers; and it was further proposed, that as the several general officers who now composed the military staff in that country, should happen to die or be provided for, the number should be reduced, and consist of no more afterwards than a commander in chief, and five general Officers. This promise was the more usefully applied, as the staff upon that military establishment was excessively loaded, and amounted nearly to 30,000 l. a year; and besides being encumbered with an unnecessary number of general Officers, most of these were absentees, who did no duty; and the number resident in the kingdom, were scarcely sufficient to hold boards, and to go through the other necesfary parts of the service.

[]]3

*86] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

A good many persevered in the opposition by which this augmentation had been lost in the former parliament. They faid that such a requisition seemed unusual and unnecessary in a time of profound peace. That the military establishment in that kingdom, had been long and justly complained of, for being conducted upon a most expensive, inessective, and ruinous fystem. The nation was already loaded with the enormous annual expence of near half a million sterling, for the support of a nominal body of troops of 12,000 men, of which almost one-fourth were commissioned and non-commissioned Officers; the number of regiments having been gradually increased from 25 to 42, with a prodigious increase of expence, without any addition to the number of effective men, or of efficacy to the military establishment. Notwithstanding this vast expence, which should at least have effectually provided for the security of the nation, what with the regiments that wend ployed abroad upon garrison and the great deficiencies number at home, the internal scarcely amounted to 8,000 n

Such a misapplication (public money (it was faid by who opposed the measure) therefore much more loudly i quiry and redress, than for grant. The public expences i country, loaded besides with a for their circumstances heavy incumbered with penfions, amount of near 100,000 L ant were already an intolerable l to the people; and much mor they can afford, while the ragements under which their merce labours are continued. however was the favourable fition of the majority at this t government, or such their & the necessity of the measure to the common defence, that no standing a strong opposition t and its being rather unp without doors, the Augmen Bill was carried through, and in a very few days.

This apparent union of ments, good humour and has between the Governor and g ed, was foon interrupted. ney bill, which had originat been framed in the privy-c was brought to the House of mons; a measure, which, in strictness legal, had been a matter of violent alterca the beginning of every parli at which time only it was u order to keep up a right c by the council under an Henry the VIIth, called Polaw, by which no bills are in Ireland, which have no first certified from the privy-

HISTORY OF EUROPE. 187*

It was afferted, that befides cient practice, the very last nest had passed such a bill, Il as the long parliament had preceded it: that it was xili of any ferious supply, but : matter of form, and that by iginal law, no difference was in the power of the council, n money bills and others. y the opposition now grown ajority, it was reprefented as rant a violation of their most al and inherent rights, that ld not possibly be admitted, a total facrifice of them. evident, they faid, that if sating of money as a free r the support of government, x vested in the Commons, taid no longer be confidered refentatives of the people; sat the power of conferring son the crown, and obtainenefits for the latter, being stally at an end, they could ger act as a medium to prethe connection, or support andence between them. That mers of a money bill are to fidered as the givers of the ; and that the referring only rmative or negative to the one, would be reducing them to the fiate of registers of licts of the privy-council. the privy-council represent a, nor body of men, and sently cannot tax the people: ry themselves are represented ament, where all taxes must te, and where they are cbound with all others, and fame authority.

The Bill was accord-1. ingly rejected; and in the vote for the rejection, afon affigued, was its not having originated in the House of Commons. This objection did not impede the national supply; another money bill was passed in the usual form, in the most liberal manner, and with the greatest unanimity.

The cordiality and unanimity shewn upon this occasion, by which they trusted folcly to the honour of government, and provided fully for all its necessities, before they proceeded to any part of the national butiness, greatly, as they faid, enhanced the merit of the act. The rejected bill provided only for the expenditure of three months, the prefent for the expences of two years, and the supply granted, amounted to 2,168,681 l. No inconfiderable fam, if we confider the circumflances of the country as they are commonly represented.

These two great points of government being obtained, in the augmentation of the army and the grant of the supplies, it was then thought the proper time to shew a resentment of the rejection of the money bill; an affront which had been (prudently, as was said by one side, meanly and fraudulently, by the other) dissembled, until Government was got on solid ground.

The Lord Lieutenant, in a speech which he Dec. 26. made to both Houses, after the greatest acknowledgments for the liberality with which they had to effectually supported government, suddenly changed his stile, and condemned in the flrongest terms, the rejection of the Privy Council money bill in the House of Commons, which he represented to be intrenching upon the rights of the crown, and entered a formal Protest in the House of Lords. Maisga [/] 4

, against that act of the House of Commons; and to preclude all debate upon the subject, or the posfibility of passing resolutions against this measure, as suddenly prorogued the Parliament to a long day.

Some notice of this design having been received before it was put in execution, a motion had been made in the House of Lords a few days before, that directions should be given to the Speaker, not to suffer any Protest of any persons whatsoever to be entered in the Journals, who was not a Lord of Parliament, and a Member of that House, and which was not relative to some bufiness that had been previously before the House, and wherein the protesting Lord had taken part with the minority, either in person, or This question being by proxy. over-ruled by a great majority, a strong protest was entered by the minority, which attempted to shew that the only two cases in point, which were those of the Earl of Strafford, and Lord Sidney, were either transacted in such times, or attended with such circumstances, as totally voided their being drawn into precedent, and that every such act was contrary to the rights, and derogatory to the dignity of the The Hou'e of Commons, before their breaking up, forbid the Lord Lieutenant's speech from being entered on their Journals.

In this manner were the languine hopes blasted, which had been formed upon the first meeting of the first limited Parliament. butiness had passed but a compliance with the requisitions of Government; all the national business was undone; the temporary laws which are renewed or altered at every tessions, whether relative to agriculture, to trade, to t plying of the capital with sions, to the preservation public fecurity, or the sup the public charities, were pired. The confernation, and discontent that follower great, and the whole kingd in a state of universal confut disorder.

This being a matter of to importance to escape the n opposition in the British ment: a motion was acco made, that the instructions Lord Lieutenant of that ki by which he prorogued the ment, might be laid before House. This motion was n feconded, but proposed to tended, by moving that papers relative to the Iril mentation Bill, should be a before them.

In the debates upon this many parts of the late cou Government, in the admin of the affairs of that count derwent the severest strictu was said, that having caje Parliament of Ireland out of fum of money, for the pur a military augmentation in of profound peace, and the perfectly constitutional then ceive it from the represent: the people; the money fooner received, than they a the right of the Comm granting it, and infifted t power of originating mon belonged entirely to Council: that admitting fo ment their own principl vernment had not a right the money, if Parliament a right to give it, and the either refuse the supply, acticized in the legality of the great. That the more the conduct of administration in this respect is emmined, the more it will be found perplexed, inconfisient, and tymnical: the Deputy, having tymnical: the Deputy, having buined the money, returns thanks to the two Houses for their liberality, and after he has politely complimented their munificence, be enters a Protest upon the Jourmals of the Lords, and informs the whole world that they were not authorized to exert it.

That the laws of Great Britain had been violated, and its dignity serificed, to deceive our fellowsubjects in the fifter nation out of their property; for that the promile which the chief governor had made to the Irish House of Commons, to induce them to content to the augmentation, viz. that 12,000 men shall be constantly fationed among them, was not ealy giving up the pretogative of the crown, but was also directly repegnant to two English statutes, by which the disposition as well as the command, of all the land and sea forces, are made inherent in the trown; but that by this promise, the spirit and obvious meaning of these laws is defeated, and the dispolal of the 12,000 troops is not virtually in the fovereign, but actu-'ally in the Irish parliament. That in whatever light this matter was confidered, whether as diminishing the Royal Prerogative for the purpose of artifice, or defeating the design of English Acts of Parliament, for the shameful end of deluding the fellow-subjects in Ireland out of a supply, in either case it was a matter that merited the krichest enquiry.

It was contended, that the law called Poyning's, is no authority for this violent procedure. law gives to the Privy Council the privilege of certifying parliamentary bills to this kingdom; but the privilege of certifying, by means includes the just authority of originating.

The conduct of a ministerial officer, who had declared in the Irish House of Commons, that the Privy Council money bill, was a fine for the renewal of parliament, was severely animadverted upon. It was faid, that this was an avowal of oppression and despotism in the extreme: that it was at once laying by the mask, and considently telling the subject, that he shall not possess his absolute right, unless he pays the minister for indulging him with it.

Upon the whole, it was said, that they were called upon by every motive, to enquire into the causes of the present deplorable state of their sister and neighbouring island, and as they were endowed with a coercive power over Ministers in every part of the British dominions, to give that redress to the people of Ireland which their own Parliament could not grant; and that they were even led by their interest to pursue those measures, which were at the same time evidently dictated by their justice.

On the other side, the necessity of preserving a due subordination in every part of the empire was enlarged upon; that a controuling power must be lodged somewhere; that the vast body of the British territories cannot subsist without a head; and that it is fitter for the various dependencies, which we have protected for so long a series of years, to obey our laws, than to think of dictating to their protectors. That it is amusing as well as surprizing, to see the very measures which are taken for maintaining the authority of this kingdom, pointed out by the opposition, as a degradation of its honour, and a sacrifice of the royal prerogative.

Various

That the reason of the parliamentary prorogation, was the folicitude of the very Ministers who are now reviled, to preferve the dependence of Ireland upon this kingdom. That the Irish House of Commons entered into resolutions contrary to Poyning's Law; into consequently resolutions which shook the foundation of our auzhority over Ireland, and therefore the Parliament was prorogued; and that the manner of the prorogation was warranted no less by precedent, than justified by reason. That the prorogation was unavoidable, and the Minister would highly merit an impeachment, if he had not urged the expediency and necessity of it.

That the charges of violating the laws of England, and relinquishing the royal prerogative, by the promise given to the Irish Parliaequally groundless. ment, was That the crown has, certainly, a right of disposing of the land and ica force as it pleases; and the crown, therefore, stations 12,000 men constantly in Ireland, agreeable to this right; yet the exercise of the right, and the actual execution of the English laws, is now faid to be repugnant to two English Acts of Parliament, and a relinquishment of the royal prerogative.

Great complaint having been made, that among the other laws of public utility, which had expired in Ireland, in consequence of the late prorogation, the tax upon hawkers and pedlars, which was appropriated to the fociety for the building and maintaining of Protestant Charter Schools, had also ceased, by which that excellent institution would be totally and irretrievably ruined; the Minister, upon this occasion, pledged himself, that any loss resulting to the incorporated fociety from that measure, should be made good from the privy purse. The question being at length put, the motion was rejected by a majority of more than two w onc.

The state of affairs in America had not yet been entered into, though they had been particularly recommended by the speech from the throne, and seemed to be one of the great objects, which required the utmost attention, and matures confideration of Parliament. account which had been received of the late alarming riot in Boston, between the soldiers and town's people, and the consequence that followed, of the two regiments that were stationed in the barracks there. being under a compulsatory necessity of retiring from the town and going to Castle William, without any order from Government for so doing, seemed to make this matter so urgent, as not to admit of any delay, before fome conclusive measures were taken upon it; and the time pressed the more immediately, as a speedy prorogation was the natural confequence of the season.

The Ministry, however, were very shy and tender upon this head, and

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

med to with rather to trust aporising conduct with the s, and the hope of profiting r difusion or accessity, than open a feries of discordant es, which, however the feparts might be defended by mediate plea of expediency time, could bear so critical enquiry, when compared and ed apon the whole.

ever this might have been nciple upon which American were suffered bitherto to lie st, notwithflanding the remdation from the throne, it y no means fatisfactory to who had opposed every part : condact of administration gard to America.

A motion was accordingly made for an addiels to the throne; fetarth the disputes that had among the feveral governors mmauders, in almost all the s, ance the appointment of mander in chief; that the is have been for fome time, e ftill, from this and other in a flate of the greatest r and confusion; that the of America com, lain of the hment of an army there, as up a military government se civil; and therefore prayhat all these matters may be dered, and fuch measures as would replace things upon a confitutional foots motion was introduced, by ing, that in the present cri-. ituation of affairs, they were ly called upon, to enquire he Ministers here, no less heir Officers there, have ma-

the prefent flame of diffention between the mother-country and her colonies. That in fulfilling this duty, they must not only confider the matter of fact, but the right of things; not only the terbulence of the Americans, but the cause of that turbulence; and not only the power of the crown, but the equity with which that power had been exercised.

This motion had the usual fine, of those made by the minority. It did not, however, prevent other-Reps upon the fame subject. A fee of refolutions were proposed, by which the whole ministerial system. for feveral years past, with relation. to America, was taken into confideration. All the contradictory inflructions to the Governors were canvaffed; and their inconfibency and ill effects pointed out. Taxes impofed - repealed - impofed again, and repealed again. Affenblies diffolved - called again; and suffered to fit and proceed to buffacfs, without difavowing or difcountenancing the measures which had procured the former diffolation. Promifes made to the affemblies, that certain duties should be repealed and taxes taken off; which were unwarrantable, of dangerous confequence, and a high breach of privilege; and that it was equally derogatory from the honour of the crown, and the freedom of parliamentary deliberations, to have its faith pledged to the performance of such promises. Troops sentdriven out - violence, and fubmission, alternately made use of. Treatons charged, adopted by Parliament, not proved, nor attempted to be proved; or if existing, not attempted to be detected and to unfortunately, as to kindle punished; an infult on the dignity of Parliament, and tending to bring either a reflection on its wisdom and justice, or to encourage treasons, and treasonable practices, by not carrying into execution the measures recommended by Parliament.

92] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

All these resolutions, which may be seen in the Votes of the House of Commons, were rejected by a great majority; nor did administration enter much into a discussion or refutation of the matter or charges The genewhich they contained. ral arguments of the turbulence of the Americans, the disposition of the colonies to disclaim all dependance on the mother-country, the necessity of supporting its authority and the dignity of government, and the right of the crown to station the troops in any part of the dominions; together with the necessity of their being employed to support the laws, where the people were in little less than a state of rebellion, were those principally made use of. There was nothing pleasant in the view of the conduct of American affairs; and administration aimed at getting rid of the discussion as soon as possible, and put a negative on, or postponed by previous questions, all these resolutions.

About the same time, a bill was brought into the House of Lords, by the Earl of Chatham, and read once, for reversing the adjudications of the House of Commons, whereby John Wilkes, Inq. has been judged incapable of being elected a member to serve in the present parliament: and the free-holders of the county of Wildlesex have been deprived of one of their legal representatives.

The history of the transactions alluded to, and some of the strongest arguments against them, were included in the preamble of this bill, which, besides the general arguments that we have already seen upon this subject, was supported upon the new ground, that the mode of informality before objected to upon this question, of its not being properly before the House, could no longer have any weight, as it was now introduced by a bill.

Much law, and many precedents were discussed, in the course of the debates upon this bill. Those who opposed the bill, founded their objections chiefly upon the competency, the exclusive and inherent right of the House of Commons, in its adjudications in all matters of that nature; and that their own late resolution had already decided the point, and confirmed the final right of determination to the other house. That however, exclusive of that resolution, such a measure would be illegal and unprecedent-That the whole time of both Houses had been nearly taken up during the session with this subject, and that as every determination had been against it, nothing could be more extraordinary than to find it again agitated.

Precedents were brought on the other side, to shew that such an interference had been practised by both Houses; and the expediency and even necessity of it in some cases, was urged upon the same principles, which we have before taken notice of in the debates upon the motion relative to this subject. The question was repeatedly called for, and being at length put, the bill was rejected by a great majority. A protest, signed by 33 lords, upon the same ground as the former, was the consequence of this rejection.

mcr.

A motion was made a few days after by the same nobleman, for a refolution to declare, that the advice which induced the late answer to be given from the throne to the remonstrance, &c. from the city of London, is of a most dangerous tendency; as thereby the exercise of the clearest rights of the subject to petition the throne for redress of grievances; to complain of the violation of the freedom of election; to pray a dissolution of parliament; to point out mal-practices in administration, and to urge the removal of evil ministers; has, under pretence of reproving certain parts of the said remonstrance and petition, by the generality of one compendious word, Contents, been indiscriminately checked with reprimand; and the afflicted citizens of London have heard from the throne itself, that the contents of their humble address, remonstrance, and petition, laying their complaints and injuries at the feet of their sovereign, as father of his people, is considered as disrespectful to himself, injurious to his parliament, and irreconcileable to the principles of the constitution.

To this motion it was objected, that both Houses had already addressed the throne with their thanks, for the very answer which it was now proposed to them to condemn; that such a proceeding would not only be repugnant to order, but repugnant to common sense; that the answer given to the city upon this occasion, was conformable to the answers given in several former reigns, which were specified, in similar cases; and that no cause could now be assigned in support of this meafure, which did not equally subsist at the time that this question had been agitated before.

On the other fide it was said, that as infallibility was not the lot of human nature, so it was no imputation on their understanding, nor degradation of dignity, to acknowledge an error; the constitution did not suppose their resolutions perfect; and experience continually shewed, that acts which were planned with the utmost circumspection in one fession, were absolutely necessary to be repealed in the next: yet this alteration in opinion is never considered as injurious, either to the accuracy of their judgments, or to the probity of their hearts. That it had been advanced with triumph, that the answer in question was similar to the answers given in the reigns of the Stuarts, to similar applications of their subjects for redress of grievances: but are these the princes that are to be held up as patterns to posterity? And are there no precedents suited to the present times to be found but in their reigns? There was a precedent at hand adapted to the prefent question, which, however it had not been thought proper to recollect; a precedent worthy of the man who established it. This was the case of the Kentish petition; in compliance with which, King William dissolved the parliament, to let the nation see he had no double game to play; and to shew, that as he had no interest separate from the interest of his subjects, all parliaments were alike acceptable to him. that were agreeable to the wishes of the kingdom. But at present, government seems delighted in opposing the wishes of the people. Ireland, after its money is taken away, is deprived of its parliament, though the nation is unanimous for its fitting; and England, where the general voice calls out for a diffusion, is to be bleft, against its will, by a continuance of its representatives.

*94] ANNUAL REGISTER, 2770.

The ministers were remarkably fient in the course of this day's debate; and though repeatedly called upon, and urged by the most provoking taunts to viudicate their measures, abstained from all discustion, and repeatedly called for the question. They said in general, that all these bills, addresses, and reiolations, were jubilantially the same, which the House had frequently well considered and rejected; and that it would be only encouraging a disposition to endless cavil, to enter into debate upon the fame matter, as often as ingenicus people could give it a new Many points, not immediately connected with the subject, were introduced; many charges made, and a secret and undue influence much complained of: the quetion was over-ruled by about the usual majority.

A motion for an address to the throne, for a dissolution of the present parliament, was made a sew days after, and brought on long debates, in which all the public grievances and discontents were resterated, and the great necessity in the present situation of foreign and domestic affairs, of restoring harmony between the people and their representatives, and their having a parliament in whom they could place a thorough confidence, was enforced. This met with the same sate as the former.

May 18. Session, a number of se-folutions relative to the A affairs, were proposed by th of Richmond, nearly fimilar which we took notice of House of Commons, but larger scale, and in which a number of objects of enqu particularized: all of which the heaviest censures, as w the measures prescribed at 1 the conduct pursued, in the tion of them in the colonies. resolutions were introduced vere observations on the co administration, who having cularly recommended the can affairs to their attentio speech from the throne, knowledged them to be of most importance; yet the se been spent, and this great been totally neglected; not as a motion has been made on the contrary, when the of the frivolous and triffin nue acts was brought bei House, every enquiry was evaded, that could lead smallest knowledge of the si

The nobleman who pre the head of the American ment, being particularly i in these consures, it was n expected that he would hav ed largely into the busine have endeavoured to expl vindicate his own conduct. however, was not the caf with an acknowledged co that he was particularly ca on, declined entering into cussion of that nature; but i himself to the present exp of leaving this business to t sideration of the ministr might form some plan du recels for accommodating matters. The ministers b le that matters of this nabeen recommended to parrather prematurely, before that scheme had been formey were resolved, therefore, all retrospect; and accorde lord in question, of himred for an adjournment.

HISTORY OF EUROPE. - [95°

could not fail to draw out sting observations and feaferes from the other fide. bierved, that though Ame-Fairs had, for these two neen a standing subject of endation from the throne, y measure relative to them inated in parliament, while differs farank back appalled, · breath that feemed to whifmagniry into them; that in ; time they had formed no or acted upon any fystem ; ged to stamble upon wretchdiencies and abfordities, as cidently arose in their way, every new measure led to diforder and confusion than mer. That for the person as particularly accused, to in enquiry into his own consy moving for an adjournwas a manifest violation and y of justice, and such a proa of parliament, as descreed er panishment than any cenald convey.

ministry refused to answer, take any notice of the pro-

poied refolations; the question was repeatedly called for an adjournment, and being at length put, was carried as usual.

Thus ended this fession May 19. of parliament; the prorogation having taken place next day. In the speech from the throne, the temper which had conducted all the proceedings of parliament, was greatly approved; and the happies effects expected from the firmnels, as well as the moderation, which they had manifested in the very critical circumstances which attended their late deliberations. An affinrance was given, that in all events, it should be made the first and couflant object of care, to watch over the interests, and to preferve undiminished the rights of the people. And it was earnestly recommended to exert in their respective counties the same zeal and prudence which they had shown in parliament, for promoting the peace and welfare of the kingdom: that nothing can be so favourable to the wither of those who look with jealoufy on the firength and profperity of this country, as the prevalence of animonties and differtions amongst ourselves; and to make it therefore their care to discountenance every attempt to infule groundless suspicions and discontent into the minds of their fellow-fubjects.

						•
				•	•
		•
1
		•	•
					•
	•

[65]

HRONICLE.

JANUARY.

HE Cornish petition was presented to his by the high theriff, atby Sir John St. Aubin, · John Molesworth, Barts, of the thire, Mr. Serj. Thomas Pitt, Christopher and William Ellis, Efq; fame day the Yorkshire, ershire, Somersetshire, Norrland, Cornwall, Newcastle, tol petitions, were presented Majefty, at St. James's, towith a protest of the corpoof Liverpool, against the procured from that city, others.

Wm. Williams, of Lanlovery, mercer, together elve other persons, disguited goners frocks, and armed stols, swords, cutlaffes, and cks, came to the dwelling-William Powell, of Glain the county of Carmarq; and knocked at the back Upon its being opened, . Williams, and two of the !lains, ruthed into the parwhilft others flood centry) 1r. Powell was fitting with his neighbours, and imly flabbed him in nine difearts of his body, till his came out, cut off his and almost one of his hands. ople who were with him, XIII.

were to frightened, that they made no resistance, but immediately ranout; the affaffins then retreated, without attempting to hurt any other person. The following day feveral persons followed their footsteps in the fnow, and took particular notice of the impression and fize of their shoes. The villains avoided all houses and paths, and went over bogs, moraffes, and mountains, for about four computed miles, till they came to the house of one Charles David Morgan, but being tracked no farther, he was taken up and brought before the coroner, where he gave a fair account of himfelf; but one of his shoes being taken off, and agreeing in fize with one of the impressions taken notice of in the fnow, he was committed on fuspicion; and foon after confessed the fact, and discovered fix of the accomplices; whereupon Sir William Maniel, Bast, and other gentlemen, immediately armed, and went with their fervants in purfuit, and took five of them. One of the villains confessed that they were thirteen in number : and they were all hired by Williams to murder Powell, and not to rob the house. This Williams, in August 1768, went with Mr. Powell's wife, and took her and her children from the boarding-school to London; and Mr. Powell was obliged to apply to the court of King's-Bench, for a ha-[F]

beas corpus, to get at his children; and by the recommendation of the court, allowed her 1001. a year for a leparate maintenance. liams laid several schemes in order to take away Mr. Powell's life, and attempted to shoot him several times. The villains met, on the 7th instant, in Charles David Morgan's house, and continued there till they went the following evening to murder Mr. Powell. One of the villains was dispatched by Williams that very night to inform Mr. Powell's brother with what was done and ordering him to come and take But, Mr. possession of the estate. Powell having made a will, and appointed guardians over his children, their scheme was deseated.

About fix o'clock this morning, a most dreadful fire broke out at Mestrs. Johnson and Payne, booksellers, in Pater-noster Row, which totally confumed the said house, Mr. Cock's, printer, Mrs. Bateman's, and Mr. Upton's, an auctioneer, (late the Castle Tavern) backward; in which last-mentioned house was kept the bibles, common-prayers, &c. belonging to the proprietors of the Oxford press, to the amount of 10,000 l. and upward, together with a number of books belonging to Mr. Crowder, bookseller, adjoining, whose house is also damaged, as was many others.

This day his Majesty went 9th. to the House of Peers, and having opened the parliament with the usual solemnity, made a most gracious speech, from the throne, to both houses. For the speech, &c. see the article of State Papers.

Petitions from the following places were presented to his Majesty at St. James's, viz. from Devonshire, by Sir Richard wick Bamfylde, Bart and Parker, Esq; members for county: from Derbyshire, by George Cavendish, member scounty: from Gloucestershire Sir William Codrington, from Wiltshire, by Edward ham, and I homas Goddard, I members for that county: Herefordshire, by Thomas F jun. Esq; member for the coun

The house of two wealthy men, brothers, on the sea-co Somersetshire, was broke oper robbed of 12001.

At the Guild of Merchan Dublin, the following resoluwere agreed to:

Resolved unanimously, That not only the undoubted right highly becoming, and of putility, for all members of a state, and more especially to corporate, to attend to, and sionally declare, their sense of lic measures.

Resolved unanimously, That the duty of the constituents, struct their representatives in matter of national concern.

Resolved, That the late if prorogation of the parliame this kingdom, was untimel as much as it has impeded the gress of many new, and presthe revival of many old law the benefit, advantage, and security of the internal security of the internal security of this kingdom.

Rejolved, I hat this corpe do instruct their representati parliament, on the present mitous situation of this city kingdom; and that such expeas may be judged necessary t vent the like distress hereast

al to them, for their future

About 7 o'clock in the evening, Newbottle-abbey, of the most Hon, the Mar-Lothian, was discovered to fire. It made its first ape in the north-east wing, the parks, but had got to height before it was difco. that there was no possibility ig all that part of the house. re burnt with prodigious , till about two in the z, when its fury was stopt ong party-wall, which gave octunity of faving part of fe. The family were in the : the time: they staid till two, when my lord and me to town. The loss on zasion must be very great. e pictures in the great galre all pulled down, and ver the windows, and fufreat damage; the library, furniture of the principal ats, and indeed almost sing elfe, either fuffered the e, or were confumed by the g the fire, the following oly accident happened. the millers of Newbottlen hearing the bell, ran to . allistance. His wife, who tudinary, having gone tolocked the door of his ter him. On his return he er dead, lying in the chimwould appear the had got t her fright had thrown a fit, to which the was bject; and that unfortue had fallen into the fire. e was burnt to death.

efigned his post of master den. irle to the queen.

The Earl of Coventry has refigued his post of one of the lords of the bed-chamber to his majefty.

The Marquis of Granby resigned all his places, except his regiment of blues.

The Duke of Manchester refigned his employment as one of the lords of the bed-chamber.

The Earl of Huntingdon his place of groom of the itole.

The Right Hon. James Grenville refigned his post of one of the vice-treasurers of Ireland.

About five o'clock yesterday, the Lord-Chancellor received a meffage 'from the fecrotary of state's office, defiring, in his majesty's name, that he would deliver up the feals that evening at feven o'clock: his lordfhip accordingly, attended with a proper regalia, waited on his majesty at the queen's palace, and delivered them into his own hands.

Mr. Dunning, folicitor-general to his Majesty, resigned that employment; but continues to officiate till another is appointed.

The petition of the freemen and principal inhabitants of Liverpool, was presented to his Majesty, by their worthy members Sir William. Meredith, and Richard Pennant, Esq. This petition is said to be figued by near 1000 freemen, &c. The protest of the corporation by not more than 450.

A Ruffian man of war of 80 guns, was brought into Portfmouth dock, to be cut down to a third rate, as at prefent the is to crank the cannot carry fail. The feals were this day delivered in council, by his Majetty, to the Right Hon. Charles Yorke, Eig; The Duke of Beaufort who was also created Lord Mor-

[F] 2

The

The Right Hon. Sir John Cust, refigned his office of speaker of the House of Commons, on account of his ill state of health.

The fessions ended at the 20th. Old-Bailey, when cleven received priioners ientence death: twenty-five were ordered to be transported for seven years, and one for fourteen years, two branded in the hand, two to be privately whipt, and eighteen discharged by proclamation.

This evening, at five o'clock, died the Right Hon. Charles Yorke, Lord Morden, Baron of Morden, in the county of Cambridge, and Lord-Chancellor of Great Britain, in the 48th year of his age. was fon to the late Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Hardwicke; and had enjoyed his place for fo fort a time, that the patent for his paerage could not have been made out. His endicent abilities are well known. It is said his Lordship's death was occasioned by the bursting of a blood veriel.

The lociety for encouragement of arts, manufactures, and commerce, gave a gold medal, engraved by Mr. Piug 3, to Mr. James English, for the cultivation rhubarb in England.

Sir Sidn, y Stafford Smythe, 21st. the Hon. Henry Dathurst, and Sir Richard Afton, were this day, by his majetty in council, appointed commissioners for the cuttody of the Great Seal, and received the Great Scal are whilely, after having taken the ufull catas.

Be a letter from York, we, are informal, that this nother, about eleven, a large ball of laminous matter, in unpensuace a bull of fre, was obterved in the S. B. part of the horizon of Whiten; which appeared to fall towards the earth, in an oblique direction, for above half a minute, burning as it fell, and had in appearance a long fiery tail. During that time, the hemisphere was illuminated to such a degree, that you might have perceived a pin on the ground. After this phænomenon had disappeared, an uncommon lead_rumbling noise was heard, much like the falling of a building, or a clap of thunder; but as the horizon was at that time remarkably clear, it was the general opinion there, that it was as earthquake, as several windows were thaken. The aurora boreals appeared remarkably luminous alt the evening.

About the same time, this phznomenon was feen by feveral perfons in that city, who also heard a rumbling noise, and felt a tremor of the earth.

Lord Mansfield, who had, by virtue of a commission under the Great Scal, been appointed to furply the place of Lord-Chancellor, or Lord keeper, in the House of Pecrs, took his place accordingly.

A fire, occasioned by the negligence of the stable-keeper, broke out in the stables of his Grace the Dake of Norfolk, at Workfor-Manor, in Nottinghamshire, which entirely confumed the fame. hories were so burned, that they are fince dead, and the rest were with great difficulty preferred.

his majely came to the 234. House or Pears; and being feated on the throne, commanded Sie Pennis Molyneux, gentleman uder of the black rod, to let the Commons In a, it is his Majefty's pleasure they attend him immediarely. Who leing come, Sir Hetcher Norten was presented, as ciously pleased to approve

Line is

A great mortality prevails smong the Russian failors fmouth; where many of we been on board four and now begin to ficken that it has been determined them by turns: and Hilfey s are allowed them for that

It is faid, that not less i die daily.

About half an hour after ien, a fire broke out in the rehouse belonging to Mr. . Steele, on Bennet's-hill, aul's-wharf, opposite the here the dreadful fire hapat the oil warehouse in -ftreet, a few months ago. mes were fo rapid, that it consumed the warehouse, veral dwelling-houses behat and St. Peter's Hill; w's church also caught fire times, but was preferred by rity of the firemen; and the ire was got under by one there being luckily plenty T, and great affiliance ineady. As few persons were when the fire broke out,

His Grace the Duke of Grafton retigned his post of d of the treatury, to the ment of the whole nation. use is variously reported: t, to avoid being responsible fures he might not wholly : others, that a great perwas displeased with the finition of Lord C--n, another fit person was on to fucceed him. Be it may, Lord North was ately appointed in his room;

also no lives were loft.

raker, to his Majesty, who and his Grace continues steady in support of the measures of govern-

> The river Rhone, in France, fwelled higher than has been known in the memory of man.

> His Majefly went to the 29th. House of Peers, attended by his Grace the Duke of Ancaster, and Lord Bruce, and gave the royal affent to the bills which were prepared.

> Dr. Musgrave was heard before the H. of C-ns, relative to the information he had to produce on the score of the late peace; and what he then delivered, was voted in the highest degree frivolous and unworthy of credit.

> This night it lightened fo furprizingly in this city, that the oldest persons living, do not remember their ever having feen it equalled before, even in the hottest season.

> This day a petition from the city of Coventry, was 31ft. presented to his Majesty.

An earthquake, in the island of St. Maura, in Greece, has lately destroyed 700 houses; most of the inhabitants were buried under the ruins.

From St. Christopher's we learn, that on the 24th of October, seven members of the general affembly of that island, having, on some debate, quitted the house in an abrupt and indecent manner, were ordered into the custody of the serjeant at arms: that on their refutal to make fubmission to the house, they were committed to the common gao!, where they were confined; five days after which, they were expelled the house, and difcharged from their imprisonment; that on their coming out of prilona. a great concourse of people affem-[F] 3

70] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

bled in the pasture, where a large bonsire was made, in which they burnt two essigies: and that on the 17th of November, came on the election of sour members for the parish of St. George's, Basseterre, in the room of the expelled members, when the same gentlemen were re elected without opposition. to the great joy of the freeholders, who gave an elegant entertainment on the occasion.

The general assembly of North Carolina was dissolved three days after its meeting in November last, by his Excellency William Tryon, Esq; the governor.

The distemper among the horses rages with great violence; in the neighbourhood of Camberwell, Peckham, Dulwich, &c. no less than 50 have lately died. The distemper among the horned cattle has only been heard of in and near Westminster.

Died lately, at Leeds in Yorkshire, one Mary Denton, who lived in an alms-house there; her employment used to be to carry out meat for the butchers, for which she received one half-penny a turn;
after her death there were found, sewed up in her cloaths, one hundred Queen Anne's guineas.

At Tregony in Cornwall, Mr.

Richardson, aged 102.

In Cornwall, Mr. George Williams, aged 100.

In Essex Street, White-Friars, Mrs. Jackson, aged upwards of 100.

At Rainford in Lancashire, Joshua Bibby, in the 105th year of his age.

FEBRUARY.

ad. The following noble lords have solemnly declared and pledged themselves to the pub that they will persevere in avail themselves, as far as in them Is of every right, and every pow with which the constitution armed them, for the good of whole, in order to obtain full rel for the injured electors of Gr Britain, and full security, for future, against the late most da gerous usurpation upon the rights the people; which, by sapping sundamental principles of this savernment, threatens its total dislution.

Dukes	Viscount
Richmond	Torrington
Manchester	J
Devonshire	Rishops
Northumberland	John Bangor
Bolton	Fred. Exon
Portland

Marqui/s Rockingham

Earls Thanct Aylesford Suffolk and Berkthire Huntingdon Chatham Coventry Radnor Scarborough Stamford Temple Dartmouth Berkeley Effingham Stafford Albemarle Fitz-William Abingdon Tankerville

Barons Lyttelton Grosvenor Abergavenn' Audley Wycombe Camden Chedworth Craven Archer Romney Trevor Sondes Boyle King Fortelcue Monion Ponfonby Milton Hyde

Teller
Earl of Boc

CHRONICLE. 4 [71

reck two transports arrived ead from Petersburgh, with Russians soldiers on board. selt three more transports on the above place with 8 men more. We hear the are to be encamped on h-Sea common. There are r's hospital upwards of 400

A great riot happened this at Chirk in Denbigl-shire, e the execution of the mining that county. Near 300 men, armed with clubs and ks, assembled at the meethe justices, and drove away tables, who were about to n their lists; and after inthe gentlemen present, and the windows of the house hey met, dispersed without lamage.

The Supporters of the Bill Rights met at the London when Serjeant Glynn, the a, acquainted the fociety, remittance of 1500 l. had id into the hands of Sir

Hankey and Co. bankers barch-street, for the use of ty, by order of the assembly Carolina, who had voted morning the parish church ngbridge, Hants, was much by a tornado, which enripped the lead off the e of the roof of the middle om the tower even to the r; the gust of wind was so that the sheets of lead, weighing in the whole upwards of two tons, were many of them rent like paper, and all carried away with great velocity entirely over the faid roof, and falling on the opposite side, carried with it several yards of the parapet wall.

Grace the Dutchess of sherland resigned her office of the ladies of the bedto the Queen. And the y her place was supplied counters of Holderness.

One of the patriotic theriffs declared in a great affembly, that he thould refute to pay the land-tax in a county that was not reprefented; and it is faid he will certainly try the confequence of abiding by the refolution.

A most splendid entertainment was given at the Man- 9th. fion-house, by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, at which a numerous and brilliant affembly of the first quality in the kingdom were prefent. The ball in the evening was opened by the Duke of Devonshire and the Lady Mayoreis. The dancing continued till twelve, when a very grand supper was served up in the Egyptian Hall, with a fine deffert, and a curious piece of confectionary. After supper, part of the company went into the ballroom, and continued dancing till near five o'clock on Saturday morning; at which time the whole company departed, highly fatisfied with the elegancy of the entertainment, the order and regularity with which it was conducted, and the polite behaviour of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoreis. There were present the Duke and Dutchess of Portland, the Doke and Dutcheis of Richmend, the Duke and Dutchess of Bolton, the Duke and Dutch. els of Queenibury, the Duke and Dutchefs of Manchefter, the Duke and Dutchels of Northumberland, Earl Temple, Earl of Suffolk, Lord Camden, Lord Lyttelton, General Paoli, the Russian ambastador, Lord [F] 4

72] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

George Sackville, and many other noblemen; also Mr. Justice Willes, Sir George Savile, Edmund Burke, Eig; and several other members of the House of Commons, and their ladies. The following aldermen were also present, Sir Charles Asegill, Sir William Stephenson, Sir Robert Kite, Samuel Turner, Elg; Brass Crosby, Liq; Thomas Halitax, Eiq; James Townsend, Eiq; and his lady, John Sawbridge, Efq; and his lady, and a great number of merchants with their ladies. is thought there never was to numerous and brilliant a company at the Manison-house before.

On Thursday evening a remarkable cause was tried before Sir J. Eardly Wilmot, in the court of Common Pleas at Guildhall, where a travelling dealer in filks was plaintiff, and a riding cuitom house officer, who lives at Dartford in Kent, was defendant. The action was brought for the defendant (ex officio) Hopping the plaintiff on the Greenwich road, as he was coming to London, and taking his horse, saddle, bridle, a pair of bags, containing 12 pieces of handkerchiefs, and a large parcel, containing 27 pieces of filk; all which the officer took along with him to Dartford before he examined, and fent the poor man to town on root. On examination, the goods appeared to have been manutactured in Spitalfields. On the trial it was proved that the officer had used the plaintist very ill, and had threatened to blow his brains out -After a full hearing on both fides, the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff, with full value for all his filts, horse, tadale, &c. and . 231 for the affault; in all 1801. with full coils of juit.

There was the fullest House of Commons that has been known. No less than 451 members were present. By a list in the Court Calendar 192 hold places under the government, and it is affirmed upon the best authority, that the number of public offices is now double to what it was in 1740.

Five of the eleven capital convicts were this day executed at Tyburn; the other fix were reprieved.

After the execution a great dilturbance happened, in consequence of a hearfe being placed near the gallows, in order to receive the body of Dunk the foldier, which fome of his comrades imagining was sent there by the surgeons, they knocked down the undertaker, and, after beating his men, drove of with the body along the New Road, attended by a prodigious concourse of people, till they came to the end of Gray's-Inn-lane, where they buried the corpse, after first breaking its legs and arms, and throwing a large quantity of unflacked lime into the cossin and the grave.

On Wednesday last came on at Westminster, a cause wherein a maid servant was plaintiff, and her mistress desendant; the action was brought for her mistress ill-treating her; when, after a trial of three hours, the jury brought in a verdict of 50 l. damages.

Last week, at a Guild holden at Berwick, before the worshipful John Burn, Esq; Mayor, it was ordered, that the freedom of that corporation should immediately be presented to the present Lord Mayor of the city of London, and to Sir Joseph Manbey, Bart.

Col. Wedderburn, brother of Counfellor Wedderburn, is appointed commander in chief of a. the East India company's at Bengal.

Friars bridge, on casting up eipts of the toll for the last r, it amounted to the sum to l. per ann. And as it is probable that it will be very trably increased on the passeing completed, there is a ospect that in a few years the debt on the bridge, which is 47,000 l. will be discharged, the passage made free.

His Majesty went to the House of Peers, and gave yal assent to the following

s bill for granting an aid to lajefty, by a land-tax to be in Great-Britain, for the softne prefent year.

to bill to continue the duties alt, mum, cyder and perry, thervice of the present year, bill to pusish mutiny and ton, and for the better payof the army and their quar-

bill for regulating his Mamarine forces when on thore.

- bill to indemnify persons, by order of Council, for ating the spreading of the ious distemper amongst the i cattle.
- till to enable Lord George ille, and his offue male, to and use the forname of Gerpurtuant to the will of Lady seth Germain, deceased.
- d also to several naturaliza-
- e unfortunate man who was red by his wife on I hursday a Pierpole lane, had his skull red by her in three places, with a board on which he cut out his work. He was a clog strapmaker, and had lived very unhappily with the woman for fome time; the often threatened to murder him, and on the night the horrid act was committed, abused him in a violent manner. It is supposed the killed him in his fleep, as the neighbours heard no noife after eleven o'clock, and the waked two of them about four o'clock with a complaint, that her poor hulband was dying; on which they went to his assistance, and finding him a most shocking spectacle, immediately charged her with the fact, which, after fome time, the confelled.

On Thursday night five men went on board the Mary and Isabella Wett Indiaman. Capt. Pearson, in the river, and were detected flealing tobacco, &c. The crew attacked them, ilruck one of the thieves with a handspike on the head, and killed him on the ipot; another, in jumping to the boat, fell into the Thames, and was drowned; the other three tumbled the wounded man into the boat, but finding him dead threw him over; they then rowed for the flairs at Tower Wharf, where they attempted to land, but the centinel being called to, he fired at them, which obliged them to row acrois, and land on the Borough fide, from whence they made their escape. The dead body of the fellow, who was killed with the handfpike, was foon after taken up and landed on Tower Wharf; he appears to be between 70 and 80 years of age, and had on a failor's jacket.

a Pierpole lane, had his skull On Thursday the money colred by her in three places, lected at Liverpool for the relief of the unhappy sufferers by the late dreadful fire at Antigua, amounting to 346 l. 2 s. 6 d. was shipped on board the Favourite, Capt. Kevish, bound for the above island.

On Friday an indictment, which had been removed by certiorari into the Court of King's Bench, came on to be heard before Justice Aston. The cause of action was a nuisance, of a new complexion. A preson in the occupation of his trade, which is that of a feather-bed maker, was indicted for disturbing and annoying his neighbours in beating the feathers in the street within the parish of St. Mary-le-Bone. Several witnesses were examined, and it appeared plainly to the court, that this trade, and many others fimilar to it, ought to be exercised within the streets of the metropolis, and that they are nuisances, if so occupied.

A most alarming thunder-storm happened at St. Keven in Cornwall, during the time of divine service. The lightning shivered the steeple, and threw it upon the body of the church; the whole congregation was struck with association many had their cloaths singed by the sierceness of the lightning, and some their watches melted.

A number of journeynen hat-dyers assembled in Southwark, and took one of their brother journeymen into custody, whom they charged with working over hours without any more pay, and for taking under price. They obliged him to mount an ass, and ride through all the parts of the Borough where hatters are employed, and also many street the city: A label was carried a pole before him, denotin offence; and a number of attended with shovels, playin rough music. At all shops came to in their way of bu they obliged the men to striorder to have their wages rais

In a great political societ question relative to the expand incapacity of a certain per gentleman was finally determ. The numbers on the last diwere 237 to 159, majority 7 that the expulsion, and the pacity of that gentleman to elected during the present Pare now declared to be lega constitutional.

The House of Lords have rethe petition of Mungo Cam now prisoner in the Tolbox Edinburgh for the murder of Eglington, praying for a wappeal with regard to the cowhich he should be tried.

Yesterday came on in the Court of Common Pleas, Westminster, a remarkable when an ensign in the arm plaintist, and a colonel was fendant; the action was be for false imprisonment in l cola, for giving his opinion court-martial, agreeable to his science: when, after several learguments on both sides, a was given for the plaintist 300 l. damages.

Matthew Kennedy and Patrick Kennedy, who, with Michael M'Mahon and John I were indicted for the wilful der of John Bigby, a watchn Westminster-bridge, after a treight hours the two unhapp are convicted, and received as to be executed on Mond atterwards diffected.

ral experienced ferjeants of rines at Portlmouth, have e time paft been empored nical Elphinstone, in teach-: Rullian soldiers on board t, the English marine exerd managuvres of small arms, renadoes, &c. aloft and in is; a discipline with which ere heretofore totally unac-:d.

This morning a remarkthle cause came on in the of King's-bench, Guildhall, Lord Chief Justice Wilmot; a Mr. Doval, a builder, near le-bone, was plaintiff, and llough, mailer of the Swan e, in Salisbury court, Fleetdefendant. The plaintiff, se laft, loft a bank note of in Fleet-Rreet, and, by proracing it, discovered that the ant had changed it at the for a note of 60 l. and the cath; and upon the plainsplying to the defendant for perty, he refused to restore edging that a person had it his house whose bill came f a crown, and having no e payment, offered him the ote, which he ran with to ank to get changed, and ie came back the man was

On the trial it appeared, nk-note had been found by is, who flick bills about the c, and they carried it to the int, who gave them a guinea but foon after understanding ue of the note, they threathe defendant till they got pounds from him at different times. Every circumstance appeared to clear on the whole, that the defendant was call in full damages and coft.

New York, Dec. 18. At a meeting of the General Affembly here, Mr. Speaker laid before the House, a printed paper, which was delivered to him by the Mayor of this city, directed to the betrayed Inhabitants of New York, containing many reflections upon the conduct of the Affembly, and exciting the inhabitants to convene, and inflaming them to oppose the proceedings of the House; upon confidering this paper, the Affembly the next day voted it a falle, teditious, and infamous libel, and offered a reward of one hundred pounds to any perfon who should discover the author; and likewise fifty pounds for discovering the writer of a hand-bill, which contained many feandalous reflections on the conduct, honour, and dignity of the House.

Boston, Jan. 9. On Thursday iaft, his Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to issue a proclamation further to prorogue the general court, which was to have met here on the 10th instant, to Wednesday the 14th day of March next, in confequence of his Majethy's express command received by the laft packet arrived at New-York.

This day came on the trial of Mungo Campbell before the Court of Jufticiary at Edinburgh, for the murder of Lord Eglington, when the libel being found relevant, the pritoner was found guilty.

This day a respite came to Newgate, during his Majesty's pleasure, for Matthew Kennedy, and Patrick Kennedy, who were to have been executed this morning.

A motion was made in the House of Peers for increasing the navy, on account of the preparations carrying on by the neighbouring powers; but it passed in the negative by a great majority. It has fince been confidently reported, that the court of Madrid has now actually in readiness, three powerful fleets, one already in the West-Indies, with 4000 regular troops at New Orleans; the other two ready to act as occasion requires. And it is likewife certain, that the French have a confiderable force in the islands of Bourbon, ready to support any attempt they may resolve upon in the East-Indies.

A great number of officers and fabulterns prefented a petition to kis Majelly, praying an augmentation of their pay, and were gra-cloufly received.

The right of election of a minister to the living of Clerkenwell, was this day adjudged by the Barous of the Exchequer to be in the inhabitants paying icot and lot.

This day came on the trial of Sir Francis Bernard, Bart. at the Cockpit, Whitehall. The articles preferred against him were in the name of the General Assembly of the province of which he was lately governor; but as that Assembly has never been suffered to fit since, they could not be supported, and the Gavernor was honourably chared.

This day Mungo Campbell put an cild to his hie, by hanging himself in the Tolbooth at Edinburgh.

The fessions ended at the Old

Bailey. At this session seven foners, including the two for der, received judgment of Thirty-nine were ordered 1 traniported for leven years, were branded in the hand, si: vately whipt, and fixteen del:

upon proclamation.

They write from Jamaica shocking murder lately come in that island. The wise and scer of Mr. Watts, a planter, h conspired together, entered the band's bed-chamber in Deci last, while he was asseep, an wife having attempted to ci throat with a bill, her at failed, but the overfeer fi him at two blows. wards cloathed him, and c him into the woods, where h found the next day, broughtand buried, and it being give that he had been murdered by bers, the widow clothed l in mourning, and made the forrowful lamentation. The feer, however, in going to flon, Isit his pocket-book, in were iome niemorandums, th to a discovery; and there fome negroes privy to the m he was committed to prison, and executed; and the wid foon to share the same fate.

A very remarkable phænoi is related in an article from land, where, in a shower o that happened at Stolpe abo latter end of December, living infects fell with it, fo them never feen before in neighbourhood.

The French papers speak remarkable claim made by a at Paris upon the title and of the famous Count d'El who in the late war was a p:

177

and afterwards commandadron in the West Indies. e Foundling Hospital; to ernors of which, the old ias Father directed a letter ris death, the contents of athenticated the birth and cy of a child particularly d ander their care; with lition, that the Mother was ean family; that he, the had married her in his had this child by her, but erwards prevailed on her to ith her connections; that face married a lady of faid fortune; and that it was w, in order to conceal his rriage, to commit the child first, privately to the care public; that upon the eviof this letter, a fuit had ammenced, and that it was ation in one of their courts

' of a Letter from Geneva, dated Febuary 16.

erday, at three, a very danfedition broke out in this The delign of the persons sed in it was to murder the , and afterwards the burand then to make themr more all had been loft. r three hundred had already to fire, but did no other f than flightly wounding a The alarm was then given, e general beat. The garwere in a moment under and, and went from his body, which exceeded two thoufand, all active, bold persons, was at Fouro. We expect to-morrow ter it feems had been bred fix hundred men from Nyon, which, it is hoped, will put a final flop to this unhappy affair.

Married lately, Mr. Josiah Whitaker, aged 94, to Miss Sally Berrybridge, of Peckham, aged 16; Mr. Whitaker is possessed of a fortune of 50,000l.

Died, At Hollingbury, in Effex, Mr. William Salmon, aged 84; he had married ten wives, the last of whom survives.

At Leigh near Liverpool, Ellin

Brandwood, aged 102.

In New-street, St. Giles, John

M'Donald, aged 108.

At Great Bavington, in Northumberland, Eleanor Lawfon, widow of John Lawfon, aged 105.

M Α R C II.

This day came on at ın. Doctors Commons the fo much talked of cause between Lord and Lady Grosvenor, for the admissibility of a libel, which by the lady's council was admitted, and thereby an end was put to all further explanations. An order was at the same time minuted, that letters, wri ten messages, and other informations, relative to the afnafters of the city. In half fairs of Lord and Lady Grolvenor, should on no account be communicated by copies or otherwife, to any person except the immediate agents, previous to the determination of the cause in litigati n

A memorial was profes ed. from and four of the feditious laid the Lifery of London, to the Court on the fpot. Their main of Common Council, defining the concurrence of that Court in a request to the Lord Mayor to assemble a Common-Hall.

In a field adjoining to Kew, two gentlemen encouraged by the fociety of Arts and Sciences, have erected a building for the hatching of various eggs after the Ægyptian manner: their first attempt did not succeed, which they attributed to the dampness of the building. They have often fucceeded in small quantities by the heat of dung: but this invention is intended to produce some millions annually.

The merchants trading to 5th. America attended the House of Commons, the motion for the repeal of the acts of revenue affecting the Colonies, being that day taken into confideration; the duties on glass, red lead, painters colours, paper, &c. are to be remitted, but that of tea continued.

The four members for the city of London, the two Sheriffs, the city Remembrancer, Sir Henry Banks, and Mr. Deputy Ellis, went to the House of Commons with a petition against the bill for levying a farther duty upon carriages, &c.

Extract of a Letter from Edinburgh.

A curious question arose with regard to the disposal of the Body of Mungo Campbell. His sentence was to be hanged on the 11th of April, and his body thereafter to be given to Dr. Monro for diffection. Now as he had effectually prevented the first part of the sentence, how could that part of it confequent to the 11th of April take place? It was argued, that his having committed suicide, was a sufficient cause for his body being at 1 posal of the magistrates of burgh, and fent to Surgeon but as we have no coroner i land, the fuicide could not certained. The refult is, lations are allowed to in: body.

This day there was a ve numerous common-hall of the Livery of London, pursuan precept issued for that purpos

Letters from Paris, of th of last month, informs us, council of state has been held, authorises the Duke de Cl the prime minister and secre state, to assure the foreign co letter, that all the engag and contracts, made by the with foreigners, shall be fully acquitted by Mr. de Balue, who will be pr with the necessary funds for purpole.

At a meeting of a gre number of the electors Westminster, at the Standa vern in Leicester-fields, moved to follow the exam London, by presenting a p to his Majesty; and a con of tivelve was appointed t it up.

Some villains attempted to into the house of Mrs. Gold in Northumberland street, Strand; but the family be larmed, Mrs. Goldthorp had the courage to fire rogues, wounded one, wh afterwards fecured by the man, but the rest made th cape. House-breaking in . was never known to be fo fr teldom a night passing bu house or other is entered as bed. The gang, as is fair a numerous fet of desperate tellows, among whom are miths, joiners, carpenters, makers, and builders, ahom no locks or bars can urity.

William Matthias was exeprivant to his fentence at attizes, for poisoning . William, and Elizabeth and Elizabeth Emerion, at, by mixing arienic with tter. morning between ten and o'clock, a most dreadful ke out at Sturtly, half a rom Bogden in Hunting-L In less than an hour capital farm houses, with ut-houses, stacks of corn, re jutirely confumed. The raging at the same time in parts of the place. There freat want of water, and no ine nearer than St. Neot's illes) and before it could he whole of that beautiful with most of the graflacks, barns, &c. were to ashes. This dreadful occasioned by the carelessrday all the thips bills put up New-England coffee-house, ral parts of North America, ten down and burnt.

a fervant girl heating an

Talbot Bast Indiaman, Sir Hudson, now clearing at all, was so distressed for fresh us in her passage home, as oliged to kill every thing on board; among other a beautiful male and feraffaloe from Madagafear; iir Charles intended as a for Mr. Albby, a Northhire gentleman.

This day died at his hoofe in great Portland ftreet, Wil- 9th. liam Guthrie, Efq; a gentleman well known for his numerous lite-tary productions.

About three in the morning, the Chefter mail was robbed between London and Iflington, by a fingle highwayman, who has fince been detected in negociating a bill, the payment of which had been stopped on the first news of the mail being robbed. He is a fingle man, had just taken a grocer's fliop, and was foon to have been married.

Her Majesty dropped one of her ear-rings at court, and tho' the most deligent search was instantly made for it, the fearch proved fruitles; a foreign gentleman of distinction was seen to stoop, but it was, he faid, to pick up his fleeve button.

Friday morning a dreaful fire broke out in the hospital of Bethlehem, and burnt fo furioufly, that the firemen were obliged to break though the roof to release the unhappy people in the upper part of the house.

Exeter, March 8. Last Monday evening, between the hours of eight and nine, the grand mail, from London, was stopped near the five mile stone, between Honiton and Exeter, and robbed of the Ottery bag, containing letters, and about 3s. 6d. in money, by two foot-pads, one of whom prefented a pittol to the boy's breaft, while the other took away the bag. They were both tall men, one of whom wore a light-coloured frock, and the other a short jacket of a lightish colour. They likewise took from the boy, two shillings and his hat:

so] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The Lord Mayor of London, properly attended, waited upon his Majesty, with an address, remonstrance, and petition.

It was debated whether the exportation of wheat should be permitted, but rejected by a great majority.

This day his Majesty went to the House of Peers, and gave the royal assent to the following bills.

The bill to continue an act for allowing the free exportation of tallow, hogs-lard, and greafe, for a further limited time.

A bill for better regulating and employing the poor in the parish of St. Paul, Shadwell.

The bill for better regulating the navigation of the river Trent, from Wilden Ferry, in the county of Derby, to Gainsborough in Lincolnshire.

And also to several road, inclofure, and naturalization bills.

The following state of Mr. Wilkes's affairs was published by the society for supporting the Bill of Rights.

London Tavern, March 13, 1770. Supporters of the Bill of Rights. William Tooke, Esq; in the Chair.

An account of Mr. Wilkes's affairs having been this day laid before the fociety, it appeared that (fince the establishment thereof on February 20, 1769) there have been paid by the voluntary subfcriptions of this society,

To Mr. Wilkes for 1. s. d. his support - 1000 0 0

To ditto for his first

fine - - 500 0 0

To the expences of his three last elections for Middlesex - 1704. To compromise 143451.

155. 8d. of his debts 4198

Debts of Mr. Wilkes remaining to be compromised - 5445
And a second fine to be paid of - - 500

No money has hitherto bee plied by this society to any purpose whatever.

The cash now remaining treasurer's hands is 7761. 6:

N. B. 71491. 6s. 2d. of Wilkes's debts appear to have incurred by his having been rity for other persons.

On Wednesday morning last, about one o'clock, some desperate persons broke into bury gaol (which they effect forcing a passage through the and released Berry and T two prisoners capitally con at the last assize there.

Two Resolutions were passes the presentation of the cidres: The first, That the sing the present—to be in and that its acts are not valunwarrantable, and man tends to disturb the prace kingdom. The second, The convey such unwarrantable trines, under the specious prof a petition, is a gross and self abute of the undoubted rethe subject to petition the cro

Extract of a Letter from Port,

We have an account spr bout here from on board hi

h of the late Captain O'Ha-: be was not murdered by sers as was reported, but died a natural death. The is as follows. When he at the place, the Captain p the river in a tender proor that purpose, with swivel ad femali arms, and anchorin 2 or 300 yards of the that Capt. O'Hara, and fix of his people, weet on n the tender's fmall boat, orders with the people on o be in readiness with their d fmall arms to fire in cafe attacked by the natives, was to be made known to my the firing of a piflol as I for their fire. As foon as main landed he was received by the Moors. He told e was come by order of the his mafter, to find that and likewise to fix the Bri-¿ (an English jack which he , with him from his own er that purpose) on an old fort which they had: he . by that intend the leaft They did not feem to refixing the colours on that sd made a little buftle aa however they feemed pacied asked the Captain, if the us master, had sent them efents? He replied in the ive; and that if fome of ould go on board the tenwould show them the preon which a multitude of rowded to the beach in orlaunch their boats, or caant were out of the water, on board, which the comg Officer on board the ten-XIII.

floop Merlin, concerning der observing, and thinking that they were coming to feize the tender, and not feeing the Captain amongst them, immediately gave them all his fire of fwivels and fmall-arms, which killed near twenty of the natives; then he flipt or cut his cable, and made off. The Moors on this directly attacked the Captain and his people, and wounded him flightly before he delivered up his fword. The Captain and his people were then made prifoners, and carried up the country. The Moors were fatisfied when they found the Captain was not to blame. The poor Captain was feized with a fever in a few days, and for want of proper care, and with grief and difappointment, he died in less than a week. Had he survived, he would have been taken to Senagal, as his people were on a journey of upwards of 500 miles, and there ranfomed. It is faid the Officer in the tender heard a piftol fired as a fignal; others contradict it: be it as it will, fome fatal millake was the cause of this poor gentleman's deftruction.

> This day the right honourable the Lord Mayor gave a most tplendid entertainment at the Manfion-house to a very numerous though a felect number of persons of both houses of parliament. The Egyptian hall was illuminated in the most elegant manner, with new chandeliers, and other illuminations, which furpassed all description.

> Amongst other loyal and patriotic toaths, the following, after filence for each was proclaimed by found of trumper, were drank, [G] and the pieces of music performed with the utmost elegance and approbation.

May true religion and virtue ever flourish and abound.

Health and long life to our fovereign lord the king.

Coronation Anthem by Mr. Handel.

Health and long life to our gracious queen, and all the royal family.

May happiness and glory be the portion of his Majesty, his family and people.

Prosperity to the city of London.

Grand martial piece by Mr. Ruth.

May justice and wisdom govern

all the public councils.

May the fundamental liberties of England be ever revered and defended.

May the noble affertors and protectors of English liberty be had in perpetual honour.

Full piece by Mr. Rufh.

May the violators of the right of election and petition against gricvances be confounded.

May the wicked be then from before the king, that his throne may be established in rightcousness.

Overture by Mr. Handel.

May corruption cease to be the measure of government.

May the spirit of the constitution prevail over secret and undue influence.

May perpetual union, social liberty, and univerfal justice prevail, and render happy the whole British empire.

May the commerce of this city and kingdom, with the colonies. flourish for ever.

Full piece by Mr. Ruth.

While the truly noble company were at dinner, they were screaded by the most excellent band of; music which could be procured in this kingdom, and which was conducted by Mr. Rush. In a word, it was universally allowed to exceed any thing of the kind ever given by a private gentleman it this kingdom.

The ball was opened about tes o'clock, by the Duke of Devonshire and the Lady Mayores; the dancing continued till half pas four in the morning; and before five the whole company left the Mansion-house, greatly pleased with the grandeur and elegancy of the entertainment, as well as the order and regularity with which it The company conducted. was fo numerous, that the three long tables in the Egyptian-hall were not sufficient to accommodate them all. It is faid, that 600 diffies were ferved up.

List of the Company.

Dukes of Richmond, Bolton, Devonshire, Portland, Manchester, Northumberland.

Marquisses of Rockingham, and Granby.

of Piercy, Huntingdon, Earls Suffolk, Berkley, Abingdon, Plymouth, Scarborough, Albemarie, Coventry, Tankerville, Effingham, Fitzwilliam, Temple, Besberough, Shelburne, Corke, Donnegal, Verney, Ludlow, Fife.

Lords Robert Sutton, George Cavendish, Frederick Cavendish, John Cavendish, Abergavenay, Craven, agi Monfon, Fortefene, elton, Camden, Archer,

, Hereford, Torringan, Downe.

John Delaval, John, George Saville, lebrook, Joseph Mawge Younge, Thomas Edward Winnington, unders, Robert Clayis Vincent, William, Edward Ashley, Wilith, Piercy Brett, Mat.
il Wray.

Anderson, Adams, Aubrey, Allen, Baker, ley, Bethel, Brickdale, mel, Burke, Bynge,

Calvert, Calcraft, Colleraft, Cornwall, Dawkins, Dowdeswell, Dunning, , Fletcher, Frankland, aves, Grey, Garth, regory, Groves, Grenas, Grenville Henry, eant, Hampden, Haward, Hope, Hobert, ey, Jenins Col. Kep-d, Keppel General, ascelles Daniel, St. Luther, Mackworth, uger, Milles, Norris, nant, Popham, Pow-Pulteney, Roll, Rusher, Scrope, Scawen, Sheriff, Scudamore, ret, Tempest, Towns-, Townsend Thos. recothick Alderman, Walfingham, Weft, Whateley, Bertie, Baller, jun. lton, Clarke, Creiby, . Hanbury, General Leman, Montague, Infgrave, Alexander

Popham, Capt. Phipps, Plumer, George Paulet, Pratt, Skipwith, Thornton, Turner, Richard Whitworth.

Several persons had their wiadows broken at night by the mob, for not illuminating their houses, particularly those of Mr. Barclay, opposite Bow Church in Cheapfide, were very much demolished, fo that it was necessary to take out the remains of the fath-frames from fix windows. Mr. Barclay, when his hoofe was attacked, fent out two of his ferrants to go amongst the mob, and to fix upon any perfone they faw throwing floors #gainst his windows, and not to leave them until they got intelligence where they might be found; in consequence of these orders two persons were this day taken before the Lord Mayor, and a proposal was made to pay the damage, but Mr. Barciay refused to accept the offer, laying that he came for justice on the offenders, and not for the damage he had received; on which they were both feat to the Compter.

grace the Dutchels of Her Northumberland, in croffing the channel from Dover to Calais, very narrowly escaped being drowned. By the violence of the waves, the cords which lashed her chaife to the veffel were burft, and had it not immediately been difcovered the next returning fea would have carried her grace over board. She was on her journey to the court of Vienna, to be present at the auptials of the arch-dutchefs, with the dauphin of France; but being driven back, and with the utmost hazard landed near Folkflone, her grace's defign has been fruftrated.

[G] 2

The

The two Kennedys, who were condemned the last sessions for the murder of Bigby the watchman, have received the King's pardon, on condition of being transported for life.

The person who robbed the Chester mail last week in the City road, was taken into custody on Wednesday, on his first attempt to put off a small bill on Messrs. Baldero and Co. facing the Mansionhouse.

The above man was carried before the magistrates in Bow-street, when the post-boy, Daniel Wheeler, swearing to his person, he was committed to Newgate. It is said he had just taken a house in Bishopsgate-street, in order to carry on the business of a grocer, and had laid in a quantity of goods in that way: and was on the point of being married to a tradesman's daughter in that neighbourhood. On fearthing the prisoner's house last night, bills of exchange to the value of 300 l. and a great number of letters taken out of the mail, were found. He pretended that a person had given him the bills, &c. to dispose of, but could not tell his name.

A joint address of the lords and commons in parliament affembled, relative to the city remonstrance, was this day presented to his Majesty, expressing the deepest concern on seeing the exercise of the subjects undoubted right of petitioning the throne, so grossly perverted, by being applied to the purpose, not of preserving, but of overturning the constitution, and of propagating doctrines, which, if generally adopted, must be fatal to the peace of the kingdom, and tend to the subversion of all lawful authority. At the same time aspersing and calumniating one of the branches of the legislature, and expressly denying the legality of the present parliament, and the validity of its proceedings.

At a court of assistants of the goldsmith's company, the sollowing resolutions were agreed to

The right hon. the Lord Mayor having issued precepts for summoning the livery of this city to meet at Guildhall on Tuesday the 6th inst. to consider of a further application for redress of griesances, at which meeting a mode indecent remonstrance was ordered to be presented to his Majesty;

Resolved and ordered, that for the suture the wardens of this company do not summon the livery thereof, to attend at any meeting in the Guildhall, (except for the purpose of elections) without the express approbation or consent of this court.

There was a general court of the East India company, at their house in Leaden-hall-street, as by adjournment, for the determination, by ballot, of the following question:

That the dividend on the capital flock of this company, for the half year, commencing at Christmas last, and ending at Midsummer next, be at fix per cent.

The balloting began at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and continued till fix in the evening, when an hour being taken up, as usual, by the scrutineers, in adjusting the numbers, at seven o'clock the poll was declared as follows:

For

question — 139 the question — 1

end thus declared, the proced.

Frontiers of Italy, Feb-Emperor, in his late Italy, had a long cont Forli with the Count 'apini, who did not, at know his Imperial leing afterwards informhonour which he had rote to the Emperor, teived the following andways reflect with plealear Papini, on the intich I had with you in rough Forli, and the el which you was pleafme on that occasion. > and candour with talked to me, will not to doubt the fincerity nents expressed in your of the first of Decemall the happy passages nounced. These sentiavowed to me at a time book me for a private 12d no fulpicion of that ty dignity to which it the divine Providence The encomiums lats, and all the things we unhappily addressed to our rank than to our eferve for me this afdear Papini; and be that I thail be forely rou do not, in me, esan! a title superior to hat can be given me! feph prefers being bethose optward protestaall those homages, which are continually bestowed on the Emperor. Believe then, that the same sentiments will ever animate me. I pray God to keep you in his holy protection.

At Vicuna, this first day of January, 1770. (Signed) JOSEPH.

Rome, Feb. 14. A courier arrived last night from Lisbon, with the news of the death of the new Cardinal de Mendonza.

Was held a meeting of the electors of Westminster, when a remonstrance was unanimoufly agreed to, and in lefs than half an hour presented to his Majesty, by Sir Robert Bernard, Mr. Connell, Mr. Charles Martyn, and the Rev. Dr. Wilson. His Majesty received, and immediately gave it to one of the lords in waiting, without speaking a word. The multitude on their return met with the S-r of the H-of Cin his state coach, whom they grofly infulted with groans and hillings, but offered no violence to his perfon or carriage.

At a court of affiftants of the weavers company, like resolutions were passed with those already mentioned.

The affizes ended on the crown fide at Hereford, when nine prifoners were tried for the murder of William Powell, Efq: fix of whom received fentence of death, and were ordered for execution, and their bodies to be diffected; but two were afterward ordered to be hung in chains near the place where the murder was committed; and three were acquitted. The names of those left for execution were William Spiggot, David Lewellin, Charles David Morgan. William Morris, William Walter Evan, and David Morgan. This trial [G] 3 trial lasted from seven in the morning till eight at night.

Legborn, Feb. 22. The Russian men of war, the three Primates of 74 guns and 700 men, and the Providence of 48 guns and 450 men, are atrived here.

The 17th inst. we had the most dreadful itorm that has been fince the year 1752 in thele parts; all the vessels which were in the road were obliged to cut their cables, and run aground against the Tow-Among them is er of Morzocco. the Russian frigate the Postillion, who lost her rudder, and was much damaged; they despair of getting Most of the her affoat again. roofs of the houses were blown off, and the chimnies thrown down. The sea was so high, that the Pier was intirely covered; the Flotas were driven even on the Terrace before the old Fort. In short, many thips have been wrecked on this coast as well as on that of Sicily.

Paris, March 10. The comedians at Bourdeaux have committed to prison by the Parliament there, for advertising the representation of a piece, called the Honest Criminal.

This day his Majesty went 29th. to the House of Peers, and gave the royal affent to the following bills, viz.

The bill for raising 1,800,000 l. by loans on Exchequer bills, for the service of the present year.

The bill for allowing the exportation of malt for a limited ume.

The bill for applying the sum granted for the pay and cloathing of his Majesty's militia forces for this year.

And also to several road, inclo-naturalization, and iure, bills.

At a court of affistants of the grocers company, held at their Hall, the following lutions were agreed to;

The right hon, the Lord having issued precepts for moning the livery of this meet at Guildhall on Tueid 6th inft. to confider o' furti plication for redrets of griev which gave existence to a intitled, The humble addre monstrance and petition Lord Mayor, aldermen and of this city, which was or and afterwards presented Majesty.

Resolved, That this cou tirely disapproves of the si per, being fully persuade his Majesty's people, as wel parliament, will reject wi dain every infidious fugges thole ill designing men, wh in reality, undermining the lic liberty, under the specio tence of zeal for its preter and therefore look upon it a cent, and highly difrespet his Majesty's person and d injurious to the supreme au of parliament affembled, a warrantable, as it tends to happy constitution the kingdom.

Rejolved and ordered. T the future no warden of th pany do fummon the livery to attend at any meeting Guildhall of this city (exc the purpole of elections) the express order of this cour

The professor of anatomy ed his course of lectures t aol the Royal at

chout which he shewed great s, in adapting them partiy to the arts of defign, and at purpole had one of the s of the Academy present, w at one view the appearof the mufcles with and withhe kin, and the different they affirme when put in ac-

Among other general obions, he discourted on the ent proportions of different and the propriety and fitness ery part to answer the end ted, and gave it as his opi-that the idea of beauty was jeent, and not attended to se formation of the human very aumerous body of Mid-; freeholders met at the afy-room, Mile-end, where a affrance was read by Mr. f Sambridge, and only one was held up against it.

is marning, at two o'clock, slancholy fire broke out at m in Wiltshire, which con-I fix or feven dwelling-houles, m feveral work-flops and efes. The wind, which had northerly for a month before, ely thifted to the fouth-well, great part of the town must been destroyed. This is the d fire which has happened in the space of a few few days ago, a fervant beng to Mr. Hervie, of Broun-Scotland, digging in a neld sing to his matter's house, rered an earthen pot, with a of the fame, about a foot the furface of the ground, ining a confiderable quantity d Scots and English filver of the reigns of David, Robert, and Edward; they are moftly well preferred and very legible ? the inscriptions on many of them are, Grustas London. Civitas Cant. Crwitas Aberden. What is remarkable, there has been an old tradition turrent among the country people there, that a confiderable treafure in pots lies concealed in that neighbourhood, and a former discovery in the same parish seems to justify the conjecture.

Letters from Leghorn declare, that a Roffian frigate had arrived at Malta with the Marquis de Cavalcabo, who presented the Grand Master with a letter from the Empress of Russia, in which she requested, that all her vessels might be admitted into the ports of that Order, and that the Maliese squedron would join her fleet; but that the council had resolved only to admit three or four Kuffian veffela into their ports at a time, and by no means to make themselves parties in the present dispute between her Imperial Majesty and the

On the 14th of March, a new eruption of Mount Veluvius broke out within an hundred yards of the crater, on the fide of Pompeii, from whence iffeed a lava of about 2 miles in length, and 2,700 paces in breadth; at the tame time that two vollies of flores, iome not lefs than a ton weight, were thrown out of the crater to a very confiderable height. The lava has not yet reached the cultivated parts of the mount.

A court martial was held in Portfmouth harbour, for the trial of the lieutenant who con manded the tender that waited for Capt. O'Hara, when that unfortunate gentleman went on those on the [G] 4 toait coast of Asrica; when, after a trial of six hours, he was acquitted.

Married lately, Mr. Humphreys, a farmer at Beckingham in Kent, to Mils Parrier, of the same place, with a fortune of 10,000 l.

Died, Mrs. Gordon, a maiden lady, who has left a confiderable fum to build an hospital for indigent old maids.

At Canterbury, the Rev. Mr. Monins Eaton, rector of Ring-would, and vicar of Charlton, near Dover; he has left a fortune of 30,000 l. which devolves to his brother, a lieutenant in the army, and his fifter, a maiden lady.

Fra. Morris, aged 108, at Newcastle.

James Kearney, in Ireland, aged 115. He lately had a daughter married, aged 15.

APRIL.

liamstead within three miles of Bedford, occasioned by a chimney taking fire, which communicated the stames to the roof, and notwithstanding all possible assistance was had, a whole row of houses, twenty-fix in number, were entirely consumed.

Last Tuesday came on at Chelm ford assizes, before Mr. Baron Smythe, two cruses against Rawlings, Lycett, Ward, Kew, and J nes, Custom-nouse Others, for forcing themselves into the house of a lady in the parish of Eastham, ransacking the same, assign ing the lady in her own dw lling, as well as her visors, and other enormities, because there was no prohibited booty for them; when two verdicts were found against the brutal, illegal searchers, with considerable damages and costs of suits in both actions.

Was committed to Guilford gaol, by the Rev. Dr. Burdett, a Russian soldier, on suspicion of committing a murder on the body of a woman at whose house he lodged, at Esher in Surry, by catting her throat. The woman was not more than twenty years of age, and was murdered in her bed, her young child, about two months old, lying by her.

On Friday the plough for making trenches for drains, brought out of Suffolk, and invented by one Makings a poor farmer, was tried at Upton, near Stratford, oa the grounds belonging to Mr. Pearce, before a committee of the Society of Arts, &c. It cut, in the space of thirty-four minutes, a complete trench of about eighteen itches deep, two inches and an half broad at the bottom, and of the length of fix hundred and fixty feet; executed in a manner that cannot be effected by the spade, even with any degree of labour. The force used for this performance was that of fix horses, managed by two men, and without any greater strain than would have permitted them to have done a full day's work. It is computed, that by this means, trenches for close drains may be cut at three farthings a rod, or confiderably less, where the work of men and horses are cheap.

Extract of a Letter from Portimentb.

April 2.

Yesterday the Russian Admiral's ship of eighty-four guns, sailed out of the harbour and saluted the English

Admiral. Most of the fosinisters, except the French, at to Spithead in this ship, reral latters and English offiand were highly pleated. By rations Admiral Elphinstone, de in the ship, she is booked to be equal to any ship of the in England.

This day the King was bleated to invest his Repul eta Prince William - Harry, ajesty's third fon, with the of the most ancient and most Order of the Thirle.

royal highness being preto the Sovereign by the two Kaights, and kneeling down, erald drew the sword, and ing) delivered it to the Soa, who thereupon knighted oyal Highnets; then the , having kiffed his Majesty's rote up; which done, Green having received the green with the symbol or the hanging to it) presented the kaceling) to the Sovereign, s velvet cushion, who put shon over the Prince's left m, and then, kneeling down, in kissed his Majesty's hand; done, the Prince role up, tking a low reverence, with-

t of a Letter from Paris, Mar.b 19.

erday the court again fent prefs to Holland, charged alls of exchange to the value 20,000 of livres, defined to the engagements contracted. Sieur de Balue, the King's. These different remitamount, it is believed, to 3,000,000 livres.

Letters from Detroit (by Monday's New York mail) inform us, that feveral boats with goods had been feventy days in croffing Lake Erie; in which time the diffress of the people was fo great, that they had been obliged to keep two human bodies, which they found unbursed upon the thore, in order to collect and kill the ravens and eagles that came to feed on them. for their subsistence. Many other boats have been frozen up within. turty miles of Detroit; and several traders small boats, with goods, had been loft.

Cadin, March 2. By letters from Mexico, we have an account of the deaths of the Abbe d'Auteroche. and one of the two officers of the Spanish marine, who had failed with that gentleman to the illand of California. They fell fick, with every one who accompanied them, on the 4th of June, the very day after they had made heir obfervation of the Transit of Venus over the Sun. This observation, according to the same letters, was made with all possible advantage, the day being extremely fine, and the air remarkably terene learn, moreover, that the Sieur Paly, the famous geographer, who was among those who fell fick. happily arrived on the 14th of October, at Port St. Blaife, in the White Sea, with all those who had the good fortune to escape the epidemic difease with which they were vilited. Much is expected from the fuccess of the observation, which was the grand object of the voyage of thele altronomers.

Came on at Kingtion, be- 6th. fore Mr. Justice Blackstone, the famous cause between the Right Hon. George Oaslow, and the Rev.

Mr. Horne, for two letters published the 14th and 28th of July The action was brought against Mr. Horne for 10,000 l, damages. The trial lasted about an hour and a half, when Mr. Onflow was non-suited. It is supposed the expence to Mr. Onslow will amount to at least 1500 l.

The Durham, Cumberland, and Northumberland petitions for redress of grievances, were presented to his Majesty at St James's, and received, but no answer was returned; they were given to the lords in waiting.

The Synagogue of the Jews, 7th. in order to shew the detellation in which the body of them hold such practices of their wicked brethren, have advertised a reward for a detection of all such as are guilty of receiving stolen goods.

Last Week as Mr. Harding's men were plowing in his grounds at Tottenham, the plough struck rather lower than common in the earth, and turned up a large quantity of broad pieces of gold of James I. and Charles I. quite fresh, as if just coined; some men dug afterwards with a pitchfork, and threw up at one stroke 18 of the above pieces, also a horn with some filver at the bottom; the whole amounting to upwards of 701. value.

The Middlesex petition, re-9th. monstrance, and address, was presented to his Majesty at St. James's, by Messrs. Sawbridge and Townsend, sheriffs for the county, which was received and given to a lord in waiting, but no answer returned.

The petition from the county of Kent was also presented to his Ma-ber for Rochester, and some other gentlemen.

A general meeting of the Eal-India Company was held at Paris, when the directors gave an account of their proceedings, by which the impossibility of compounding their debts, and continuing their trade appeared, and it was propoled to put their whole effects into the hands of the king.

This day, about one o'clock, Stephen Gregory, a Russian, was executed at Esher, in Surry, smiddle a great number of spectstors, for the murder of Mrs. Herne. He was attended at the place of execution by the Russian Ambassalor's chaplain, to whom he coafessed the murder, and died very penitent. He had been a lodger in the house, and was suspected by Mrs. Herne of intending to rob them, which she informed her hasband of, who turned him cut of his house. It is supposed he committed the murder out of revenge: He attempted to conceal himself in the house the night before, an the man and his wife were from home, but was prevented by fome neighbours who had charge of it The morning in their absence. the shocking affair happened, Mr. Herne left his wife in bed about a quarter after fix, to go to Lord Clive's garden to work; he left the door of his house u-locked, which was observed by the villain, who immediately went up to her chamber, and cut her throat in a mon dreadful manner, to as nearly to fever her head from her body, then laid her on the floor, covered her wi h the bed-cloaths, left the young child naked in bed, rifled the drawers, and made his escape. jetty by John Calcrast, Esq; mem- poor woman not being up so soon ą.

en ufant, her next door neighbour, horneen nine and ten o'clock, went me know the reason, and found Mrs. Herne as before-mentioned, and the poor infant crying in bed. The Russian being observed to come out of the house that morning, feveral went immediately in purfirst of him. He was taken at Godalming, committed to Guildford gaol, and from thence conveyed to Kinghon, where he was tried on Saturday, and hanged on Monday opp ate the house where he committed the fact. He was about twenty-two years of age, and a flout well-made man. Five filver table spoons were found upon him, which Mr. Herne made oath were his property.

Yesterday the report was made to his Majetty of the malefactors under fentence of death in Newgate; when Joseph Jarvis and Benjamin Millisent, for a borglary in the house of Mr. Evans, and Matthew Kennedy, for the murder of the watchman on Westminster-bridge, were ordered for execution.

Joseph Nicholas, William Warpaker, Richard Carter, and Patrick Kennedy, are respited.

This day his Majesty went to the House of Peers, and gave the royal affent to the following bills, viz.

The bill to continue an act for punishing munity and defertion in the American colonies.

The bill for repealing part of an act, for granting certain duties in the British colonies in Ame-

The bilt to rectify mistakes in the names of the commissioners expointed to execute the land-tax act.

The bill to regulate the trials of contested elections, or returns of members to lerve in parliament,

The bill for the better prefervation of the game, in that part of Great Britain, called England.

The bill to prevent the killing and deftroying of dogs.

The bill for building a work. house for the liberty of Saffronb.ll, Hatton-garden, and Ely-rents, in the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn.

The bill for lighting, paving, and cleaning the town of Marybone, &c. and for regulating weights and measures therein.

The bill to amend an act, for making a navigable cut or canal from the Trent, at or near Wildenferry, in Derbyshire, to the river Mertey, &c.

The bill to continue the terms and powers granted, for keeping in repair the barbour of Minehead, in Somerfeichire.

The bill to continue the duties granted for repairing the harbour and quay of Watchett, in the faid county.

And also to several road, inclosure, and naturalization bills.

This morning Capt. Bowen, of Killy - Own, who was concerned with Williams and others in the murder of Mr. Powell, of Glanereth, near Landovery, was apprehended at the Cock eating-house behind the Royal Exchange, by Meffre. Williams and Price, two Welch gendemen, who knew him. He was carried before the Right Hon, the Lord Mayor, who committed him to the Poultry Compter; and he is to be re-examined by his Lordship on Tuesday morning next. He was discovered by a young man at Lambeth, of whom Bowen had injoined secrecy. The young fellow accordingly took no notice that he had feen him, till his master observed a note that was sent him by Bowen to meet him at ten o'clock in the morning at the Cock cating-house; in consequence of which, two of Sir John Fielding's men were sent for, who waited a considerable time, and then went away; however, the above gentlemen being afterwards informed by this young man when Bowen came, fecured him. He is brother to Mrs. Powell, and has been at Lambeth ever fince his escape from Wales.

Matthew Kennedy, who was to have been executed on Thursday next, has obtained his Majesty's pardon, on condition of being transported for life.

Madame Louisa, the King of France's youngest daughter, who is in her 33d year, having for some time entertained the project of becoming a Carmelite, retired to the monastery of the Carmelites of St. Dennis, after having obtained the King her sather's permission for that purpose.

An order from the Crown Office, directed to the Marshal of the King's Bench prison, was delivered to the bench of justices for Surry, at their rotation-office, St. Margaret's hill, empowering the said Marshal to discharge John Wilkes, Etq; he giving bond, as security for good behaviour for seven years, himself in 1000 l. and two sureties, viz. Edward Burke, of St. Ciement's Danes, vintner, and Mathias Hamberg, of St. Bride's, taylor, in 500 l. each, agreeable to the sentence passed upon him.

This day a common-hall was held at Guildhall, by virtue of a precept from the Lord Mayor, to receive the report of his Majefty's answer to the address, remonstrance, and petition of the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and livery of this city; as likewise to hear the resolutions and addresses of the Houses of Lords and Commons thereupon, and to take into consideration the late proceedings of the companies of goldsmiths, weavers, and grocers, respecting the same, as well as their resolution not to obey the orders of the Lord Mayor for summoning the livery of the respective companies to attend at fuch common halls.

The last committee of the livery was appointed to take into consideration what would be the proper mode of proceeding against the three aforesaid companies, and to report their opinions to the cummon council.

After which the thanks of the livery were returned to the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and common council, who carried up the remonstrance: And the same was ordered to be printed, signed by the town clerk, in all the public papers.

The Good Intent, Nailor, from Guernsey for Newcastle, ran aground near Robin Hood's Bay, and is lost. The master and one man were drowned; three others got on shore on the mast, which broke away by the deck; and one of them perished in the snow before any assistance could be had. The other two were near sharing the same sate, but fortunately a countryman discovered them from the hills by the sea, and came to their relief.

A second incendiary letter was received by the Dean of Wettmin-put their dongn against into execution, as he has sade a passage through the D.an's-yard, which is not power to do, the said wall and not being his pro-

On the report of the committee who made trial sing's drain plough, the of Arts, &c. agreed to the sim fifty guineas for his insuand a further fam of ten on his delivering a compough of that kind, with carriages, to the Society, se of the public.

Lord Mayor gave a very merianment in the Egyp-II, to more than 300 nuble-I gentlemen of the first diften in the evening, two en in a post-charse, coming ackneath, were stopped by man on foot, dressed in a frock. One of the gentle-military officer, told the in a peremptory manner, would not be robbed, and him to deast, but the villerating a pistol, and threat-tolence, the gentleman shot id on the spot.

fame gentlemen had not ove three miles farther, on ay to town, when they were dagain by a highwayman, ounted, near the Red Houle, entleman who killed the I that directly through the of the cashe, and is support have wounded him, as the pon which he rode, spring direct by the road tide, a afterwards found without or on the road adjoining to

Kent-street turnpike that leads to Rusherhithe, and a great deal of blood was traced near the ditch where the horse had plunged.

As Lord Sandys was returning to town from his fan's feat in Hert-fordshire, he was overtained in his post chaite coming down High-gate-hill. At first, it was thought he was not much hurt, but afterwards it appeared, he received a contusion in his head that cost him his life.

About noon, the report of a pillol, fired somewhere is the in or about the king's palace at St. James's, alarmed the officers upon guard. The soldiers were interrogated, and their pieces examined, but no discovery could be made from what quarter it came.

The purfer of the Hampshire East-Indiaman. Capt. Sime, came to the India Histie, with an account of the ago of this being safe arrived in the Channel from Bengal. She has made her voyage in the shortest space of time that has been known; notwithstanding which, the his been very fickly, and lost many of her men. Scarce an officer on board escaped the fickness, except the captain and chief mate.

The Lord Volland East Indiaman, Capt. Natione, in young round from Brigal to Madrais, was totally last of the Balern-braces. The chief mate and fifteen of the crew were unfortunately drowned.

The tum of 400,000 h per ann, which the hast India Company annually pays to the government, is appropriated towards making good the supplies of the present year.

for the support of the Foundling Hospital for the present year 1775 The committee of the 17th. supporters of the bill of Rights settled all Mr. Wilkes's debts, and about six o'clock in the evening that gentleman was discharged from the King's Bench prison, and immediately set out in a post-chaise, accompanied by his daughter, for the country-house of Mr. Reynolds his attorney, in Kent.

It has been remarked with astonishment, that there never was perhaps so general and voluntary illuminations and rejoicings on any occasion, as on the event of Mr. Wilkes's release; not in London only, but in every part of England: and, to the praise of the lower order of patriots, no disorders have been complained of any where.

This morning Capt. Marmaduke Bowen was re-examined before the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, when he confessed that one Mr. O had carried Williams in an open boat to France. He was remanded back to the Poultry Compter. Lordship first ordered him to be fent to Newgate; but the prisoner feeming to be greatly affected with the thoughts of being committed to that prison, he was by his Lordship (on the intercession of Mr. Jones of Castle-yard, who acts for the prosecutor, and of Mr. Rice Williams, sen. who apprehended him) remanded to his former place of confinement. His cash being entirely exhausted, Mess. Williams and others contributed for his present support.

Yesterday a woman, late 18th. of Elliot's-court in the Old Bailey, paper-bag maker, was tried at the sessions at Guildhall, for almost starving to death and cruelly beating her apprentice gir appeared on the trial, the poor girl must have peristic want of the common necessar life, had not some of the 1 bours thrown eatables to be of a window, when the was t a post in the yard; that who was at liberty to go out th often been feen to pick up devour with great eagerness toe peelings, and such this were thrown out for the dogs. prisoner was sentenced to suff months imprisonment in New to pay a fine of 1 s. and give rity for her good behaviour fe years. The girl was put o the parish of Pancras.

The following is the bill of fare at the entertainment given by Sir Watkin Will Wynn, at Wynnstay, on his ing of age.

30 Bullocks

1 Ditto roasted whole

50 Hogs

50 Calves

80 Sheep

18 Lambs

70 Pies

51 Guinea fowls

37 Turkeys

12 Turkey poults

84 Capons

25 Pie fowls

300 Chickens

360 Fowls

96 Ducklings

48 Rabbits

15 Snipes

1 Leveret

5 Bucks

421 Pounds of falmen

30 Brace of tench

40 Brace of carp

36 Pike

60 Dozen of trout

108 P

dere tra

s of thrimps

ith is pickled oysters

tead of rock oysters

s of oysters for fauce

BCI puddings : pica pies pies paddings on pica d pies s of cut paftry j cakes r cakes mest cakes of bacon réams es of milk ts of cream ls of potatoes tragus th beans a of green peas apers. beads of ale n of wine im, and fhrub c shapes, landscapes, in Hanchmange, &c. menticy of imall pattry. · cask of a'e, which held fix hogsheads. ought that there were at o people at dinner in Sirpark, all at the fame

T CIRCUIT.

ditone affixes, four were convicted, two of whom were reprieved before the Judge left the town.

At Chelmsford affizes, eleven were capitally convicted.

At Aylefbury affizes, five were capitally convicted, three of whom were reprieved.

At Bedford affizes, one was capitally convicted.

At the affizes at Cambridge, two were capitally convicted; a person for an attempt to commit a rape upon a child, was sentenced to suffer a year's imprisonment, and to the payment of a fine.

to the payment of a fine.
At Huntingdon affizes, three were capitally convicted.

At Oakham assizes, a private man belonging to the Lincolnshire militia, received sentence of death for horse stealing, but was afterwards reprieved.

At Nottingham assizes, James Wardley was condemned for horsestealing, but reprieved before the Judge left the town.

At Thetford affizes, one was capitally convicted, but reptieved.

At Northampton affizes, William Craddock and Anthony Harwood received fentence of death, for cruelty wounding and robbing Mr. William Walker the younger, of Kingsthorne.

At the affizes at York, eleven were capitally convicted; of whom William Varley and James Oldfield, for diminishing the gold coin, were found guilty of high treason. John Shirtcliff, game-keeper to Savile Finch of Thriberg, Esq; charged with shrotting William Brown, after a trial of above seven hours, was acquitted.

At Lancaster assizes, three were capitally convicted. James Dono-van, for wilfully setting fire to the jail in Liverpool, is to receive his lentence next affizes.

96] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

A remarkable cause came on at this affize, wherein the corporation of Liverpool were plantiffs, and the proprietors of the copperworks, contiguous to that town, were defendants; when, after examining 35 witnesses in behalf of the plaintiffs, who proved beyond a doubt, that the noxious effluvia of the faid works, were pernicious to health, injurious to the herbage, and a nuilance to the neighbourhood, it was agreed, that the calcining part should be immediately discontinued, and the proprictors be allowed two years to remove the works to a more remote situation.

At Shrewsbury assizes, two were capitally convicted. Sarah Evans, for attempting to murder her master, is to be imprisoned for three years, and find securities for her good behaviour for seven years.

At the assizes at Stafford, David Slack, for forging a drast of 20 l. on Mess. Butler and sons, of Birmingham, and procuring a forged indorsement on the same, was capitally convicted.

At Warwick assizes, sour were capitally convicted.

At Hereford affizes, nine priioners were tried for the murder of William Powell, Esq; six of whom received sentence of death, and were ordered for execution on Friday last, and their bodies to be dissected; but two were afterwards ordered to be hung in chains near the place where the murder was committed; and three were acquitted; the names of those left for execution were, William Spig-Lewellin, got, David Charles David Morgan, William Morris, William Walter Evan, and Da-This trial lasted vid Morgan.

from seven in the mornin eight at night.

At the above assize, Webby for sheep-stealing, Webb for horse-stealing, Charles Burgess for stealing 175. were also capitally victed.

At Monmouth affizes, two capitally convicted for sheep ing, but were reprieved for portation.

At Worcester assizes, three capitally convicted, one of was reprieved; and four we dered to be transported for years.

At Gloucester assizes, eigh capitally convicted, among was Sarah Pulham, for setting to the barn and ricks of Recook.

At Salisbury assizes, John I lin, for robbing the mail a road between Marlborough Chippenham; and Joseph I for stealing a mare at Sher were capitally convicted, capitally convicted.

At Winchester assizes, fou

They write from Dublin their export of linen is k 7,000,014 yards than it was the before: in 1768, it was 18,49 in 1769, 17,790,705.

Extract of a Letter from Porty
April 13.

Arrived and sailed the Col Oliver, for St. Kitt's. Sail-Northumberland East-Indi and just now Admiral Elphi and all his squadron have w from Spithead, but whether I bring to at St, Hellen's or uncertain, as the wind is sail squadron consists of sour si se, two frigates, one hospitaland five transports. ris, April 6. The Pope has sblished a ball, by which his en has granted an universal e, upon occasion of his exalto the fee. It is to com-: the 9th of this month, and on the 22d.

Morning extraordinary Account is received from Italy.

. Campani, an emisent Itaphysician, aus feat advice to Moreali, a famous practitioner odens, of the following exlinary fact, which is properly sticated. - " The wife of aer, living at a village called apapoli, aged 25 years, being : seventh month of her preg-, on the 1 tth of January laft, diffinctly the cries of the the bore in her womb; the ad and feveral other persons beard it the fame day; and fter, when the was at church fpers, the child cried fo auand to firoughy imitated the of a new-born infant, that hole congregation concluded a child brought to be bap-

Mr. Campani adds, he has I the poor woman feveral , who is greatly concerned at lovelty, and daily falls away. tre impatient here to know rent of this fingular miracle mre."

The following order came out to the brigade of guards. :, Houndow.

O. His Majesty has fignio the field officer in waithat he has been acquainted L. XIII.

that Serjeant Bacon of the first regiment, and Sérjeant Parke of the Coldstream regiment; William Powell, William Hart, James Potter, and Joseph Collins, private foldiers in the first regiment of foot-guards, were more or lefs concerned in the refede of Major-General Ganfell, in September latt; the King hopes, and is willing to believe, they did not know the Major-General was arrested, and only thought they were delivering an officer in diffress; however his Majesty commands, that they should be severely reprimanded for acting in this business as they have done; and firidly orders for the future, that no commisfloned officer or foldier do prefume to interfere with bailiffs, or arrefts, on any account or pretence whatfoever, the crime being of a very atrocious nature; and if any are found guilty of disobeying this order, they will be most severely punished. This order to be read immediately at the head of every company in the brigade of guards. that no man may plead ignorance for the future.

The incessant rains that focceeded a prodigious fall of fnow upon the Pyrenean mountains, fo swelled the rivers in the fouth of France, that the floods bore down houses, mills, men, and cattle, and laid wafte a whole track of country of a vaft extent. The deplorable fituation of those who escaped this flood is not to be expressed.

The new Bridge at Knutsford, near Leominster, fell down after it was keyed in,

At the fale of Mr. Lemon's curious collection of birds, a gold pheafant was fold for 20 guineas, $\{H\}$ and a peacock pheasant for 40 guincas.

Extract of a Letter from Mr. Boulton, late Surgeon of the Delight, dated Little Cape Mount, Dec. 10, 1769, to bis Owner at Liverpool.

" On Sunday last, about three in the morning, we were all (who lay in the cabin) alarmed with a most horrid noise of the negroes, which was succeeded by several shricks from Mr. Howard and several of the people upon deck. Surprized at fuch an uncommon uproar, I strove to awake Capt. Millroy, but before I could make him sensible of what had happened, I received a stroke over my shoulders with a billet of wood, as also a cut with a cutlass on the back part of my neck.

The cries of Mr. Howard, who was murdered under the windlass, as also those of several of the people, whom the villians were butchering on the main deck, had thrown me into such a state of stupidity, that I did not in the least feel the wounds I had received. Having by accident got hold of a pistol, which to my mortification I found not loaded, I cleared my way till I got upon deck; but how shall I paint the scene that there was acting? Gilbert Bagly, a promising young man, was laid upon deck crying for mercy, having had his arms and legs cut off by these butchers. Poor Millroy stabbed one in the fide, and cut another in the forchead before he was overcome.

I saw none left but myself, the cook, and one boy, which were all in the maintop together; and about an hour after two others appeared, one of which was caught and in pieces, and the other got the top. I broke open the ch the maintop to look for ki bottles, &c.

In the maintop I found knives, two quart bottles, on gallon ditto, which I gave knife excepted) to the people me; and going down the mai mast stay, I got into the for where I got another knife. was returning up the stay] discovered by the sives, who: all in their power to kill throwing billets of wood, and me; however, I was not daunted after I got into the 1 top, as I knew we were then to defend ourselves against a their weapons, except mu which I was in hopes they not eatily come at. But a w who lay in the cabin foot them in a method how to co every thing that might con or forward their defign. had cut both their cables time before, I found we drove fait towards the Apolio, vessel I hailed several times was at last heard. But I h fooner hailed than the ciful butchers fired two must me, which to terrified one people in the top, that he down, thinking, by affifting ing sail, &c. they would span life, but he was much dece no sooner had he got down shrouds, but his skull was with the broad-axe, and his thrown everboard.

Captain Fisher gave us (and about eight o'clock came in gun shot of us, and having a great gun into the vessel wretches were so incensed a they fired 17 mufop, wounded a fmall no other damage.
could not get their re upon us, a refopted coming up the pistol and cutlass to t with a quart bottle er the head, which that he fell over-

d Capt. Fisher four one of his people; y. I believe, have on had not a barrel yn up, and fet the bre and aft. 1 imtheir confusion, ther from the mastber, and went down ck, followed by the all boy, which were alive on board in As foon as Capt. ber, we fet to work the fire, as most of the veffel was in a eal loss I cannot well am forry to observe having nine white th at least double g Gaves."

ord Mayor, attended Idermen Ladbroke, mer, Trecothick and at in procession to order to swear in life; Alderman of thour, when the mourpose was carried on. Asterwards he is from the time of which was before Rossiter, Bird, and d, it appears, that darch, a terrible engagement happened between the foldiery and the towns-people-wherein four persons were killed on the spot, and several dangerously wounded.

Monday morning early a fire broke out at a house the bottom of Wych-street, behind St. Clement's, which entirely consumed the same, with a chandler's shop, and a glass-cotters, and greatly damaged the inside of the house of Mr. Manning, breeches-maker. It burnt backwards, and much damaged the Angel-inn. St. Clement's church was opened for the reception of the goods of the sufferers; and a party of the guards was sent for from the Savoy to prevent their being plundered.

Copy of the Question referred to Comcil by the Aldermen, on Mr. Wilker's Election for the Ward of Farringdon Without.

Is Mr. Wilker's faid election to the office of Alderman a valid one? And is he, by law, entitled to be admitted by the faid court of Aldermen, by virtue of, or in purfuance of the faid election?

ANSWER,

We are of opinion, that the judgments pronounced against Mr. Wilkes, did not render him, by law, meapable of being elected an Alderman of the city of London; and that, upon such election, he may be admitted into the office by the court of Aldermen;—but we think it doubtful whether that court is compellable to admit him.

April 17, 1769.

Wm. De Grey, J. Glynn.
Ch. Yorke. Rd. Leigh.
J. Dunning.
[H] 2

1001

Sir Fletcher Norton's Answer 20 the above Question.

I am of opinion, that Mr. Wilkes's election into the office of Alderman, is not a valid election; and that he is not, by law, entitled to be admitted by the Court of Aldermen, by virtue of, or in purfuance of the said election; and I think the crimes of which Mr. Wilkes has been convicted, are of such a nature, as affords a legal justification to the Court of Aldermen for refusing to admit him; or, had Mr. Wilkes been in possession of the office, there would be cause of a motion: Besides, his present incapacity to attend the duty of the office, furnishes another objection against admitting him; and if the Court of Aldermen wish to have this great constitutional question most satisfactorily decided, it may be done, without loss of time, and at no great expence, by putting Mr. Wilkes to bring his Writ of Mandamus to be admitted, and then returning the special matter, upon which the judgment of the Court of King's Beach may be obtained; and if either party should be distaished with the determination of that Court, the cause may be carried by Writ of Error, into the House of Lords.

Lincoln's-Inn,
April. 21, 1770. F. NORTON.

At the masquerade at the opera-house, given by the club at Arthur's, there were more than 1200 of the principal nobility, foreign ministers, and persons of eminence present. The illuminations were in the same these with these in the masquerade given by the King of Denmark, but much improved.

A bill of indictment was found at Hicks's Hall against the Author of the Whilperer, and warrants were issued for the apprehending him.

The sessions at the Old Bailey, which began on Wednesdey, ended for Middlesex, when thirty convicts received sentence of death, among whom were feur girls, the eldett not seventeen, for a robbery on the highway. At this sessions a greater number of prisoners were to be tried than ever was known, there being no less than 338 upon the Calendar, including those of London as well as Middlesex, and those under sentence at sormer selfions. As soon as sentence was passed, the widow of Bigby, who was murdered upon Westminster-Bridge, lodged an appeal agains the two Kennedy's, who at a former sessions were found guilty of the murder, but had been respited by his Majesty's clemency, and one of them [Matthew] actually on bosse in order to be transported for life. Patrick was brought to the bers and a detainer lodged against him and on Monday a warrant was issued for bringing back Matthew.

The society of Agriculture so the East Riding of Yorkshire, chose Sir Digby Legard, Bart. their pre sident.

This morning, a little before two o'clock, a fire broke out in the lower part of the house of Messes. Fry and Webl paper-stainers, son Holborn-hil near the end of Shoe-lane, whis was consumed, with the furnits and stock in trade; Mr. Webl Mrs. Fry's mother, an apprentice and a maid servant, perished the slames; Mr. and Mrs. Fry, a their child, escaped by a back-we The house of Mr. Bridgewat gree tre and flock in trade.

· LONDON GAZETTE. of the House of Commons. 26 Die Aprilis, 1779. l, that Mr. Speaker do give notice, that the fum Hion five hundred thouis capital flock of annuithe rate of three pounds gs per centum, established made in the egth year of of his late Majesty King ie Second, intituled, Au inting to his Majetly the o millions, to be raised annuities and a lottery, ed on the Sinking Fund, e by parliament, and ing to Ireland, the laws is kingdom against priunlawful lotteries, will ted and paid off on the of February next, after g the interest then pay-spect of the same, agreee clauses and powers of a contained in the faid order, thus fignified and thed by me, is to be fuft notice of the re-payof one million five hunthousand pounds, for the faid annuities were ithed, and of the redempof the annuities as are ding the fame.

Fr. Norton, Speaker. n April 18, was brought his Majesty's warehouse with, by Mr. John Bishop, ther officers, 133 bags of tining in quantity about part of the cargo of the tter, Capt. Harvey -On of the zeth, Mr. Bishop, as also confirmed, with having reason to believe that more goods would be run by the fame veffel, ordered his boat to be manned, and went out to make his obfervations, when he discovered the cutter flanding at a diffance, waiting, as was supposed, for the return of the boat, out of which the first cargo was seised. Mr. Bishop then made towards her, but never returned, being run down, it is thought, by the finugglers, by which act of cruelty, Mr. Bishop and his boat's crew, confifting of five floor men, all perithed in the fea. One only has yet been taken up, about a mile from the place where the first feizure was made.

This day at noon came on, at St. Paul's, Covent - Garden, the election of a representative in parliament for the city and liberty of Westminster, in the room of the Hon. Edwin Sandys, now Lord Sandys, when Sir Robert Bernard was elected without opposition. The voters were so determined that Sir Robert Bernard Should not spend a stilling on his clestion, that they would not fuffer him even to pay for the chocolate made ule of in the yelicy.

A lottery bill paffed the House of Commons upon an entire new plan, very advantageous to the public. There are 50,000 tickets, valued at 141. each, but intrinfically worth only 10 l. each. And in order to induce the stock-holders of 4 per cent, bank annuities to subscribe their slock into the 3 per cents, confolidated, every fubicriber of 100 l. capital Rock, is to have two lottery tickets on the payment of zo l. which two tickets, it is supposed, will fell for 30 l. before, the drawing of the lottery begins, The tickets that remain unlubfcribed scribed for in this manner, are to be fold at the rate of 141. each, and those who subscribe are to have the option of the purchase, in proportion to their respective subscription.

[H] 3

Vienna, April 21. On Thursday last at fix of the clock in the evening the court affembled in the church of the Augustins, pasfing through the gallery which leads to it from the palace. This gallery was illuminated from one end to the other with wax lights in glass sconces, ornamented with flowers; on each side of it were two lines of grenadiers; and the vestible, at the top of the stairs, leading to the Augustins, was decorated with large lustres and sconces, fastened by cords formed into festoons of flowers.

Near the high altar, on the gospel-side, was a canopy, under which were two chairs of state for their Imperial Majesties: At a small distance from this canopy, and in the same line, were other state-chairs for the royal family:
An alcove with the two state-chairs was erected in the front of the altar for the Archduke Ferdinand, the Proxy for the Dauphin, to espouse the Archdutches in his name.

When their Majesties were seated under the canopy, the Archduke Ferdinand and the Archdutchess took the places appropriated for them in the front of the altar, which was magnificently adorned. After the benediction of the nuptial rings by M. Visconti, the Pope's Nuncio, assisted by several Bishops and Mitred Abbots, and by the clergy of the Court, their Royal Highnesses advanced to the altar, and that prelate gave them the nuptial the diction with the usual cennies.

After this ceremony the inches admitted the ladies to audience, and to kiss her hathere followed a public supduring which the music of the pel performed several stalian and different pieces of music.

Died lately, at her but at wood, Bridget, the Queen of Gipleys, who died worth a 1000 l.

At Fontainetleau, one Per Charles, in the 106th year of age.

At Montaubon, M. Jean ment, widow of the Sieur Son of Figeac, aged 103 years.

MAY.

A motion was made in the House of Peers by the Earl of Chatham, for bringing bill declaring the resolutions of House of Commons, with reto the expulsion of Mr. W to be illegal and arbitrary; after a long debate, the same rejected by a majority of 46, being 89 against it to 43 in so it; among the latter tw shops only, Dr. F. wer, bish Bangor, and Dr. Keppel, I of Exeter.

The Lord Bishop of C presented Christ's hospital whenefaction of 2001. on which thanks of the court were or to be given, and a staff to be to his lordship.

The Pelham Cutter, in the vice of his Majesty's custom tioned at Beaumaris, being a chor at Port Usby's Bay, o treat of Wales, was piratically attacked by two large imaggling catters, and a large wherry, the trew of which fired upon the officers on board, drove the men on bore for the prefervation of their lives, boarded the Pelham, and plandered her, and drove her amore among the rocks.

Letters from Bourdeaux bring an account of a terrible accident that happened there on Sunday the 8th of April, by the rifing of the waters of the Garronne. That river was full of chalops and fmall vesels, laden with the goods and moveables of poor people. A large tree, borne down by the violence of the current, broke the cable of an old hulk, which fet adrift ave or fix thips, and thefe drew along with them a hundred of those small craft, which were all driven towards the sea. The sight was dreadful. The crews of many at these veffels happened to be a-Dore; those who were on board could do nothing but pray to God to have mercy upon them. Most of the fmall craft perished with all bote on board; three or four of the thips were entirely funk, and every one of the rest were either run aground, or shared the fate of thole that perithed. The whole los is estimated at fix millions of

About to o'clock at night, a young man was mortally bunded, in his way home from sadler's wells; he was fet upon by two young villains, whom he resided, but a third flarting up with blunderhuis, discharged it full his body, which tore him in the a manner that his bowels ame out, after which they made that etcape without robbing him.

He lingered a few days and then died. The murderers have fince been taken.

A dreadful fire broke out in the little Town of Eldgason, about two miles from Hanover, by which 120 houses were reduced to ashes.

By virtue of a warrant under the feal of Great-Britain, directed to, and received by John Toke, Efq; at Rochester, High Sheriff for the County of Kent, proper officers were dispatched to the transport ship then in the Downs, to take into cuilody, by attachment, the body of Matthew Kennedy, to anfwer to the appeal of Ann Bigby, widow, touching the morder of her hulband; in confequence of which, he faid Matthew Kennedy was fafely lodged in Maiditone gaol. When a motion for the above warrant was moved for at the Old Barley, the Recorder of London told the Council who made it, that he had no power to stop him, nor even to hold him if he had been prefent, unless a bill had been found in confequence of the appeal: To which the Lord Mayor made a spirited anfwer, and told him, that he would take it upon himself, and would fign the warrant; which he did, and dispatched it immediately: his Lordship also ordered Mr. Akerman to detain Patrick Kennedy; and affored the whole Court, that no murderes thould ever escape justice while he lived, and was able to bring him to it-and that he himfelt would be answerable for every had consequence which might arife from the supposed illegal method of bringing Kennedy from the flip, to take his trial at the next fellions.

By letters from Cadiz we learn, that the S anish galleon, called Adventure, which has been a long time expected from Peru, is at length arrived in that harbour, after a dangerous voyage of eight She was intangled in vast quantities of ice near Cape Horn, and the crew during a whole month expected to perish They were at one every initant. part of that period thrown upon a Hoating bank of ice, and carried in that extraordinary fituation, between seven and eight leagues. After various perils, they had the good fortune to get into Rio Janeiro. The little hopes there were of the return of this vessel, occasioned her to be insured at 10 per cent.

A motion was made in the 5th. House of Lords, for presenting an address to his Majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to inform the house, who the person was, that advised his Majesty to give orders for proroguing the Irish Parliament, when that step was taken; but it was rejected.

Two prizes were contended for by the Matters of Arts, at the University of Glasgow; the first for the encouragement of elocution; the other for the advancement of physic. The first was determined in favour of William Cruckshank; the second in favour of Mr. Archibald Arthur.

The Duke of Richmond had lately a narrow escape for his life: It seems his Grace hath long had a wolf at Goodwood, which was bred up tame; but breaking his chain one day, nature took place, and he marched off into the country, but being followed by several men, was brought back and placed as before. His Grace afterwards going alone to view him, the creature flew at him, and catched hold of his waithcoat upon the belly, but that giving way, his Grace was retreating, when the beattagain catched hold of the skirt of his coat; but fortunately his Grace after a long struggle escaped, leaving part of his coat behind him. The beatt was immediately shot.

A letter received at Brest from the Guinea coast informs, that a French slaving ship, Captain Grandier, having been surprised by an insurrection of the negroes, who murdered most of the crew; the joiner, finding no possibility to escape the like fate, had set are to the powder-room, and blew the vessel up with two hundred and seventy-four slaves on board.

A few days ago a servant man that lived with Mr. Holmes, 3 brickmaker at Woolwich, told his master that he had something very heavy on his mind: his master asked him what it was? when he told him, that he had somethy been a smuggler, and about six months ago had murdered a dragoon, and desired that he might be carried before a magistrate; he accordingly was carried before Justice Russell, where he made an ample consession of the whole, and was committed to Maidstone gaol.

They write from Harwich, that on Tuesday night as Mr. Day, wheelwright, at Ramsay, with his wife, siter, journeyman, apprentice, and a girl about fourteen, were returning from our fair in an open boat near the shore, the boy went up the mast to make the sail clear, which overset the boat, and the wife and drowned. The huband apprentice weat in fearch of in their favour. and plunged about the coxe hey found a fmall boat, in from fatigue and cold they and expired. The fifter was the off the mud about feven sext morning, and died foon ; but the girl and journeywho were found at the fame

, are likely to recover. se following remarkable catahe happened to a married ie in the city, who were bua few days ago :- The wife petwist twenty and thirty, and hulband eight or ten years . They went to bed in good h, and in the morning, the waking, found her hulband and cold, from whence it nt be concluded, that he had red five or fix hours before. appeared to bear the loss with erate concern and fortitude, the corple was carried out of house to be buried; at which · the burft into a violent flood ars, which were fucceeded by when her fits went off, her so appeared to have left her, in a great degree her fenfes, be feemed infenfible of every g that passed; and in this The continued two days, and , died.

The report was made to his Majosty of the malefacunder sentence of death in rgate, when thirteen were ord for execution, and feventeen ited.

Vas held by Sir Robert Ladce, a general court of electors he Hon. Artillery Company, a the long contested dispute ecting the legality of the Ser-was carried away by the jeants voting at the faid court, was absolutely and finally determined

> A gentleman in town has laid before a learned body a new invented method of hatching chickens, and rearing them quicker for the fpic than ever was before discovered; for which that respectable society has honoured him with a gold medal. The process is as follows:-The chickens are to be taken away from the hen the night after hatched, and are to be replaced with eggs, on which the hen will continue to fit, for a second and a third brood. When first taken from the hen, they are to be fed with eggs, boiled hard and chopt fine, mixed with bread, as larks and other birds are fed, for a fortnight; after which give them oatmeal and treacle, so mixed that it will crumble, of which the chickens are fo fond, and with which they thrive so fall, that at two months end they will be as large as full-grown fowls.

The king and dauphin of France had the first interview with the young dauphiness. They met at the bridge of Berne in the forest of Compeigne, and their first falutation was very tender and affecting.

A court of common council was held, to confider of an address, petition, and remonstrance to his Majesty, upon his Majefty's answer to the address. petition, and remonifrance of the common-hall, and of the refoletions and address of both houses of parliament thereupon; when a motion was made, that the pare respecting the answer given by his Majesty should be lest out; but on a divition, feven aldermen, and ing the part respecting his Majesty's answer, and eight aldermen, and fifty-seven commoners, were for rejecting the part respecting his Majesty's answer, and for confining it to the Middlesex election only.

Then a motion was made, that a committee be appointed, and that they do immediately withdraw, and prepare an humble petition, address, and remonstrance, respecting the Middlesex election, and the answer given by his Majesty to the livery address, &c. And the following committee was appointed, viz.

Aldermen, Trecothick, Stephenson, Crosby, Townshend, Saw-bridge, Wilkes.

Commoners. George Bellas, Esq; Mr. Beardmore, Samuel Freeman, Esq; Deputy Judd, Deputy Sainsbury, Mr. Sharp, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Bishop, Mr. Burford, Mr. William Wilson, Mr. Plomer, Mr. Shove.

They withdrew, and prepared the address, &c. accordingly, and presented it to the court. On a division, for the address, &c. seven aldermen, and 91 commoners: against it, six aldermen, and 40 commoners.

The Earl of Chatham made a motion in the house of lords, for an address to the king, to desire he would dissolve this present parliament. He stated the public discontent in England, Ireland, and America; affirmed that the people had no considence in the present house of commons, and shewed from the situation of public astairs, the great necessity of having a parliament, in whom the people can place a proper considence. Arguments, however, were in vain, the question was called fo carried in the negative.

Naples, April 24. of Dorset arrived here on day last; and his courier, a montese, having had some with the master of the ferry who demanded more than h at the passage of the Garis and these words having pro blows, the ferryman delibe fetched a gun, which he pre at the courier who was then boat with his master; on th courier jumped out of the and screened himself behind peasants who were standing but the ferryman still taki: aim at the courier, the latte up to him, who shot him dead the spot. His Sicilian M being informed of this trans immediately issued his orde apprehending the ferryman it is most probable that he into the Roman state.

This morning, between three and four o'clock, a fire broke out at the house o Pool, in Paligrave-head court out Temple-bar, which con the same with all the furi The family were obliged to out of the windows to lave lives; three of whom were hurt. The house of Mr. Wil furgeon, and all his furniture of Mr. Wishaw, taylor, hi niture, and a large quanti gentlemens cloaths, &c. to a iiderable value, were burn watchmaker's house was lil consumed, and part of Mr. ning's tea warehouse is down; not one house in the on either side escaped the fi the flames, but most of the greatly damaged. Several

- fins who forced their way in to view the fire were near being buried under the rains of one of the houses which fell down. It is faid, that a gentlewoman was so much burnt, that she died soon after.

The livery of the worshipful company of Goldsmiths met at the Half-Moon tavern in Cheap-fide, and unanimously resolved, that the warden of their company could not be justified for disobedinace to the Lord Mayor's precept; and they declared their readiness to tellify their obedience to their chief magistrate on all occasions, particularly on that of a late common hall.

The thirteen convicts ordered for execution, were conveyed to Tyburn in five carts, and executed according to their fentence; most of them were boys, the eldest not shove twenty-two; some of them were greatly affected, others so lardened, that they ridiculed the punishment of death, and laughed at their companions for being a-fraid of it.

The ceremony of the nuptials of the Daophin and Dauphiness was performed at the chapel royal at Versailles, by the Archbithop of Rheims. After supper, the King having conducted their Highnesses to their apartment, and the benediction of the bed having been made by the Archbishop, the King delivered the shirt to the Dauphin; and the Dutchess of Chartres performed the same oface to the Dauphiness.

The following was the compliment paid by the Carat de Noailles, Plenipotentiary Commillary from the King of France, when he received the Dauphiness from the hands of his Excellency the Prince de Stahrenberg, Plenipotentiary from the Empreis Queen.—" The honourable commission which the King my Master has been pleased to entrust me with, enhances the measure of gratitude which I owe tor favours received from him. I want no other felicity but to be able to represent faithfully to your Highness the scatiments of his Majesty, and his ardent desire to see you partake of his senderness with the rest of his Royal Family. The whole nation, whose interpreter I am, fight for the happy moment which is to announce to two great empires the perpetuity of their happiness, by securing to two of the most ancient families of the universe the bands which unite them. What ought we not to hope for from a Princels, brought up in virtue by an august mother, the glory of her fex, and mother of kings; formed by fuch great examples, the Dauphiness will find in the happiness she enjoys, the pledge of that which she will procure to France."

This day his Majesty went to the House of Peers, and gave the royal assent to the following bills, viz.

The bill for granting to his Majeffy a fum out of the finking tund, and for applying certain monies therein mentioned for the tervice of the prefent year.

The bill for redeeming the capital or joint flock of annuaties, after the rate of 31 test per certa established in the 29 h year of the reign of his late Majesty.

The bill for establishing a lottery, and for other purposes.

The bill to continue an act, for encouraging the making of indigo, in the British plantations in America.

The bill to appropriate a fund, for granting to his Majesty additional duties on certain foreign linens imported, and for establishing a fund for encouraging of the raising and dressing kemp and flax.

The bill to continue an act for granting a bounty on British and Irish linens exported.

The bill for registering the prices at which corn is fold, in the several counties in Great Britain.

The bill to explain and amend the several acts, for providing a public reward for discovering the longitude at sea.

The bill to prevent delays of justice, by reason of privilege of parliament.

The bill for better regulating the persons employed in the service of the East India Company.

The bill for the relief of the coal-heavers working in the river Thames; and to enable them to make provision for themselves, their widows and orphans.

The bill for compleating the navigation of the river Swale, from its junction with the Ure to Merton bridge, in Yorkshire.

The bill for making a navigable canal from Leeds to the sea bank, near the North Ladies walk, by

Liverpool

The bill for extending the like like Therry to the exportation of rice from East and West Florida, to the Southward of Cape Finisterre in Lurope, as is granted to Carolina and Georgia.

And also to some other public and private bills.

After which his Majeffy ma most gracious speech from throne, and the Lord Speaker, his Majesty's command, prorog the parliament to the 19th of present.

This morning, between eight and nine o'clock, the queen was happily delivered a princels. Her Royal Highnels Princels Dowager of Wales, Grace the Archbishop of Canbury, several lords of his Majes most honourable privy council, the ladies of her Majesty's techaraber were present chamber, were prefent.

One Grieves, a pawnbroker, taken up a few days ago, on suspicion of setting fir his own house, the bottom Wych street, at the back of Clement's church, with intent defraud the infurance office, re examined before Sir John Fil ing, when it appeared that he infured his effects on the zotl April latt, for 2300 l.—that he begun a new book, containing account of the pledges taken the next day; that the nun and value of the pawns enti from that day to the time of late accident, amounted to times more than during the number of days in any preced month — that he had altered value of many of the pledges tered in a former book; for ample, he had charged a g 10 l. 9 s. the ticket pinned t which mentioned it to be only 9s; another gown 101.6s. mai upon the ticket 1 l. 6 s. a pai stone buckles, ticket marked 6d. entered in the book 10 l. 1 with a variety of other article a similar nature, all tending prove his intention of defran be written all at one time.—

leveral places of the old book and very evidently inferted ar-

he fire broke out in a stable sizing to the back-yard of his e, about two o'clock on Monmorning lait, when he was to be up by a washer-woman the bouse. Some time after the in the dable was extinguished, calarm was given that his houle on are. Upon fearching, one odward, a fireman, perceived, peeping through the key-hole, parcel of cloaths on fire in a the door of which was sked, up three pair of stairs ting the street, quite at a difanother room up two pair of es backwards was found aslo fire, though the windows, and by other part of the room was even discoloured by smoke: some cloaths in the shop upon ground flor, the door of which locked, were also seen to be ming at the fame time.

rom these circumilances, there eared such strong suspicions of guilt, that he was committed hengate to take his trial at entung sessions. Some pawnters, who had been employed value his goods, declare them be not worth more than 700 l. I that they cannot find many kirs, entered in the book.

This morning, about It o'clock, Matthew Kennedy brought to the bar of the ort of King's-bench, when, after ling the writ of Habeas Corand the declaration of appeal, motion from Counfellor Wallace, he was turned over to the Sheriff, and is to appear next term, when the merits of the appeal will be fully debated; and in the mean time he is committed to the King's Bench prison. He was in double chains in a blue coat, with a handkerchief about his neck, and looked greatly dejected; he was only in court about ten minutes, when the court was extremely full. The declaration of appeal was against the two brothers, Patrick and Matthew, both laid to be in the cullody of the fame officer, whereas the one is in the cultody of the Sheriff of Middlesex, and the other in the Sheriff of Kent; a circumstance which one perhaps may avail himself of. The widow was prefent, accompanied by the waterman's boy, one of the principal evidences upon the former trial, wno declared in open court, that he was offered 100 l. to keep out of the way. Lord Spencer, Lord Palmerston, George Selwyn, Esq; and feveral persons of distinction, triends to the unhappy prisoners, were likewife prefent.

A court of common-council was held at Guildhall, when an address to his Majorly, on the birth of the young princers, was agreed to. His Majorly has appointed next Wednesday for the reception of it.

The principal merchants concerned in the American trade, sene down counter orders to the manufafturing counties, to postpone the commissions for American exportation, on account of the Parliament being prorogued, without full redress naving been obtained for the grievances complained of from that continent.

This

This night between ten 27th. and eleven o'clock, as Mr. Venables, a wholesale carcalebutcher, in Whitechapel-market, and Mr. Rogers, cabinet-maker, in Houndsditch, were returning from the Blue Anchor alehouse, at Stepney, they were attacked in Redman's grove by three footpads, who demanded their money; and on their making resistance, the villains ared at them, shot Mr. Venables under the jaw-bone, and the ball went through the lower part of his head; Mr. Rogers was shot in the forehead just above his eye; they both expired immediaately. The unfortunate deceased persons staying after their friends to have another bowl of punch, occasioned their meeting with the fatal accident.

Paris, May 18. The presents of jewels made by the King and the royal family to the Dauphiness upon her marriage, are valued at three millions of livres, upwards of 130,000 l. sterling.

The fix companies of merchants of this city celebrated the marriage of the Dauphin with a benctolence that does honour to that body. The 17th they visited the prisons, and delivered such as had been confined for debts contracted for necessary provisions.

william De Grey, Esq; his Majesty's attorney-general, moved the court of King's-bench, for the discharge of Mr. Bingley; the court resused to do it; but the attorney-general, as law-officer to the crown, intisted upon it, as Mr. Bingley had suffered two years imprisonment, which was sufficient for any offence he may have been guity of. He was set at liberty accordingly.

A very remarkable act was solemnized at Newstadt, Queen of Hungary's dom The bones of the great E Maximilian I. were again in after a second absolution. occasion was as follows: Th press Queen, having order imperial palace of that city fitted up for the use of the fian Military Academy jul blished there, and the church to belonging, to be repair beautified and new altars added, on the 21st of Fel when the workmen were em in taking down the great a coffin was discovered under t fonry, very much decayed. confulting the ancient as it was found, that the b Maximilian I. had been de in the church dedicated George, the church in qu upon which the farther ope were suspended till after h perial Majesty's permission the cossin should be obtain do this, in order to confi truth of the ancient reco Majesty was graciously ple give her confent; and accor on the 11th of March, the ered coffin was examined, facred relics of that glorion wete actuall found. Her rial Majcity being certified fact, ordered a leaden cossi prepared, and inclosed in of wood, for the reception precious relics, in order th might again be deposited same place, now under th altar, with the utual cere Upon a nice examination body, before its second int it appeared to have been vered with quick-lime, a rapt in white linen, feemed to have been well of white damalk, of scarlet velvet emits remarkable, that different veliments crutble, but also their ours. On his breast eaden plate, on which a Latin inscription.

lacart was this day ed by order of the al, prohibiting for fix mmerce by land and a the inhabitants of and the subjects of Palatine, the foundawas owing to fome proceedings on both sequence of which, tion has enfued. Suing to the Palatines, etnined at Rotterdam, en, some boats have longing to the Datch ower Rhine. The afe ferious, and if not mmodated, may pofflive of a supture.

divery, a little before d Mayor, the Alderberiffs, and Commonout from Guildhall after the Lord Mayor, Ladbroke, Mr. Alderand Sir William Stepatied through Temgates were suddenly Mr. Alderman Harley sext in the processob, sew in number, began to pelt him and dirt, and pulled his chariot, opposite of the Sun Tavern, was succed to take to preferve his life. After continuing here some time, he went away in a backney coach, with a gentleman who had accompanied him, but not without being sollowed and insulted by part of the mob that at first beset him.

As foon as the Lord Mayor heard the gates were thut, he fent Me Gates, the City Marshal, back, who opened them without any obstruction, and the whole procession (Mr. Harley excepted) arrived at St. James's about ten minutes before two, the time appointed for their reception.

After the Lord Mayor had waited in the anti-chamber at St. James's confiderable time, the Lord Chamberlain came out with a paper in his hand, and read to the following effect . " As your Lordship thought fit to speak to his Majesty after his answer to the late remonifrance, I am to acquaint your Lordship, as it was unusual, his Majerly defires that nothing of this kind may happen for the future." The Lord Mayor then defired the paper might be delivered to him. The Lord Chamberlain faid he acted officially, and had it not in orders to deliver the paper. The Lord Mayor men defired a copy: To which the Lord Chamberlain replied, he would acquaint his Majesty, and take his directions; but he did not return until the order was brought for the whole Court to attend with the address.

Sir Robert Ladbroke complained to the Lord Mayor, that flones were thrown at his coach. The Lord Mayor called Mr. Gates, the City Marshal, face to face with the Father of the city, and asked him, if that was so, who contradicted by Robert; he then said, dirt was thrown; thrown; the Lord Mayor answered, there was no dirt in the street; Sir Robert then said, that the mob fpit in at the windows coach.

In the Presence Chamber, Mr. Rigby attacked the Lord Mayor, telling him he had promifed in Parliament to be answerable for the peace of the city, and that he was informed by Sir Robert Ladbroke, that there had been a great riot in the city, which his Lordship had taken no care to quell.

The Lord Mayor immediately replied, that he should be ready to answer for his conduct at all times, in all places, and on every proper occasion.

Mr. Sheriff Townsend standing by the Lord Mayor, told him, Mr. Rigby fays there has been a great tumult in the city; Mr. Rigby replied, Sir Robert Ladbroke says Mr. Townsend asked him, if Sir Robert Ladbroke was not a Magistrate? And why he had not appealed the tumult, if there was one? Mr. Rigby said, the Magistrates had been mobbed. Townsend replied, taking the whole together, in his opinion, the people had been mobbed by the Magistrates, and not the Magistrates by the people. For the address and bis Majesty's answer, see the state Papers.

This day the Lord Mayor, attended by the two sheriffs, and some other of the worshipful court of aldermen, proceeded in state to the Old Bailey, where his Lordship laid the first stone of a new jail, intended instead of the present very inconvenient one of Newgate. His Lordship, after laying the above flone, made a prefent of twenty guineas to the workmen, and then proceeded 1 feffions-house to try the prison

Edinburgh, April 25. Yel came on before the high co Justiciary here, the trial of liam Harris, allias Harries, cerned in the forging and i out falle notes of the Thistle of Glafgow: Upon the par coming into court, his behi indicated some degree of infa upon which his lawyer, Mr. well, suggested that he was proper object of punishment. objection, however, being ruled, about two o'clock the for the trial of forgery, &c. chosen, and the proof taken l the court of fession was res them. They inclosed about h and this day at ten returned verdict, unanimously finding guilty; upon which he was tenced to be hanged in the (Market upon the 30th of next. The above William ries, before his being found had issued 452 forged notes apprehended, there found no less than 9677, a 20 s. each. The last were cording to an order of court. mitted this afternoon to the fl and burnt.

The Pynsent cause, now pending in the Court of Char and which has been heard fucceeding Saturdays, in this Term, is founded on the do right of the late Sir William fent, to bequeath his real e to the Earl of Chatham; the Sir Robert Pynsent, now reć Killymore, in the kindom of land, contending that the te had no right to make fuel quest to the prejudice of his heir at law. On this issue is je learned arguments have been on both fides, and the mati Mepending, is of 24,000 l.

[113

· grandelt fire-works that have seen known; were this evenxhibited in the square of XV. at Paris, in honour of manphin's marriage; but the cataltrophe that marked this ition, will long be rememwith horror and regret. It is that the place of the firewas so vail, that it exceeded owers of the engineer to re-: all its parts, and to reitrain eds; and some of the appahaving exceeded his intenor playing off untimely, threw of fire upon the people. dreadful confequences shat I from this alarm, might in it meafure be imputed to the ation of the magistrates. In est place, there was no feafrefled for the convenience of mators; and in the next, mmunications between the de Louis and the Boulevards, confift of three fireets, were manner blocked up; that on ft hand, the Rue la Bonne e, being narrow, was renimpaffable by the coaches; n the right, called Rue St. itin, in which the Count St. nio, Secretary of State, has sidence, and in whose deent the care of this metroie, and by whose order the orks were exhibited, for the niency of bigulett and friends, scellency would not permit opulace to pais, and this the principal thoroughfare he Place de Louis, where the orks were exhibited, to the ards, there was only the middle fireet free for the foot-paffengers. The Goveling multitude that bad crowded to fee the fireworks, being feized with a panic, upon finding a harry and confusion, for which the greater part of them were unable to account; endeavoured to escape through this arrow fireet, which they foon jammed up in fuch a manner as to make it impassable. The confusion increased to such a degree, that one trampled ever another, till the people lay one upon another in heaps; those who were undermost, stabbed those who lay above them, in order to difengage themtelves. The pickpockets and robbers availed themfelves of the connition; and many ladies had their car-rings torn ont of their ears. A scaffold, erected near the palace of Bourbon, broke down with the over-weight of the fpectators, who all fell into the river. There have been already taken up above a hundred drowned at St. Cloud, but many bodies have been driven beyond that place. The carnage was dreadful. It is computed that not less than 3000 are either killed, wounded, or rendered cripples during the remainder of their days.

.. Xiil.

The humanity of the new-married pair on this melancholy occasion, cannot be sufficiently applauded. The Dauphin, 11 the first transports of his gries, gave all the money allotted for his month's expences towards the rehef of the sufficients, and in this act of generosity he was followed by the Dauphiness, whose mind was so deeply impressed with the relation of what had happened, that it was with diriculty she could be kept from fainting. His Majetty was also greatly affected, and issued orders, that no expence might be spared to succour and assist the miferable. In short, such a scene of real distress never before presented itself, and it is thought it will be a means of utverly abolishing that kind of entertainment for the su-ture.

The number of the dead, so far as the bodies that were drowned have been recovered, appears by the latest and best accounts to have been in all 712. Among which were four monks, two abbés, and twenty-two persons of condition. It coes not appear that there are any English among the number.

His most Christian Majesty has ordered 100,000 livres to be expended towards the relief of the unfortunate persons who were hurt, or have lost their relations in the consustion on the night of the city fireworks. The Dauphiness and the Meidames have also contributed.

At Grozette, in Italy, there has been discovered, at the depth of & feet, an ancient furnace, about which were found fome antique medals, but most of them so effaced with ruft, that it was with difficulty the time of building the furnace could be made out. the reverse of one of these medals. which appears to be of the Emperer Flerio, the words Victor Orbis may plainly be read. This Emperor is not mentioned in the supplement published by Muratori and Vallemont; but in the line of Emperors recited by others, we find him in the second century of the vulgar æra, about which time this furnace feems to have been con-Aructed. There is another medal of the Emperor Germanicus, but it is impossible to ascertain to which of the Emperors of that name it belongs. About the same depth, but in another place, there have likewise been discovered some fragments of baked earth, among which are feveral lachrymatory vales that were antiently placed by the coffins of the dead, and even some remains of the sepulchres in which these lachrymatories are supposed to have been deposited, Of the same earth some prins were found, about two feet high, one foot in circumference about the middle, and between fix and feven in the neck; but what was most remarkable, these urns were not made flat at bottom, but ended in a point, which were stuck in the ground, in order to make them stand upright. Within these gras were found fmall bones, almost reduced to powder, from whence it should seem, that they were formed for the preservation of some fragments of the dead.

York, May 22. There is now living in the parith of Wigan, in Lancashire, one Fairbrother, aged 138 years. The youngest of his four sons is now 104 years old, and the father still sollows the trade of a cooper.

Died lately, Chauncy Townsend, Esq. member for Wigtom, in Scotland, (being the first Englishman that ever represented asy place in Scotland.)

Mrs. Gordon, a maiden lady, supposed to have died worth upwards of 50,000 l. great part of which she has lest to charitable uses; among the rest one thousand pounds for erecting an hospital for the relief of indigent old maids.

At Bath, in the 103d year of her age, Sarah Delon, of that city.

At

goburn, in Bedfordshire, rey, aged 105 years, forurdiner to his Grace the f Bedford; from whose he has enjoyed an annual of 201, for upwards of last past.

JUNE.

The committee of the court ommon-council, appointed at the Earl of Chatham thanks of that court for stic conduct in parliament, a his lordship this day ace annual meeting of the e fociety for the relief of ws and orphans of clergy-ld at Canterbury, 225 l. ordered to be distributed 12 widows, and 22 ur-rivate letter from France, that the third day after inge, the Dauphinels went wifit to her aunt, the prinfa, who has retired into the e numery at St. Dennis, gious order is prodigiously, ad the noviciate remark-

When the Dauphine's ived by the Prince's, the infled to her cell by an and no other attendant, fadame Sophia, the king e's fecond daughter. The Louisa opened the door of herfelf. She appeared in of a novice of the order, sel thift and wooden those, tookings. She never either milk or butter, and to but twice a week; and se last quarter of her noviciate. The will not taffe it at all, Her royal highness's bed is a matrais on the floor, with a fingle coverlid. She fleeps but five hours in the four and-twenty, and will not take off her cloaths when the lies down, refefing any indulgence on account of her rank. She prefented the Dauphiness with a small crucifix of gold, fer with diamonds, which belonged to the queen her mother, and was the only thing of value the had left herfelf. She had a crucifix made of box-wood. which the immediately hung on her breast instead of it.

The fessions ended at the 2d. Old-Bailey. At this fessions 83 prisoners were tried, 13 received sentence of death, 3 to be transported for 14 years, 24 for 7 years, 2 were branded, and 4 whipped,

This morning, a little after nine, came on in the court of King's Bench, Westminster Hall, before the right hon, the Lord Mansfield, the trial of Mr. Almon, by information, for felling the letter of Junius to the King in the London Muleum. A little before twelve the jury went out, and flaid upwards of two hours, when they returned, and put a question to the court, whether the matter could be deemed guilty of publishing what had been only fold by his fervant, and that without his knowledge? The judge answered, that in his opinion he was, as every mafter is aniwerable for the acts of his fervant, The jury thereupon immediately brought him in guilty, and his fentence now remains in the break of the court. But a new trial is moved for, and expected.

[1] 2

Extraff

Extrast of a letter from Portsmouth.

This day arrived the Tamer floop of war, and the Forida store-ship, from Port Egmont in Falk-land Island, near the Streights of Magellan. By these ships we learn, that two Charles frigates of 36 grass each, came to Port Egmont, and, in the name of his catholic majesty, required our people to quit the island. The Spaniards have transported troops trom Buenos Ayres, and have left a garrison on that part of the island lately settled by the French.

John Stretcher, a German, who had absconded with 1851, of his mafter's money, which he was entrusted to receive at the bank, was overtaken by Mr. Johnson of Auslin Friars, one of the partners in the lefs, at Boulegre, and by the readine's of the magnifrates of that city, he was secured. On the first surprize of being taken, he delivered up the whole money, except the little he had expinded, and Mr. Johnson, pleased with repentance, gave him ten guineas to bear his expences to his own country.

Charles Stevens, Henry 4th. Holyoak, and Henry Hughes, were executed at Tyburn, purinant to their tentence, for the murder of Mr. Shaw, and afterwards carried to Surgeons-hall for diffection: the two latter declared, that Stevens had brought them into a bad course of life.

Was tried before Lord 6th. Chief Justice Wilmot, at Guild'all, a cause in which the angues of a bankrupt was plaintiff. The plaintiff's case consisted in a charge against the desendant, for having encouraged the bankrupt to purchase goods on credit (under false pretences) of a lineadiaper, to the amount of 500l. and upwards, in order to raile money thereon to answer his prefent exigencies, which goods it appeared the bankrupt fold w the defendant at the same price, though he only received half the money; for which the defendant forced the bankrupt to give him a receipt in full; but, notwithstanding these receipts, the jury found a verd et for the plaintiff to the amount of the short payments viz. 258 l.

This morning, about half past six o'clock, her royal highwels the princess dowager of Wales fet out with a grand retinue, from Carlton-house, Pail-mall, for Dover, in order to embark for Germany. She was accompanied by the duke of Gloucetter, and attended by Lard Boston, chamherlain of the household. Lady Howe, one of the ladies of her bed-chamber, Mil's Reynolds, and Mils Heinken. dreffing-woman w her royal highness. It was thirtyfour years, the latter end of April last, since her royal highness him landed in England in 1736.

Came on before Lord Mansfeld in the court of King's-bench at Gairdhail, a trial on an action brought against a stone-mason, for putting bond timber, contrary to act of parliament, into a public house, he larely built in this city; when the jury gave a verdict for the plainting, with 40 l. damages and costs of toit.

A very important cause came on to be tried in the court of Common Pless at Guildhall, before Lord Chief Justice Wilmot, wherein Mr. Reycolds, of Lime-street, at Stepney was defendant.

Under

ion, which concerned every in this kingdom, was against the defendant, for f and in an outrageous (affited by ten or twelve and with great clubs, hired this guate a room in and avera in Fen-, where a cause was No tion between one are, a client of Mr. Reyand Mr. T-, the de-'s partner, and taking and ; way Mr. Reynold 's bag, o sained his client's papers. k was clearly proved; and ge having fummed up the e with great impartiality, I the jury, in an excellent : concern only Mr. Reyout every gentleman in the this kingdom; that it was oft ferious nature, and that tleman would be fate in insere committed; that he give the method which the nt had taken in ferzing the other term than flealing, t the jury should give such s as might deter persons oing such flagrant acts of : for the future; they withor about two minutes, and in a verdict for the plainco l. damages, besides costs

This morning, at nine 5'clock, came on in the f King's-bench at Guildstore Lord Mansfield, the Henry Sampson Woodsall, Shoriff of the county of the original printer of Junius's ex, was plaintiff, and a letter, in the Public Advernier of the 19th of December laft.

The Attorney-General addiested the jury with a speech on the importance of juries; but confined them to the bare fall of the defendant pull thing a paper which he called a libel; and then made an apology for bringing on Mr. Almon's trial for felling only, be-fore the original printer's, and promited to profecute all the printers a d publishers of this celebrated piger. Lord Manifield, in his charge to the jury, faid, they had nothing to do with the intention, nor with the other words in the information, fich as malicious, feditions, è c. which he affirmed were ail words of courf ; just as it is faid in an that it was a matter of ind Ament for murder, that the reat importance; that it person did, Ge, at the infligation of the devil. Then he remarked as u o., Mr. Almon's trial, that there were but two propositions for the confideration of the jury ; one was, the fact of publishing the paper, an attorney with any pa- the other, whether a proper cok-f such daring acts of vio- fruction was put, in the interesttion, upon the feveral blanks in the paper in the information; and as to the contents of the paper,

> At ten minutes before twelve the jury withdrew, and returned about nine, finding Mr Woodlali gut'y of printing and publifuing on y. It's court had broke up about 4 6'cl ch, fo that the jury, by order or 1 e d Mausfield, attended his lead in with their verdict, at his house in whether they were true or faile, Le faid, it was wholly immaterial

Bloom foury-fquare.

This day the address, petition, and remonstrance from the treeholders of the county of Surrey is 15 [I] 3 1.14 presented to his Majesty at St. James's by Sir Francis Vincent, Bart. one of the representatives of that county in parliament, tended by the Hon. Peter King, Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Joseph Mawbey, Bart. and Benjamin Hayes, Esq.

Three children of a poor cottager in Ireland having eaten of the herb Daho, or Water-parsnep, two of them died, and the other was with difficulty saved.

A plowman near Biggleswade in Bedfordshire, threw up a pot of gold coins, supposed of Edward VI. one of them measured exactly one inch, one quarter, and one eighth in diameter; the representation on one fide is a man in armour, in a ship, holding a sword in his right hand, and on his left arm a shield, with four compartments of three lions and three fleur-de-lis. On the other side a large cross equally divided, the segend hardly to be made cut. They are of pure gold, of seventeen shillings value.

The judgment of the governor and council of Calcutta was reversed by his Majesty's council here, on an appeal from William Bolts, Esq; for removing him from the council there, without a sufficient cause.

A comet was discovered 14:h. by M. Messier, at Paris, about eleven in the evening. was fituated between the head and the bow of Sagitarius, in the milky way, and was scarcely visible with a two-foot telescope. The light of the nucleus was vivid and white. On the night between the 15th and 16th of June, the right ascension of the comet was 272 deg. 57 min. 37 sec. and its declination 15 deg.

55 min. 24 sec. south. night between the 20th its right ascention was 273 min. 2 fec. By these obse the motion of the come days, is found to be no n 23 min. one-half right : and 1 deg. 25 min. 20 fe Its motion fol order of the figns, rifing the equator; and it passe ridian about midnight. met increases in light, become considerable.

Being the first day of term, the two Kennedys were brought before Lor field, in order to take t for murder a second time appeal of the widow Bi it appeared that the pla pleaded over on the ap not on the bill, which done before the court c them to trial. This omiff it necessary for the pri be lent back to the Kinj till the necessary forms through, so that the h put off sine die.

About 12 o'clock at most terrible fire broke Foulsham, a market town folk, occasioned (as supp a person throwing some l ashes on a dunghill adj old thatched stable weather being dry and v houses were entirely a the church, chancel, and were demolished, the bare walls standing flames raged to fierce a that many of the poor fufl their all, to their inco The damage co distress. be computed, but is su to some amount

[119

, exclutive of the church. dward Affley's and Mr. s engines came just time to ftop the fire at Mr. s's, or the whole town it is : must have suffered, being hatched buildings.

governors of the city of lying-in hospital, held mniverlary meeting, and d 877 l. 18 s. 3 d. towards port of that charity.

Was opened the fine monument at the west end of after-abbey, to the memory late Richard Tyrreli, Eig; The miral of the white. eems to be taken from that m in the burial fervice, Ga fball render up their dead. miral is represented rifing e clouds from the fea, furwith angels, one of whom ing the last trump, while l reaches out his hand to in his flight. The under refeats the fea with rocks, riew of the Backingham var. The figure of Hope y admired, but the critics ture lay the whole is too to be extily diffinguished te eye of an artift.

This evening her royal fighness the young Prin-christened in the great thamber by his Grace the op of Canterbury: her ghness was named Briza-The sponsers were, the y Prince of Heffe-Caffel. ed by the Earl of Herted Chamberlain of his houshold; the Princess Sweden, represented by stess of Holderness, and tels of Naffau-Weilburg, ed by the Counters Dow. ffingham.

At five o'clock this morning, died the right hon. William Beckford, lord mayor of the city of London. If his lordship's character could want any aiditional luftre, it would receive it from the manner of his death; for notwithstanding his having a heavy cold on him (which he acquired at Fonthill the day before) so attentive was he to difcharge the important duty committed to his truft, as chief magifirate of this city, that he travelled a hundred miles in one day, which increased his cold to a rheumatic fever, and thereby terminated the life of a man, whose character will ever be held in the most honourable and grateful remembrance.

The late lord mayor has made the following disposition of his estate; he has bequeathed a legacy of 5000 l. to each of his natural children, except the eldest ton, who was married to a lady of fortune in Jamaica; and to him he left only 1000 l. unless his wife should die before she came of age; and, in that case, 5000 l. in common with the rest: but as the will was made fome time ago, and the is now of age, thar 4000 l laples.

The greatest part of his fortune, real and perfonal, except fome other inconfiderable legacies, he has left to his legitimate fon; and in case of his death, to his eldest natural fon; and in default of heirs of his body, to his other natural fons in fucceilion, according to feniority.

The lady of the late lord mayor having a fettlement on her marriage of 1000 l. a year, there is no provide a made for her in the will of her hufband.

Was finally determined by the Lords Com nissioners in Camera,

[4] 4

the long depending cause between the Earl of Chatham, as representative of the late Sir William Pynsent, Barr, and — Daw, Esq; when the decree obtained by his Lordship was reversed in savour of Mr. Daw. The sum contended so:, with costs of suit, &c. will amount to between 14 and 15000 l.

A remarkable cause came 22d. on this day, upon an action between a gentleman and Miss Jones, on a bond granted by the former to the latter for three thoufand pounds. Several bonds had been granted and cancelled, but that of January 11 the, was the bone of contention. Lord Bolingbroke gave evidence to the need, as he himself had been a fulfcribing witness thereto. Lord A ansheld very properly observed, that it wasts Jones had been a common p ---- e, he would infantly have let aside the bond as void and null, but as it was granted for value, and that she lived with the gentleman at the time, giving her company to none other, the point of law was on her fide, and the bond 'ell to be fullained; and so the jury, without going out of court, decided in her favour, with cotts of fuit, and other damages.

Was held, at the Guildhall of this city, a common-hall for the election of a Lord Mayor for the remainder of this year, in the room of William Beckford, Effq; The recorder made a very handsome speech in praise of the late Lord Mayor, which was received by the livery with much merited applause. He then opened thortly the lamented occasion of calling that common-hall. The names of the several aldermen who have served the office of sheriff were then put in nomination. The majority of hands was greatly for the two Aldermen Trecothick and Croby, and was so declared by the sheriff; but a poll was demanded in favor of Sir Henry Bankes, which we accordingly granted, and ordered to open at two o'clock.

Yesterday being midsummer day, a common-hall 25th was held at Guildhall, London for the election of sherists and other city officers.

The several aldermen below the chair, who had not served the office of sheriff, were put in nomisation; as were likewise the gentlemen who had been drank to by the Lord Mayor: But Messrs. Baker and Martyn, who were nominated by the livery, had a great shew of hands, and were accordingly not turned and declared duly elected with the greatest applause.

This day Sir William Henry Ashurst, Knt. was called to the degree of serjeant at law at the bar of the court of Common Pleas Westminster, with the usual ceremony, and afterwards took his sea as puisse judge of the King's bench, in the room of Judge Blackstone, who took his place as puisse judge of the Common Pleas, is the room of Sir Joseph Yates, de ceased.

Early this morning two highwaymen attempting to rob a flagecoach at Mims Wash, the gurd fired at them, shot one dead, and shattered the arm of the other, whom they apprehended and brought to town. Upon the report of the surgeon, before Sir John Fielding, that the man's life was in danger, he was carried to the Middletex Hospital, where his arm was cut off. He consessed his was Thomas Wation, and mpanion's William Ward; they were both postilions, id robbed ever fince I nuary whagen, June 16. The noblend ladies, who were appointattenc 'Lucen cophia Miagdatune. ... affembled in her y's monoing spartments, at o'clock in the avening, on .a o [100], from whence they in procession is the chapel where they are received marfhais. Lire two ferthe one in the Danish, the in the German language, treached, and a stimo mutic erformed on the occasion. ort of the ceremony being the coffin was carried out chapel by twelve colonels ficers of the marine, who ationed round it during the , and pot into the hearfe at reat palace gate, through the procession began in the ng manner: I. A fquadron le guards. 3. A herald on ck. 3. The noblemen in - according to their ranks, aving lour fervants bearing . 4. Tweive toyal pages. ieir governor on horfeback. countailors of justice. 6. entinhommes de chambre, e gentilih mmes de cour, d by two fervants on foot, terches. 7. The liv-voga, coach, of the late Queen, d by twelve lackies; and on e of it a heydak. 8. The earle drawn by hories covith black, adorned with roos, and led by captains marine. Those who had the coffin out of the chapel, attended the hearfe on horfeback.

[121

9. The major-generals, counsellors of conterences, rear-admirals and counteilors of flate attended on horfeback. 10. The royal mourning coaches (before each of which went eight lackies of the royal livery with torches) and a fquadron of horfe-guards closed the procession.

This day Mr. Almon, who some time before had been some time before had been some time before had been some guilty by a special jury, for publishing Junius's Letter addressed to the King, was admitted to shew cause before the Judges of the Court of King's-bench, for a new trial; but the argument, produced by his council not being judged satisfactory, the court unanimously dismissed the cause, and thereby confirmed the verdict.

A comet was discovered by Mr. Dunn, 34 min, after eleven in the evening. Its diffance from the brightest star in the Harp was 48 deg. 10 min, and from the brightest thar in the Eagle 22 deg. to min. refraction included; from which its place is determined between the right hand of Serpentarius and the Equator; is nearly S. at midn. with about 351 deg. merid. alt. and nearly opposite to the fun. Ig has no tail, but a filver-coloured nucleus, and a coma of about half a deg. in diameter; that part of horisback, each of them the coma next the fun being most illuminated. Dr. Bavis observed the fame comet early in the morn-

At a grand levee held at St. James's, his Serene Highness Princes renett of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz, brother to her Majelly, was prefent for the first time since his arrival in England, which was on June 23.

The

The first stone of the new office for the New-River Company was laid by Mr. Holford, governor. The current coin of the kingdom was laid underneath the stone, and the following inscription engraved upon it:

First stone laid by Peter Holford, Esq; Governor.

Bir George Colchroke, Bart. DeputyGovernor.

Menry Berners, Esq; Treasurer.

June xxviii. M.DCC.LXX.

Robert Milne, Architect.

The scite of this building is that of the play-house where Shake-speare atted.

Extrad of a Letter from Mr. John Hill, of Hull, giving an Account of the Loss of the Betsey, Capt. Watson, from Virginia to Charles-Town, South-Carolina.

On the 16th of May, having left Cape Henry but three days, as we were standing to the southward, the wind came from the north to northwest, and blew extremely hard, which occasioned a great swell; before preparations could be made, our vessel was laid upon her beainends. In about five minutes we lost fix hands off the decks, when our mizen-mast was cut away, but to no purpole; our main-malt was then cut by the board, and our fore-mail going at the same time, which we lashed together, our ship shen stoking, obliged us to swim to the mail, where we lay floating seven-and-thirty hours, when we we'e taken up by an European thip bound for Glaigow. Our captain was lost, after breaking five of his ribs, occasioned by the force of the tiller standing at the helm. A young lady and her father, of the name of Hiaght, were allows, who expired in each other's arms; and also the atoresaid six hand. Our number saved was thirteen. Our ship and cargo belonged to Nathan Alben Smith, of Virginia, who is the greatest sufferer by the unhappy event.

Inis day the poll for the Lord Mayor of the city of London, for the remainder of the mayoralty, ended at Guildhall; when the numbers were, for Alderman Trecothick 1601; Crossy 1434; Bankes 437; whereapon the return of the two former being made to the court of Alderman for their choice, the election was declared for Alderman Trecothick. He was therefore immediately is vested with the gold chain.

The annual medals given by Lord Bruce to the students of Wiachester-college, were adjudged this year to the following gentlemens Tine gold one, for the best copy of Latin verses, to Thomas Heavy Lowth, Eq; the Bishop of Oxford's son; and the silver ones, for elecution, to Edward Sandford, and Francis Paul Stratford, Esgra.

A trajical affair happened duting the course of the present month at Lyons in France; a young couple having conceived a violest passion for each other, and not being able to obtain their parents consent to marry, formed the extravagant resolution of constituting a kind of chapel, and fetting up an altar before which they were reciprocally to swear eternal fidelity to each other, and then to shoot themselves through the head; all which they executed. It is added, that they had carried their romantic notion so sar, as to purchase a dagger, to accomplish their purpole of killing themselves, if the pistols had failed of that effect. The lad was the son of a sencingmaker, and the girl the daughter of a wealthy inn-keeper.

Letters from Venice declare, that the republic have done every thing in their power to convince the Turks of their being determined to maintain a strict neutrality. corps of troops has been fent to Cephalonia, in order to seize the effects of Count Metaxa, and some others who entered on board the Russian fleet. The principal magiftrate of this state at Corfu has conficated the goods of Capt. Palieachia, who had armed a merchant thip he commanded, and joined the Imperial fleet. A reward of 200 ducats has been offered for the apprehending him.

The news from the Morea, during the course of the present month, has been unfavourable to the Ruffians and infurgents who The Turks have joined them. being reinforced, are said to have failen upon them with great fury, to have retaken Patresso, and to have slaughtered without mercy all the Greeks and Russians who fell into their hands. The English Consul with his son and family escaped, almost miracuously. The bloody rage that incenses the Turks and Christians against each other, is productive of the most savage cruelties, and excites even to the ripping up of women and chil-

They write from Paris, that the pleating behaviour and extraordimary affability of the Dauphinets, 2410 dispenses with several points of kingdom will not depart from the ceremony, inviting her brothers fidelity, submission, attachment, and fifters and her aunts to sup with her as often as she pleases; and her Royal Highness goes to Lee them with the same freedom. She rides out with a master of the horse, and walks about unattended with servants, with that freedom which is suitable to her lively dispolition, and at the lame time conducive to her health.

Extrast of a Letter from Paris.

The precedency given at the Ball Paré on the 19th ult. to Mademoiselle de Lorraine, who danced immediately after the Princes of the Blood, having given offence to many of the principal nobility, the King, in order to remove the pique they had taken on that account, wrote the following circular letter to them.

"The Ambassador from the Emperor and Empress Queen asked of me on the part of his master and Mistress, that I would be pleased to confer some mark of distinction on Mademoiselle Lorraine on the present occasion of the marriage of the Dauphin my granufon with the archducheis. The dancing at the ball being the only thing that could not be deemed as a precedent for the future, the choice of the dancers being entirely dependant on my will, without regard or precedency, rank, or dignity (except the Princes and Princesses of the Blood, who cannot be ranked with any other French family) and being unwilling to change or make innovations on what has been the practice universal admiration. and custom of my court, I think With the King's permission she that the principal nobility of my and even friendship which they have always shewn to myself as well as to my predecessors, nor act so as to displease me in any respect, and more especially on the present occasion, when I am desirous to testify my gratitude to the Empress Queen for the present she has made to me, which I hope, as well as you, will compleat the happiness of the remainder of my life."

The King finding that the above did not quite reconcile the alarms of the nobility, has been pleated to declare that a lady of quality shall be the first who dances after the Princes and Princesses of the Blood, at the ball which shall be given on account of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Count de Provence. In consequence of this declaration, the Dukes have met to draw up an address of thanks to his Majesty.

The following copy of a letter from Mr. de Voltaire to the Mar-shal Duke de Richlieu, is handed about.

" I wish, my lord, to have the pleafure of giving you my blefting before I die. The expression may be new to you, but it is nevertheless true. I have the honour to be a capuchin: our general at Rome has just sent me my patent, in which I am stilled spiritual brother, and temporal father Capuchin. Send me word which of your decealed mistresses you would wish to get out of purgatory, and I Iwear by my board, she shall not be there 24 hours longer. As in consequence of my new vocation, I must give up the good things of this world. I have religned to my relations what is due to me of the estate of the late Princess de Guile, and from that of Monfieur v Intendant. They will apply you for your directions in t affairs, which they will effect favour. I fincerely give you blessing, and am, &c.

An unworthy Capuchin.

Died lately, the Rev. H. Citrector of Raiton, in Lincolal upwards of 50 years. He was French prote ant, and lest country for his religion.

Mr. Benj. Lee, of Santonia apornecary, alled 95.

Mr. Thomas Bernard, tale chandler, worth 100,000 l.

Ann Hasfield aged 105, Tinsley, Yor shire.

James Hathelo, aged 105, is faid to have faved his life hearing St. Paul's clock tink at Windfor.

John Haynes, aged 105. Wooton-Batter, Wilts.

Ralph Nied, near Chester, 107; he had buried fix wives.

JULY.

This morning were executed at Tyburn, purluant to their sentence, James Attawa Richard Bailey, for stealis quantity of plate in the hor Thomas Le Merr, Eig; in ford-row: Daniel Pfluyer, burglary in the house of R Walker, in Little Carter-Francis Lutterell, for the wearing apparel, the proper Thomas Jackson, in the hou William Shepherd, in Bell-Temple-bar; and John Read Miller, for returning from portation.

The robbery for which Attaway me most artful and during that as been known. About nine in as evening, Mr. Le Merr, the rolecutor, being in the country, bey, with an accomplice not yet aken, knocked at the door of his scale, and when it was opened, ootman, which he faid was for his suder; but before the man could villains stabbed him in the belly which they had provided, tied his stands behind him, robbed him of or fix men came." his watch, and dragged him down fairs into the kitchen, where they light a candle; this done, they tied his bands behind him a fecond haneck, then across his face, and in fuch a manner, that it went sough, they then burft open the expence of the fame. pantry, where the plate was, and the man had gnawed the rope in order to deliver his credentials. two with his teeth, and got his in the passage, to see whether they d Bailey toffered, was one of heard me, thinking if they did, I was a dead man. There is a fkylight: I got hold of a leaden pipe, and got up, and burft the window with my head. In trying to get through, I fluck half in and half out, and could neither get one way nor the other, for about three Bailey delivered a letter to the or four minutes, with the rope about me. At last I got our, and into the stable, and from thence tend the direction, they burft in at into the coach-house, and out of the door, that it, and one of the that into the yard; then I called for help as fast as possible. I went with a dagger; then took a cord out of the back stable yard to a public house, and immediately five

This day there was a very full court of Common council 5th. mud his hands, and made him held at Guildhall, when a motion was made, that a statue might be erected of the late right hontime, bringing the rope first round William Bockford, Esq; Lordmayor, with an infeription containing the words which his Lordthrough his mouth, and confined thip spoke to his Majesty at St. It open, making the ends of the James's, on prefenting the city tope fait behind. Thus bound, remondrance; and a committee of they dragged him back into a dark fix Aldermen and twelve Com-Pace, and there bolted him in. moners is appointed to carry the la a few minutes one of them re- fame into immediate execution; twied to fee if he was fail, and and are impowered to draw on the being told, as well as the man chamber for any fum not exceedcould speak, that he was fast e- ing 1000 l. towards defraying the

The new Imperial EmbaTador packed it up. In the mean time, had an audience of his M je ty, in

This day came on in the court unds loofe. " I then thought, of King's beach, Wellmintler, befays the man in his evidence, be- fore the right hon, the Lord Manfore the court,) that if I could get held, the great cause between Lord brick out at the top, I might get G --- and his royal highness the p into the area, and not stay D- of C---. The damages deeding there while they were were fail at 100,000 it and a great obbing my maker's house. I number of withulles examined, writ open the door, and liftened which examination ended about, counsel for his r—h—, the defendant, recapitulated most of the material parts of the evidence, and observed thereupon, that though the intimacy of the accused parties had been sufficiently proved not only by the witnesses, but also by a variety of letters that passed between them, which were read in court, yet he asserted that the plaintist had not brought any proof of the criminal act, for which the action was laid.

At seven o'clock in the evening the right hon. Lord Mansfield gave his charge to the jury, when they withdrew, and his lordship adjourned the court to his house in Bloomsbury-square; exactly at ten the jury lest the hall, and proceeded to his lordship's house, where they gave a verdict for the plaintiff, with ten thousand pounds damages.

At a general convention of the estates and legislature of the lse of Mann, being the first high court of Tynwald that has been holden there under the auspices of his present Majesty, since the regalities of Mann and the Illes have been annexed to the crown of Great Britain, the Bilhop and Clergy of the diocese presented an addrefs to his Excellency John E:q; the Governor, in which they congratulated his Excellency on the royal favour of being commissioned by his Majesty to the vicegerency of that island, and express their joy at seeing their antient, supreme, constitutional, and so much wished for court of Tynwald, restored to its mer or rather superior lustre and importance; and conclude with earnest supplications that his Majesty may never want so faithful a representative, the church so saccere a friend, or that island so acceptable a governor.

The governor concludes his answer, in a happy imitation or Shakelpeare.

Your applause, my lord, restects a virtue on myself, and makes me proud indeed!

To the archdeacon and clergy, he said, To deserve your esteem has ever been my peculiar study; to preserve it shall be my constant care. The same wise providence which has inspired your goodness, will, I doubt not, teach me, as far as I am able, to encourage and reward its labours.

A large sum of money, being part of the produce of crown lands on the island of Grenada, was received at the tre-sury.

A young woodcock was taken in a nest near Pressie Car, and was shewn at Newcastle as a great cariosity. The old ones were seen, but escaped. In Borlace's account of Cornwall there is a print of a young woodcock found some years ago in that county.

The Duke of Orleans's Answer to the Chancelior of France at the Bed of Justice, held at Versailles the 27th of June, 1770, when his Majesty caused his Letters Patent to be registered.

Even though not bound by the article of Parliament to which I contented yesterday, I could not in conscience deliver my opinion in a place where voices are not free, upon Letters Patent, not less contrary to the laws and maxims of the kingdom, than to the honour of the country.

The

[127

g then faid to the duke In case my parliaald affemble princes of and peers, I forbid you feat at the palace, and us to tell this to the oes of the blood.

1 8 W E R.

acr princes of the blood This order wall better our mouth than mine; , befeech you to excuse

g then turned towards inces of the blood, and nen, you hear.' a the Prince de Conti

re, we hear fomething ary to the rights of the and of very little adto Monf. le Duke D' me on the election of mber to serve in Parlithe city of London, in of the late right hon. eckford, Eiq; deceased, ard Oliver, Efq; was gut opposition. It is ite examples of the ciadon and Westminster, their members without ill be followed by all tions throughout Enghen all complaints will rrived this day with the : los of his Majesty's amaica, Capt. Talbot, radoes; the officers and ived, and brought to ortimouth.

Letters from Grenoble declare, that the 15th inft. the lieutenant of the police there, in examining a native of Piedmont, who was charged with flealing a gold watch from a merchant, was fuddenly affaulted by the villain, who flab. bed him in three places with a knife; on the clerk feizing the fellow behind, he received a flab from the latter in the stomach, of which he died. The desperado. feeing no prospect of escape, then skabbed himself in four places, and expired instantly. His body the next day was, by order of the parliament, drawn on a hurdle, and treated with every mark of indignity.

They write from Boston, in Lincoloshire, that a few days age a murder was committed by a private dragoon, in Bland's regiment, quartered there, on the body of a countryman from Frifkney:--The parties appeared very fociable, and had spent a great part of the day and night together at a public house: towards morning the deceased went to bed in the foldier's room, where the latter foon followed, and immediately on his entrance into the chamber drew a bayonet, and stabbed his companion in a most inhuman manner, in feveral parts of his body; then with the club-end beat him very cruelly on the head, and supposing him dead, left him weltering in his blood on the floor.-He then attempted the landlady's room (it is feared for the same purpole) which refifted his ftrongeft efforts; but the noise he made alarmed the family, who foon difcovered the murder, and had him y the Renown, lately properly secured; he was soon after conveyed to Lincoln-castle, guarded by constables, and two of the military: when enquiries were made, what could induce him to so great an act of cruelty, the only answer he would return was, He shirsted for blood, and if in his power would have more.—I he poor unhappy victim survived but a few hours: The coroners returned their verdict, wilful murder, and his corpse was conveyed to the grave, attended by a distressed widow and several children.

A new statute to regulate the academical habits was passed in the convocation at Oxford, by which the disputes that have lately agitated that feat of learning, are finally terminated. These disputes were not or so trifling a nature as they have been icpreferted to be; the point in queftion was not fo much whether this or that rank or degree of academics, should be distinguished by the or that peculiar gown or cap, as whether the statutes of the university should be dispensed with at the will and pleasure of any particular head of a college; or even by the authority of the heads of the houses in general, independently of the convocation, in which the legislative power refided: this flatute has theretore placed the whole of this matter upon a proper footing.

Letters from Tunis, May 31, say, or On the 25th intant all the Greeks in this city, both ecclesiastics and merchants, and their servants, amounting to about 150 in number, were arrested by order of the Bey; at the same time their effects were seized and put in the war-houses, and all their ready money, amounting to the value of about 25,000

Venetian sequins, was carrithe palace. The whole amo their goods and money is con at 800,000 piasters.

Tuesday last came on to be at the littings in Westminster before the right hon. Lord field, a cause wherein Mr. ! an attorney at law in the c Gloucester, was plaintiff, and briel Harris, Esq; post-mal that city, defendant: the 26th brought against the desendan detaining a letter received. post-office there, directed 1 plaintiff, and not delivering the to the plaintiff, at his place of in the said city; and the ever determine, whether the post-1 is not obliged to deliver all h received at his office, to the in tants to whom the same are dir at their places of abode, w any further composition or ment than the legal rate of pc The jury gave a special verdi the plaintiff, which will be a before the court of King'sin Michaelmas term.

The fessions at the Old Bailey, which began on the preceding Wednelday, ende which seven persons, three of for murder, received fenten death, It was the largest s that has been known, and very remarkable trials were l particularly that of Grieves for ting his house on fire; and three murderers, two of them for the inurder of Mestrs. Vei and Rogers, by shooting then on the highway; and the th watchman, for the murder woman with whom he coha by stabbing her to the Grieves was acquitted abou ming, for want of politive hough circumflances were ainfi bim.

on before Lord Mansfield recial, jury, at Guildhall, the trial of Mr. Miller, plishing Junius's letter in don Evening Post; only the special jury attended, ive talefmen were allowed ben out of the box. The Med about eleven, and at y waited upon Lord Manshis house, with their verguilty.

ame day the trial of Mr. came on before the fame ad a special jury, at the pe; only seven of this jury appeared, and therefore : taken out of the box; :lofed about three, and rpos Lord Mansfield as, with their verdict, not lajefty has been pleased to at the island of Dominica erected into a government, from, and independent of und government of the Caribbee islands, of which grade a part ; and to ap-· William Young, Bart. thereof.

Peter Conoway and Misael Richardson, for the of Mr. Venables and Mr. were executed at Tyburn, to their fentence. They victed on the evidence of fon, an accomplice, who at the day before the murnominitted, they bought a ld pistols in George-street; loaded them with bits of es of pewter (poons; that sed the deceated with inan.

men, they knocked Richardson and Fox, not yet taken, down twice; that fearing to be overpowered, Richardson shot Venables, and Conoway that Rogers at the fame time. Conoway at first refused to plead, but being taken down and thewa the apparatus for prefling him to death, if he refused, he relented, and after condemnation, he feemed much moved, and bleffed the judges for their kindness to him. They were both brought back from the place of execution to Surgeons Hall, where their chains were put on, and afterwards were hung upon a gibbet at Mile-end, near the place where the marder was committed.

John Purcell, the watchman, for the marder of the woman with whom he cohabited, was executed at the fame time, and was brought to Surgeons Hall, in order to be diffected. He was an old foldier, and enjoyed a pension for his for-mer services. He denied the intention of murder, and faid, that having been out with the deceased a-drinking, they came home together late; that a dog they kept being troublesome, he in his pasfion flung a knife at him, which unfortunately took place in the, deceased's heart. He never attempted to fly from justice, but told the neighbours what had happened, yet there was no reason to doubt of his guilt.

A cause came on lately to be tried in the Court of Commonpleas at Guildhail, wherein a paffenger in the P - ftage-coach was plaintiff, and the master of the faid stage-coach was defendant. The charge was, that the pasfengers retuling to dine at an ob them, but being flout hedge-alchouse on the road, one of the coachman's favourite houses; they went to another house at Epsom, and sent the coachman word whither they were gone, which house the coachman was obliged to pass, and accordingly did sull drive, and lest the passengers to return to London as they might: after applying to the master of the stage in vain, the plaintist brought this action, wherein the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and twenty pounds damages.

the Chichester mail, had it privately stolen from him between Newington and Clapton, by cutting the straps which tied it to the cart, while the boy was assep: it has since been found in a ditch, with most of the letters opened, and some of the bags carried off.

Was determined before the Lords Commissioners of the great seal, in Lincoln's-Inn Hall, the cause between the proprietors of Covent-The bill was Garden theatre. brought by the plaintiffs Messrs. Harris, Dagge, and Leake, against Mr. Colman and Mrs. Powell, the defendants, praying that certain articles of agreement, dated May 14, 1767, under which Mr. Colman had assumed the management of the theatre, might be set aside; and that Mr. Colman might be restrained from acting in any manner in the bulinels of the theatre, independent of the participation and concurrence of the plaintiffs, or that some proper person, or persons, might be appointed for mapaging the theatre, and for reciving the profits; and that as account might be taken of the profits from the 9th of September, 1768, and that the share belonging to the complainant Mr. Harris, might be paid to him, and mainder of the money is arising, or to arise, from the tre, might be paid into conject to farther order, and defendants might make tion to the plaintiffs, for shares of all damages arising the misconduct of the desince the 9th of Sept. 1768.

After a full hearing of & in the course of which the points were most ably ar the counsel on both sides, t dismissed the bill, as to en of the above prayer, exce related to the article of i in regard to which the c pleased to retain the bill, ferve costs for a twelvemos liberty to the plaintiffs, in (time, to bring their action for any damages pretended arisen to the theatre by as Mr. Colman, done after approbation of the plai writing expressed, between of Sept. 1768, and the their filing the bill, which February 1769.

An account was received the General Post Office, on Sunday the 3d of Jun 15 minutes after seven in t ing, they felt, at Cap Mole, four violent shock earthquake; the most leve two minutes and a half, a nied with a noise much echo that is heard from after the firing of cannon. town fortunately received mage: And by a French war that arrived there th after, from Port au Prine same island, they received lancholy account of the molition of that city, not ( ding, and above 500 peried in the ruins; the feik there lasted four hours : towns of Petit Gogave, gane, equally fuffered; but of the inhabitants perished. ans of Leogane, Cul de et au Prince, and Petit have not escaped, all their rks being totally deand a fmall town, called ix de Bouguit, with the part of its inhabitants, is d up. St. Mark's, Port the Cape, and Fort Dauly feit the shock as they e Mole.

eard in the Court of Chancause which has been some peoding between Mr. Mila bookfeller in London, Taylor, bookfeller at Berr vending a pirated edi-Mr. Tnomion's Sealons: 2 Lords Commissioners of t feal were pleafed to deat Mr. Taylor should ac-Mr. Millar's executors pat he had fold, and further me a perpetual injunction Mr. Taylor. Thus the about literary property is lofed, which is a matter of acera to many of the book-London, who have given ms of money to anthors for itings; and the bookfellers and country will do well warning, that they offend etling any pirated editions

A proposal made by the ords of the Treasury to y-Members, for the exof the Fleet-prison, for in St. George's Fields, to new gaol, was reported to of Common Council. The Lords of the Treasury proposed to exchange the scite of the prison (not an acre and a half) together with the old materials (not worth one thousand pounds) for sour acres and a quarter of ground at the circus in St. George's Fields, and five thousand pounds; and expect that the city will pull down the Fleet-market, and rebuild the same in the place of the prison, that the whole extent of the present market may become a street.

To the exchanging four acres of ground for an acre and a half, there was no opposition in Common Council, but it was faid, that the most advantageous spot to ereck houses for trade, ought not to be cholen for a prison; it was judged, that four acres and a quarter in the best part of St. George's Fields, was equal to one acre and a quarter in the fituation of the Fleet, which is for the most part, and must for ever remain back-ground. If io, to demand five thousand pounds is unreasonable. more to expect that the city should pull down and rebuild a market, which to do, and to pave, would coft at least thirty thousand pounds.

That it had never been fully considered, whether the scite of the prison would admit being made a market equally convenient with the present, and therefore that could not at once be admitted, though the proposal had been advantageous.

That if ever an exchange of ground took place, the removal of the market was not to be flipulated or expected. The proposal was therefore rajected; and a question proposed, that their Lordships be acquainted by the City Remembrancer, that this Court cannot agree.

[K] 2

agree to their proposal, bbt that to accommodate the public they are ready to treat for an exchange of lands for the purpose of building a new prison in St George's Fields, without being subject to any obligation to remove the Fieet-Market from where it now stands: it was carried in the affirmative.

This morning about four 27th. o'clock, a fire was discovered at the upper end of the Laying house, in the dock yard, Portimenth, which burning with great rury, foon afterwards communicated itiels to the new hemphouse, the carpenters shops, and to the little mait-house, all which buildings are entirely consumed, with the greatest part of the stores which they contained, confilling of about two or three hundred tons of hemp, a great quantity of pitch, tar, fails, rigging, and matts, with all the timber, &c. which lay near the faid buildings. We have not as yet been able to know the lois of lives on this dreadful occasion, but some have been lest, and many limbs broken. Mr. Eddowez's house keeper died of the fright. The tire broke out in five different parts not contiguous to each other; several persons are in hold on sufpicion of wilfully fetting it on fire. There are conformed, belides the buildings, as many ropes, feels, matts, Stc. as would have equipped 30 fail of men of war. [The loss fustained by this dreadful fire, was at first estimated at h. If a million; but by a calculation fince made at Portinguit, and traditionical to the Lords of the Admiralty, it amounts only to the fum of 149,8501.]

Yesterday was held a Court of Common council at the Guildhall of this city, when a great variety of bulinels was dispatched. The Orphan bill was read twice, us the London Workhouse bill reserve After the King's answer to the lat address of the city to his Maje on the birth of a Prince's had been read, it was moved that the anless should be entered in the city books on which Mr. Alderman Willer faid, that, " if the entering the King's answer among the city records meant any thing more than the bare recording that historical fact, that on such a day in Majesty gave such an answer to the city's address, it it implied the sightest degree of approbation, he would oppose the motion, for be thought the answer contained a cruel and unjust suspicion of the loyalty of the city of London, that it was exceedingly ill-timed 📫 uncourtly, to affront the citizens the is thank of their coming in the warmth of their hearts, to coague tulate their Sovereign on the in create of the royal family; but that, however, he should never aferibe so obnoxious a measure w the King, but to those Minister who fought our rule, who has planned the scheme for the sed ding of innocent blood in St George's-fields, and from the fr mement of their power had cor flacitly and fedulously endeavour to create diffintions between t King and his people, and partic larly the local inhabitants of the great capual, to ferve their or prinate, abandoned, and wick purpoles." The answer of ! Majehy was entered with only t date of the year and the day the month.

The two following motions pai in the Court of Common-council "That the conduct of the I of this city be taken into ration at the next Court of m-council, and that the dayor be defired to order of it to be inferted in the sies.

COI

[133

hat the oath taken by the er on his admittion into se forthwith printed and fent y Member of this Court."

Orders were feat to the Several royal dock-yards, to the guards, and to admit gers for the future without examination. One firong tance feems to confirm the that the dock-yard at Portfwas wilfully fet on fire, and , the men on board the -house Cutter, perceiving a in the dock-yard, observed gh a fpying-glass, by which old plainly discern it to ma four different places at ad took it to be a fbip ag. This was about three morning, two hours before discovered by the centinels

Countefs of Grammont was in the court of Verfailles, ent of some improper beaton the Countefs of Barré, to the Countefs of Barré, tamistress, at the play, afarrection of the populace rung, in France, on account learness of bread, alarmed istracy, who called in the to suppress it, by which was were lost. At Rheims sudered a magazine, and ome Monks who opposed we was received of one of t dreadful hurricanes hapin North-Carolina on the June laft, that ever was known at that season of the year. Many ships were lost in the harbour, the wharfs ruined by the billows that broke against them with assonishing violence, and Charles-Town providentially escaped by the sowness of the tide. The damage received is computed at 10,000 s.

In the Mearnes of Scotland a stone has been lately dug up with this inscription, R. Im. L. which probably means Romani Imperii Limes. As this is supposed to have been deposited in order to mark the limits of Cæsar's conquests in Britain, the doubt, says a writer in the public papers, whether that conqueror extended the Roman arms to the Grampian hills, is now solved. To this it has been objected, that not Cæsar, but Agricola extended the Roman conquests to the Grampian hills.

Edinburgh, July 23. Yesterday the court of sessions determined the great cause of the peerage of the antient and noble family of Caithness. The competition was between William Sinclair of Rattler, Esq and James Sinclair, in Reiss. The latter not being proved of lawful blood, the court assimmed the verdict of the jury on a former trial, in favour of Mr. Sinclair of Rattler.

There is now living at Kettlewell, near Skipton in Yorkshire, one Isaac Truman, an old soldier, aged 117 years, who enjoys his sight, and every other faculty, in as great perfection as ne did at 30: He was serjeant in the first year of the reign of Queen Anne, his been in several campaigns abroad, and always behaved in a manner becoming a brave soldier. His whole time has been devoted to fishing ever fince he left the regiment in which he terved.

 $[K]_3$

They write from Koningsberg, that one Schiel, a lab urer, near 108 years of age, was taken with the imall-pox last April, from which he is not only recovered, but now enjoys a perfect good state of health.

Died lately, the Rev. Dr. Tew, rector of Boldon, near Newcastle. Among other charities he has given 500 l. to the Society for propagating the Gospel; 500 l. to Christ's Hospital, where he had the rudiments of his education; and 200 l. to the Sans of the Clergy.

Miss Symmonds, at Kensington. Her father died the week before, and left her 30,000 l.

Mr. Jefferics, a sarmer at Uxbridge, aged 10.4.

John Sparkes, of Brixham, aged 105. He was carried to the grave by eight men and women, all grand children, the eldest of whom was forty years of age, and none of them married.

Mr. Jonas Berry, in the Grange, Southwark, aged 112. He was sadler to Queen Anne.

Robert Rossling, Esq; aged 95, the oldest inhabitant in Dorset.

At Wenesborg, in Sweden, a pealant named Svenson, aged 104 A year before his death, he recovered his fight which he had lost twelve years before.

At Abo, one Grellion, a peasant of that place, aged 112 years.

AUGUST.

This morning were exıft. cuted at Tyburn, pursuant to sheir sentence, William Donaldfon, for a burglary in the house of . Alderman Harley, in Alderigatestreet; William Sleight, otherwise Hotham, for a like crime in the house of Mrs. Parker, at Islington; and John Stretton, for robbing the mail. This last slopped the postboy just as he was going out of town, and told him he only wanted a letter that was going to a young, woman in the country; that they refused to let him have it at the office; and that he would take it out and return the bag to his master in a hackney coach. As the night was dark, the post-boy could not iwear politively to his person; but several bills being tound in his custody that were proved to be taken out of the mail, left no room to doubt that he was the man who robbed it.

A poor labourer's wife at Gravefe end was delivered of a monter that refembled a toad. It had an extraordinary large head, but me features or lineament of a face, except one eye, nor the appearance of any fex that could be diffinguished. In the place of legs and arms were stumps, or rather slaps. The reason assigned for this production is, that the mother, in her pregnancy, being ar work is a hop-ground, a toad jumped isto her lap and frightened her exceedingly.

This day came on at the affixes at Guildeard, before the Right Hon. Lord Mansfield, the cause between the Right Hon. George Onflow, and the Rev. Mr. Horse. The jury, after staying out an hour and a half, brought in a verdict for Mr. Onflow with 400 l. damages. which Mr. Onflow has ordered his attorney to pay into the hands of the Rev. Dr. Hallifax, treasurer of

the

CHRONICLE,

and orphans in the

rry. e affixes at Guildford, aylor, ferjeant in the val Scots regiment of ed for the murder of mader of the Wheat ar Westminster-bridge, Edwards, a coachman fed, f-vore particularly ir's drawing his sword a lunge at the deit was also proved nd he then received s of his death. Other inimed the evidence adding, that when had given the stab, t d-n you, and ran s proved likewife that had collared the fervas endeavouring to , of the boule, being ome and abutive. It t aggravating exprefthe Scots had provokant, and that he was age. The jury at first eir verdict Guilty; bat sing of opinion the too fevere, defired reconfider the matter, y returned their ver-

Immediately upon afper Smith, a near he deceased, asked a refeat, whether he rapitted to propole a e Judge immediately person's name, and walk forward, which er making a handfome faid, he hoped there in speaking; to which answered, No: Mr. ifferved, that he was

e i at this transaction,

the relief of clergy- and asked whether it was usual after a jury had brought in a folemn verdict, to have it cancelled? That he always understood, that after a verdick was brought in by a Jury, it was decifive and final: And farther faid, " If this is to be the case, I think juries to be entirely useless and unnecessary." His Lordship made no reply.

> The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, by an advertisement in the London Gazette, promise a reward of 1000 l. for the discovery of any of the persons concerned to fitting the buildings in Portimosta dock on fire, to be paid upon conviction. The following is an estimate of the furprizing large veffels lately fixed up in Dickinson's brewhouse at Wapping: A copper which weighs eight tons, and boils at one time 200 barrels and 31 gallons; two casks which hold 304 barrels each; two mash tubs which hold 60 qrs. of male each, and boil 100 quarters per day; a cask called the Old Hen, which holds 150 berrele; seventeen casks called the Seventeen Chickens, which hold each 70 barrels. The great copper is filled by pumps vin fix minutes and three feco ds; and the cocks, which are made to take off occasionally, weigh fitteen handred, one quarter, and five p unds.

The post boy from Newcaffle was robbed upon Gad - 7th. head Common, of the mail from thence, containing two bags, ticketed Newcastle, and Newcastle a d York, with the letters for Lond a and intermediate places.

On Saturday last his Majesty sent a gentleman to Mr. Ak rin in, keeper of Newgare, to p y the fum of one hundred pounds which [K] 4 was levied by the House of Lords on Mr. Edmunds (late publisher of the Middlesex Journal, in which was inserted the Lords Protest:) The dues to the Black Rod are ordered not to be paid.

Mr. Dennis Connel was committed to gaol at Lisbon in an arbitrary manner, in violation of the privileges granted to the British nation by the most solemn treaties, for resusing to sign a claim made by brokers for brokerage on sales at which they were not employed, with a design to lay the whole British commerce in that country under contribution.

The Pope held a secret confistory at Rome, in which he announced to the learned college, in an elegant speech, the reconciliation between the Holy See and the King of Portugal.

Nancy, July 30. A violent tempelt, followed by a heavy rain, which continued 24 hours, has made terrible devastation in this province. At Plomberies in particular it was attended with the most lamentable consequences. The little river which runs through that town became a torrent, and, in a quarter of an hour, the water rose ten seet: Seventeen houses were thrown down, and the baths filled with the ruins; and many persons perished in the water, or by the fall of the houses. The Intendent of the province is gone thither to give the directions necessary of such a calamity.

Paris, July 30. Letters from & Domingo confirm the melanchely account of the calamity which happened there on the 3d of lak month. It is faid the earthquake extended thirty-five leagues; the fea rofe a league and a half up into the island; a river is choaked up; and in a manner almost lost; for towns almost destroyed; and the fugar-works demolished. nately it happened between form and eight o'clock in the evening, when most of the inhabitants was out of their houses; but the ausber of white persons lost are about four hundred. The fortunes of several great families in this costtry must have suffered by it.

The young Prince of Profise fia was christened at Potsdam, by the name of Frederick-William, The sponsors were the Empere, Prince Ferdinand of Prossing, the Prince of Deux-Ponts, the Empress of Russia, and the Prince of Orange. That a popula Prince should be at the head of this is and that of two protestant Somerigns, nearly related, neither of them should be invited, is not still accounted for.

To form some opinion of the mighty loss which the French strion has sustained, by the last dreadful calamity in Hispania, we shall give our readers the string estimate, which has been handed about, and said to be a true account of the produce of that part of the island in their particular, generally known by the name of St. Domingo.

Sugar

[137

2-3ds brown, 160,000 hhds, 10	cwt. each,
5 l. sterling per hogshead -
5,000,000 lb. at 4 d. per pound	d ——
, Soco bags, 300 lb. each, at 1
l leather, 20,000 hides, at 201.
2,000.000 ib. at 3 s. per pound

2,400,000 0 9 $3,333 6 8 120,000 0 9 20,000 0 9 150,000 0 9

2.773.333 6 8

Their Majefiles came from ichmond to St. James's, he Prince of Helle Darmwith his family, appeared rt, and received particular of their Majefties attention. ajeffy made the young Prinprefent of a rich diamond arl necklace, in a manner a mobile and generous than L After shewing the jewels Princels, her Majefty afked might put them about her is's neck, which honour belitely accepted, after adjust-: collar, her Majefty declared came her much, and hoped ald wear them as a token of sembrance and regard. The with his family, who ap-incognito, took leave of Majefties, and a few days sarrel happened between a set his wife in Bermondfey-Southwark, when the wo-satched up a red-hot poker, a it in the man's eye; the in his agony threw a knife wife, and killed her on the The Jury brought in their accidental death.

t out for Paris.

ing the violence of a thunder at Brighthelmstone, the sea at one motion fifty sect. ident man living never rered the like. A ship of very ancient rith, construction was discovered, lith, and weighed up near Newcastle, the keel of which is upwards of 70 feet; her planks over-lap one another, and she appears to be Spanish built, and is supposed to be one of the ships suak at the Spanish invasion.

Was determined at the affizes at York, before Mr. Justice Aften and a special jury, the great, leadmine cause, being an issue directed by the court of Chancery, wherein Mr. Thomas Smith, of Gray's-inn, was plaintiff, and the earl of Pomfret, defendant; when, after a full hearing, the jury having, previonfly to the trial, viewed the place in question, and it appeared plainly to have been an antient inclofure (bought above 30 years ago, and enjoyed as such by Mr. Smith) the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. The above is the leadmine in Swaledale, faid to produce an immense sum, and mentioned lately to have been discovered in Lord Pomfret's estate.

The council for the plaintiff were Mr. Wedderburn, Mr. Wallace, Serjeant Aspinal, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Eden; and for Lord Pomfret, Mr. Dunning, (who went on purpose, and had 300 guineas,) Mestrs. Lee, Walker, Dawson, Davenport, and Chator.

15th. In

In consequence of the verdict given in favour of Mr. Smith at York affizes, Lord Pomfret is faid to have addressed the tenants of the manors of Healaugh Old Land and Healaugh New Land, at the market cross Richmond in Yorkshire; in which among other things his Lordship said, That the jury assumed to themselves a legislative power, and had given to Mr. Smith, as his private property, the Hall Moor, which time immemorial had been their right of inheritance; that he doubted not bringing to shame, the authors and abettors of those wicked proceedings;' and therefore encouraged them to affert their claim

Last night between eleven and twelve o'clock, a terrible fire broke out behind Mrs. Crawley's iron manufactory, at Greenwich, which consumed upwards of fixty houses; it is thought to have been maliciously done, with intention to defiroy the king's warehouses, at that place, which, by the shifting of the wind, were luckily preserved.

speedily, as the right of commonage all over England depended upon their faccess.

A busto of his Danish Majesty, carved at Copenhagen, and sent by him as a present to the University of Oxford, was brought to the queen's palace for their Majesties inspection, who came to town about noon and viewed it.

The 36th part of the king's moiety of the New River water works, was fold by public auction at Garraway's coffee-houses for the sum of 6700 l.

19th. Early this morning the polt boy carrying the Chefter mail from London, was robbed on Finchley-Common by a highway-man, who carried c bags, ticketed Golesbill and It is said the letters in thek would take a man a week to and examine; but the Cabag was found unopened, at Irish bag with only some b wanting.

Last week was found, to deep, in a piece of ground Friers gardens in the city of belonging to Mr. Telford, the workmen were digging, part of the foundation of a sof of Roman brick-work, so cemented, that it resisted the of a pick. This fragmen the segment of a circle, and a below was taken up a stat gri three seet long, two seet broa about eight inches thick, w following inscription:

DEO SANCTO
SERAPI
TEMPLUM ASO
LO FECIT
CL. HIERONOMY
ANUS LEG LEG VI VICIT

with some Roman coins of sian and others, but much de

The Society of Arts have a filver medal to Mr. Jan farmer in the Isle of Than his account of the culture new kind of winter's food I tle, called the turnip-rooted of the splant kept growing and of the spring. His prom it, including both he root, was in proportion to 4 an acre.—This is the proper of sowing the seed, in order planted out early in the and the spring following plants will be at their full splants will be at their full

There has been lately discovered in the county of Caermarthen, the SUMMER pendation of an antient temple, with an altar entire, on one fide of which appears a cornecopia, and en the other an augural flaff. By the inscription it appears to have been dedicated to Fortune.

A cause was tried between the Rev. Mr. Hawkies, of Whitchorch Casonicorum, plaintiff, and the The acgarifhioners defendants. tion was brought against the defendans for refuting to pay a thilling tythe on every hogshead of cyder, inhead of 4 d. for every orchard; when the jury, which was special, gave their verdict in favour of the detendants.

Extrail of a Letter from Workington, in Cumberland, dated the 13th inft.

A dreadful accident has happened at Sir James Lowther's collitry, at Scaton, near this town. some foul air was suspected to be a the pit, and the men not being permitted to go down, but letbig down a candle in a lanthorn, # fet fire to the foul air, which west off with to loud an exploson, that it is faid it was heard at Cockermouth, which is fix to one man quite over the gincale, tree and all, and another in the waggon way, who were both killed; a third was so hurt that he died this morning; Sir James's principal fleward is much feorched, and an under-Reward much hurt; a gentleman, who was a spectater loft the fight of one cyc; (cveral others, whole curiofity led them to the spot, have suffered greatly."

CIRCUIT.

At Maidstone affizes, three were capitally convicted, but were all reprieved.

At Guildford affizes, five were capitally convicted, one of whom was reprieved.

At the affizes for Suffolk, at Bury St. Edmond's, two were capitally convicted.

At Lincoln affizes, the dragoon, for the barbarous murder committed on a countryman at Bofton, was capitally convicted.

At York affizes, two were capitally convicted, one of whom was reprieved.

At the affizes at Dorham, Robert Hazlit was tried on two indictments; one for robbing a Lady, and the other for robbing the Newcastle Mail, on both which indictments he was found guilty; but having returned all the bills and notes taken out of the mail. and having also made a frank confession where the mail was hid, to that every thing had been recovered, he has received a short reprieve, that his friends may have time to intercede in his behalf. He is a young man, and was clerk miles dittant. This explosion blews to Mr. Bamford in London, and was upon a tour to fee his friends in Yorkshire, when he committed the robberies of which he has been convicted.

> At the Norfolk affizes, James Frith, for entering his miltrefs's bed chamber in the night, and flealing thereout a trunk with 1401. in it, was tried and found guilty of the theft, but acquitted of the burglary. He is to be transported for feven years.

140] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

At Chelmsford assizes, a cause was tried before Mr. Baron Smythe, wherein Mr. Dines, of Althorn, was plaintiff, and an inhabitant of desendant. Rooting, Margaret The plaintiff had engaged to marry the defendant's daughter Sarah, at the repeated inflances of her father, on his promising a portion of 500 l. to be paid on the day of marriage. In consequence of this promise, the plaintiff married the said Sarah on the 6th of August, 1766; and previous to the marriage, the defendant promised to make his daughter worth 1000l. Or as much as the plaintiff's father should give to him. Soon after the marriage, the plaintiff's father put his son into the possession of two farms, and gave him ft ck upon the same worth at least 1000l. notwithstanding which the defendant refused to fulfil his promises. the 5th of April 1768, the defendant being at the plaintiff's house, in company with divers other perfons, and observing a child walking about the room, said, " he wished he could see some of the plaintiff's children." The latter answered, that "He was surprized he should be glad to see any of his, or to see his house filled with children, when he had not made good any one of his promises, or given any thing towards bringing up a family:" The defendant replied,  he would be d——d if he did not give him 5001. on the birth of his first child, whether a boy or girl, and would stand godfather to the child;" and being asked to give a note or some other security for the fulfilling of his promise, he defired the plaintiff to write a note, which he accordingly did, and read it to the defendant, w wife read it himfelf, and fi in the presence of four w who subscribed their name The defendant added, d-d if I don't stand to I never stand to any thing long as I live." On the July 1769, the plaintiff's v delivered of a son; but the dant refused either to star father to the child, or to said sum of 500 l. It was a in his defence, that he v sober when he signed the but the contrary being fully the jury gave a verdict plaintiff for 500 l.

At Stafford assizes, two capitally convicted, but we reprieved.

At Warwick affizes, thr

capitally convicted.

At Shrewsbury assizes, soners were tried, six of were capitally convicted.

At the assizes at Carliss were capitally convicted, b reprieved, and ordered for portation.

At the assizes at Bucki Joseph Dobbs was tried for ing open the stables of Jam ley, Esq; of Langleybroom cutting the sinews of a horin such a manner, that he death. He was found guilt sentenced to be hanged; the intercession of the prosec was reprieved for transportant

At Winchester affizes, tw

capitally convicted.

At Salisbury assizes, thre capitally convicted, but we prieved for transportation.

At this assizes a remarkab came on, wherein a Farm plaintiff, and his Carter defen-The action was brought against the defendant for debauching the plaintiff's daughter, a girl of fifteen, and having a child by bes, per quod servitiam amisit. The jury found a verdict for the plainus with 100 l. damages,

At the affizes at Dorchester only one prisoner was capitally convicted, a man 70 years of age, for horfe-stealing; but before the judge left the town he was ordered for transportation, which he at first refused, but afterwards accepted of the c'ement offer.

Robert Bartlett, for the murder of his brother, was brought in man-flanghter, and burnt in the bind.

At the assizes for the county of Devon, Mary Quarram, aged upwards of 64, for the murder of her grandion, an infant about a year and a quarter old, by drowning him, received fentence of death, but was respited; John Haggot, John Batting, and John Wilson, for robbing John Royal near Plymouth, of a filver watch, 2s. &c. James Matthews, for robbing John Cooksley on the highway of a filver watch, &c. and William Hallet, for housebreaking, received sentence of death; but are all reprieved.

A cause came on to be tried at thele alizes, in which an attorney of Plymouth was plaintiff, and Stephen Drew, of the same place, Esq; defendant. Upon the trial it appeared, that the attorney had first given Mr. Drew the lie, and on his refusing to ask pardon, or give sa- Solari of Turin; that having lived tisfaction, the defendant had spit in the married state five years, he in his face, and trod upon his toe. had a son; and that afterwards he the plaintist with one balf-penny damages.

At the assizes for the county of Somerset, at Bridgewater, three persons were condemned, viz. George Shepherd, for feloniously carrying away upwards of 1000 l. in money, and several medals, &c. the property of Messrs. Harris, at Taunton; John Moor, for stealing two oxen: and James Morgan, for Itealing a linen handkerchief. Shepherd was left for execution, but Moor and Morgan were reprieved for seven years transportation. John Tidball, charged with breaking into the Custom-house at Minchead, was acquitted.

At Hereford assizes, two were capitally convicted, but were both reprieved.

Capt. Marmaduke Bowen, Lewis Bowen his son, and John Williams, the murderer, were brought to the bar, and severally arraigned; the first as an accessary before the fact, the two others as accessaries after the fact, in the murder of Mr. Powell; when a motion was made to put off their trials to the next assizes, which was agreed to.

At Monmouth affizes, one was capitally convicted, but afterwards reprieved.

Florence, July 31. We hear from Montemignaio, that a hermit, who did lately there, aged 77, after having led a solitary and exemplary life in his hermitage during 42 years, a few moments before his death, declared to his confessor, that he was Count Crsar The jury brought in a verdict for quitted his estate at Villanouva.

and turned Anchorite. The papers found in his retirement, confirmed his confession, and, in consequence, he was interred in A manner fuitable to his birth.

Rome, July 28. We are affored that the Emperor of Japan died lately in his capital, aged 92 years. He did not marry till 75, with a woman of common rank, by whom he had a ion, now 15 years of age.

Leeds, August 21. The account of the inhabitants of New-York having agreed to the importation of goods from England, was received here by our American merchants with great pleasure; since which great quantities of cloth have been sent down to Hull, in order to be shipped for the above place.

Edinburgh, August 18. At the late quarterly meeting of the proprietors of the Forth and Clyde navigation, held here, the new line of direction of the great canal, from Inch-belly-bridge westward, proposed by Mr. M'Kell, and approved of by Mr. Smeaton, engineers, was unanimously agreed to; by this new courie, the canal will be brought to within two miles northwest of Glasgow.

A woman meanly dreffed found her way up the backstairs to the Queen's private apartments, and entered the room where her Majesty was fitting with the Dutchels of Ancaster. The woman sook a furvey of the room with great composure, her Majesty and the Dutchels being too much frighted at first to interrupt her: at length the Dutchess had the presence of mind to ring the bell, which brought up the page in waiting, who with disticulty turned the justuder down flairs.

This morning the postboy carrying the Chefter Mail, was robbed at the ! Highgate Hill by a fingle wayman, who took out of the a imall mail, containing bags. 200 l. reward are for the discovery of the robbe

His Majesty has been plea grant his free pardon to T Phillips the elder, and T Phillips the younger, and W Phillips, George Phillips, 7 Knight, and Richard Hide were convicted at session High Court of admiralt plundering divers Dutch on the high feas, off the c Suffex.

Some workmen employ clean a large vault in Arli threet, discovered a spring of and one of the men putting a lighted candle to take a view of it, the foul air too and it was with difficulty guilhed.

In the garden of Mr. Bu of Stepney, has been du large iron pot full Commonwealth money, wh is thought will fetch a large:

A bank note of 100 l. has been fent from Newcaille to the secretary of ciety of the Bill of righ the fervice of Mr. Wilkes.

An express arrived at St] with an account of her roya neis the princels of Brunswi ing fately delivered of a pri 18th inft.

This morning their M honoured the regiment of a with their prefence in the at Woelwich. His Majest purpoiely to fee fome expen rough the different rooms there all kinds of military ere preparing; which took p about an hour. They acceded to the water-fide, everal that were fired from gun, by means of a lock xed to the vent : A fea ferrecen inch mortar was next ree or four times, entirely th pound thot, which had good effect. Their Majesties wa heavy twelve pounder a filled twenty three times K in a minute, fpunging each fire, and loading greatest safety, which forevery spectator, having far I any quick firing ever yet .- The method is entirely d supposed to be the inof Col. Defaguliers. Pretheir Majestics coming to ren, they stopped on Woolammon, where they faw hells fired from mortars itters.

[143

This morning early the my carrying the Chefter attacked near Brown's a Finchicy common by oc-pads; but the bags of eing in one of the new-incarriages, they could not hem, and ordered the boy k it; but he telling them no key, they dama'd him. bim drive on.

cafe that was fome time lished in the London pad to be the case of Capt. is like to prove of very fequence to that unfortuetleman. On its arrival a, a committee of the town

Their Majesties were first was ordered to wait upon the Capthe royal laboratory, at- ' tain, to know if he was the author. by Col. Defaguliers, and He acknowledged he had drawn up his case, but that it had passed through different hands, and had been altered at different times; and finally, that the publication in the papers was variant from that which he seut bome as his own. Being interrogated as to particular parts of it, he declined answering that question, and said, That the alterations were made by perfons, who, he believed, might aim at ferving him, though he feared they might have a contrary effect, and that his discriminating parts, which were his own, from those which had been altered by others, might displease his friends at a time when he might fland in need of their effential tervice."

Died lately, in the East Indies. Lieut. Armitrong, in the East India company's fervice. He was flruck dead with lightning, as he floood under a' Tamariod tree, with his horse's bridle under his arm. His feel hilted broad-fword, is fupposed to have attracted the lightning by which he was killed. His horse was killed with the same flash.

Mr. Muzere, aged 90. many years an eminent piece-broker. who never truited any money out at interest, but put it into an iron cheft, in which was found, at his death, about 9000 l.

At Peckham, in the rooth year of his age, Mr. Ramfay, tormerly a pawnbroker in the Mint.

At Whitcharch in Shropshire, in the to7th year of her age, one Jane Hammond.

One Patrick Blewet, aged 129, in the north of Ireland. He never was known to be a week fick all the time, and retained his memory and understanding to the last. was gardener to a family for eight generations past.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

At Reigate, in Surry, one Mary Gold, aged 111 years, who had her eye-fight, and was hearty till Within an hour of her death.

At his house in Berwick-Rreet. Soho, John Vickers, Esq; aged 95, who bore a commission under King William, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of the Boyne.

Mary Johan, of Arlon in Lux-Emburgh, relict of Louis de Villeneuve, Knight of St. Louis, and Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment of Nice, killed in 1734 at the siege of Philipsburg, died at Thionville the 6th of June last, aged 108 years. She retained her memory and senses to the last, and had never feen any physicians in her life.

SEPTEMBER.

Charles Saing, a papermaker at Galiton, in Scotland, has invented an engine for cutting rags,, which will cut more in one day than eight men can do in the same time.

Mr. Rainsforth, High Constable of Westminster, attended by Mr. Flanagan his assistant, were obfiructed in the execution of their office by a corporal and centinel in the first troop of horse-grenadier-guards, who instead of assisting the civil power, confined the officiating officers in the guard room. In this confinement they continued all night, the serjeant refuling to disturb the commanding officer till his usual hour of rifing in the morning. Upon complaint being made to Sir John Ficiding, the corporal and centinel were fent for and examined, and both committed to Tothillfield: Bridewell.

Lochgilpead, near Inverary Ang. This afternoon the following melancholy accident happened at this place:

As the pacquet yaul was carrying on board pattengers to go from this to Greenock, she was rea foul of by the pacquet, and overfet; of 14 people who were ea board, seven only could be saved.

On Friday morning one of the powder-mills, at Oore near Feversham, belonging to Mr. Gruebar, was blown up: one man and a horse were killed, and two other men were very much hurt; dee of the workmen, with amazing courage, went into an adjoining magazine, and rolled out a barrel of gunpowder; after which the whole quantity, confisting of 39 barrels, were faved, and the terrible confequences prevented.

Last Friday a Custom-house officer was brought before the Magistrates, at the rotation-office on St. Margaret's-hill, for firing a loaded pittol at a young man, who refuled to let him take away his bundle, without he would prodect his authority for so doing, or go with him into a neighbouring house, and have his bundle fearched; there being no contraband goods in it, the Magistrates obliged the Officer to find fureties for his appearance, and the young man to prosecute at the next affizes. fame Officer, about two months fince, stopped a young woman, as the was going from fervice to her mother, and took out of her bundle an old filk handkerchief, chet marked, and had been many times.

were greatly to be wished R stage coaches were put me regulation as to the f persons and quantity of meried by them. Thirtyas were in and about the coach this day, which n by one of the braces ay. One of the outfide (a fellmonger in the was killed upon the fpot, had both her legs broke, ad one leg broke, and of the number, either without, but were femiled.

the Dolly, Peter Maddock, the illand of Tohago, to Mr. John Blackburn, at Cowes, laden with fuhis is the hell velled that red out for Europe with from that island. It is red that this island will, years, make as much, or ceed any of our Leeward in its produce; the land proved, by what it has to be of the best quality which must render the gai in value to any other phourhood; the Negroes remely well, the Planters chy, and, what adds to pineli, is, a spirit of conananimity, that animates every part of their con-day being the anniverlary dpear's jubice, the fame brated at Stratford upon the ancommon tellivity.

Serenc Highness Prince Francis of Bavaria, for Hogh Pallifer, Esq; Comptroller of the Navy, attended by the surveyor-general, and several other officers of distinction, went down to Deptiord, and very attentively surveyed the Dock-yard there, and concerted proper measures for preventing a like disaster to that which happened at Portsmouth, there being great reason to apprehend that foreign incendaries are still watching opportunities to compleat their design.

Naples, Aug. 14. There was another earthquake at Mellina on the 22d ult. which has done conderable damage.

The Duke of Chablais, lotk. youngest son to the King of Sardinia, accompanied by feveral Sardinian noblemen, went on board his Britannick Majetty's ship Alarm, anchored in the bay of Villa Franca, and were received by Capt. Jarvis, with all pollible marks of honour and respect. His Royal Highoets shewed the greatest currofity to be informed of the ufe of every thing he taw. He defired the chain-pum, s to be worked, and a gun to be exercised, and between the leveral motions made the most pertinent remarks. Having fatiffied his corrobty, his latistaction was confirmed by the magnificent presents he made on that occasion. To the captain, he gave a rich diamond ring, enclosed in a large gold must how; to the two lieutenants, a gold box each; to the bestement of marines, who mounted the guard, the mouthipman who fleered his Royal Highness, and the four who askited him up and down the flup's fine, a gold watch each, one of which was a Paris repeater, and another let with iparks, and a large ium of money to the ship's company. His Royal Highness stayed about two hours; and was saluted on his going aboard and coming ashore with one-and-twenty guns.

rection of the statue for the late Lord Mayor, received drawings from seventeen artists without names, when two only met with approbation, which were claimed by Mr. John Macre, and Mr. Agostez Carlini.

The Sheriff and Justices of Bamfishire, met at Portsoy, (Scotland) and made a dividend of 799 l. 12 s. 2 d. (issued from the treasury upon the first certificate,) to the proprietors of the cattle which had been slaughtered, in order to prevent the spreading of the contagious distemper then 12g-ing among them.

Came on to be tried before John Hawkins, Esq; and the rest of the Magistrates at Hicks's-hall, two indictments, wherein the Governors of the Foundling-hospital were the prosecutors, and Robert Berry and Elizabeth his wife were the defendants, for violently assaulting Sarah Powel, (a foundling) their apprentice; when, after a full hearing of counsel on both sides, the jury, without going out of court, brought in the defendants guilty; and thereupon the Chairman was pleased to pronounce fentence, that the wife should be imprisoned nine months and the hus-Band fix.

Thomas Robinson, corporal, and David Deane, the centinel, lately committed to Tothill-fields Bridewell, for imprisoning the High Constable of Westminster, were bailed by some Officers in the army.

The same day the serjeant, tried for neglect of duty, in not calling the Commanding Officer during the imprisonment of Samuel Raissforth, Esq; High Constable of Westminster, was broke by order of the Court Martial.

The new cut out of the river Lee was opened at Limehouse into the Thames, when many barges and boats immediately passed up to try if it was pavigable, and it proved to answer extremely well.

The Bench of Justices of the county of Middlesex, it is said, have come to a resolution to oblige all public places of entertainment to take down the organs, which are kept for the amusement of their customers.

The remains of the Right Hon. Lady Viscountess Townsend, Lady of his Excellency the Lord Liestenant; were carried to Sir Joha's Quay, attended by the Right Hos. the Lord Mayor, and the two Sheriss, in their carriages, the regiment of horse on Dublin duty, the officers, kettle-drummers, and trumpeters of which, with the battle-axe guards, &c. had fcarff, hatbands, and black gloves, the kettle-drums had a black crape them, and the trumpets were muffled; the gentlemen domeltics of his Excellency's household, all in deep mourning, walked in procession; the body was put on board the Southern, for Parkgate, from whence it is to be taken to the burial place of that noble family, and deposited. Minute guns were fired from the time the procession began till eleven o'clock, and the ships in the harbour half hoisted their banners in token of mourning, and continued to all day. The

[147

The fessions ended at the id Bailey, when fentence I on nine capital convicts, whom were women; 39 red to be transported for 3, two for fourteen years, aded, and two whipped. Ired and thirty prisoners tried this session.

er failing down the river mpreffed men, was fudx by the captives, who zans to open one of the and immediately issued k; where, forming in a ey overpowered the Ofcrew, and made themters of the vessel without lence or any bloodshed. es run the tender ashore in Effex, to the number om whouse they marched country, and divided into s, one towards Rumford. to Bow. The catastrophe ome of the Officers landavefend with black eyes. llowing is an authentic letter fent on Monday m the Admiralty to the f Lloyd's coffee-house. Street.

Favourite floop of war ived off the Motherbank land Islands, brings an hat a Spanish man of ve frigates, with artillery brees on board, had dislis Majesty of the Settle-ort Egmont. I am compete Lords Commissions Admiralty to give you mation, that the Merd others, who are any methed therein, may be ainted therewith.

Signed ———— -office, 1770.

The following is faid to be an exact account of the thips tent by the Spaniards from Buenos-Ayres to take possession of Falkland Islands, viz. one frigate of 30 guns, 190 feamen, and 100 foi-Three frigates of 28 guns, diera. 803 seamen, and 340 soldiers. One frigate of 20 guns, 110 feamen, and 84 foldiers. All the papers and journals, kept on board the Favourite flucy of war from Falkland Islands, have been ordered up from Portsmouth for the inspection of the Lords Commisfioners of the Admiralty; and the above floop is ordered into dock, and her crew on board the guardship.

Press-warrants were sent to Portsmouth, and nest morning the press-gangs went on board the merchant ships, and stripped them of all the hands they thought useful, before it was known in the town. They secured the impressed men in a tender, came on shore, and in the public houses and in the streets picked up many good failors.

John Simpson was convicted by the magistrates at the Rotationoffice, in Litchsield-street, in the sum of 201, for stealing a spaniel dog belonging to Mr. Roberts, which he had killed and skinned; the skin being found upon him, and he not being able to pay the penalty insticted, was committed to Clerkenwell Bridewell for six months.

A cart upon a new construction was brought to the General Post-Office for carrying the mails. It is lined with thin plates of iron, yet it runs much lighter than any cart that has yet been brought to the office; and which, from its inge[4] a nious nious contrivance for the security of the several bags of letters, has gained the approbation of the Post-Masters.

Extract of a Letter from Neustadt, Sept. 4.

"Yesterday noon the King of Prussia arrived here, and alighted from his coach before he came to the head quarters, where his Imperial Majesty waited to receive him. The inhabitants of this city were extremely affected at the meeting of these two great Monarchs, insomuch that when they went together to the quarters allotted for the King of Prussia, most of the people kneeled down as they passed along. In the evening there was The grand manœuvres an opera. will begin this day.

Naples, Aug. 21. Two hundred soldiers of this garrison had formed a design to plunder the principal houses of this city, while the nobility were partaking of the diversions that were given in the evening of the Queen's birth-day; but the plot was happily discovered time enough to prevent the execution of it. There has been a fresh eruption this week from Mount Vesuvius, which has done a great deal of damage, and destroyed all the vineyards in the neighbourhood of Tour du Grec.

At a court of aldermen held at Guildhall, (at which were present the Lord Mayor, Sir William Stephenson, Sir Robert Kite, Melles. Crosby, Peers, Nath, Shi kespear, Townsend, Plumbe, Kirkman, Rossiter and Oliver) the Lord Mayor reported to the court, that he had received a letter from the Lords of the Admiralty, desiring his Lordship to back the Pre Warrants for the city of Londo which letter his Lordship read, likewise an answer thereto seat the Lord Mayor, fignifying # it had never been usual for t Lord Mayor to fign such Warran useless applied to by the Pri Council.

The Lord Mayor then read letter from Mr. Recorder to Lordship, desiring his Lordship inform the Court of Mr. Records indisposition, and to request le of ablence for a month: that court did consent to give Mr. 1 corder leave of absence for a mo from their court, but that t could not dispense with his att dance on the other court: that it was therefore the un mous opinion of the Court of dermen, that Mr. Recorder at address a letter to the Court Common-council for a fimilar k of absence.

At a Quarterly General M ing of the Proprietors of Raft-I stock, at their house in Lea hall-street, Sir George Colebra Bart. declared the half-yearly (dend at fix per cent.

A Common-council was holden at Guildhall, when the Lord Mayor opened the with a speech, in which he formed them that the which he understood to be tended for their confideration that time, were about the posal of the place of Citythal, and the conduct of the corder: that fince the Rec was present, he hoped they t proceed first on his business. fome spirited debates, in the of which the Recorder into an elaborate defence ( onfirance of that Court Majesty, Mr. Alderman moved, " That it is ion of this Court, that rder, by refuling to at-Lord Mayor, Aldermen, amons of this City, with omble address, remonand petition, to his Maed contrary to his oath, buty of his office."

motion being feconded, on was put, and declared rried to the athemative. Paterion demanded a di-In the division there apbe fix Aldermen and 88 ers, belides the two tellers, firmative; and fix Alderhus Commoners for the Whereupon his Lordthip the question to be resolved of distinc.

tion for adjournment of inels being put, the quelresolved in the affirma-

City Remembrancer actnem, that the Lords of fory had refulved to ree Fleet prilon on the ere it now to.

nts were iffeed out to the of Weitminfter to impen, &c.

Sonder-mills on Hounflow w up, by which accident was killed.

day hity boys, cloathed John Fielding, and prosupped for the fervice, rouga the city, in order sered on board his Maov at the Berwick, Capt. bound to London from attend the delivery of St. Vincent's, were lately taken up by the Mars, Capt. Holland, bound to Liverpool. They were all ready to perith, the Berwick having foundered at lea four days before, and the whole crew, confilling of thirteen men, and one woman paffenger, being crouded into an open boat, without provisions or shelter.

> Extract of a Letter from Gravefend, September 24, 1770.

This afternoon a melancholy affair happened at this place, which, in all likelihood, will be attended with much noise; the Officers of the Lynx man of war went on board the Duke of Richmond Ball-Indiaman, in order to prefs the men, when they came on board, the commanding Officer was told by the Chief Mate of the Indiaman, that the feamen had leized the arm-cheft, and were determined not to be pressed. On this, at high water, the man of war dropped along fide of the Dake of Richmind; the Chief Mate hailed the man of war, and told the Captain the feamen were armed and determined to refift, and that he could not be anfuerable for the confequences, if they perfitted in preiling the peo-ple; however, the man of war laid the India thip along fide, and a foulfic enfued, in which one man on board the India ship was killed, and several dangerously wounded : notwiththanding this, they would not fuffer the man of war's people to enter the thip, on which thefe last thought it adviteable to sheer off, and the India thip's people are now come on flura.

 $[L]_3$

Thie

This day a Common Hall 29th. was held at Guildhall, for the election of a Lord Mayor for the year ensuing; when all the Aldermen below the chair, who had served the office of Sheriff, were severally put in nomination. The shew of hands was greatly in favour of Brass Crosby, and James Townshend, Esqrs. and they were therefore returned to the Court of Aldermen, who made choice of Mr. Crosby, as being the senior, and he was immediately declared duly elected.

A motion was made by Mr. Lovel, that the thanks of the livery should be given to the two late patriotic Sheriffs, Townsend and Sawbridge, for their upright and impartial conduct in the discharge of their office, which was carried in the affirmative, and ordered to be entered in the records. thanks of the hall were also given to the committee of the livery.

Worms, Sept. 17. The Count de Leriange Heidesheim has been lately seized in his cassle at Heidesheim, by a party of 150 men belonging to the Palatine troops, by order of the emperor. He has been declared incapable of governing his country.

Bologna, Aug. 28. A false bull, under the name of Clement XIV. has been handed about here, containing the suppression of the Je-We have not yet been able to find out where it was printed.

Rome, Sept. 1. On the 24th ult. at night, the galley-slaves at Civita Vecchia, being 1400 in number, found means to get off their chains, and were actually employed in digging a hole under the wall of the town, which they designed to plunder, and then to put to sea.

The commanding officer ately assembled a sufficien of troops, who fired upon t mulkets and grenades, an tillery of the fortress, means they were foon Eight of them were ki 22 dangerously wounded submitted to be conducted the place of their confiner of her age.

Married lately, at Art Berkshire, John Street, 87, to Miss Anne Marsh place, a young lady in the

Died, at Walton, Pl aged upwards of 100.

At Wells, Mr. Mills, years and five days.

In the fouth of France Milne, Esq; aged 111.

OCTOBE

The Magistrates and ety of Merchants in E in order to promote service, voted a premiu to every failor that that luntarily with Captain belides the bounty of 3c by government. the failors to offer them ly, and the disagreeable impressing is avoided.

Letters from Corfics : that there are still a gr of the natives that ha submitted to the Fren ment: that executions a of such of them as are that a priest who had himself, having emb three of his kinsmen Felucca at San Peregrin id not being able to escape, simself into the sea with all asure hung round his neck, a drowned. His poor kinstot having courage to sole example of the holy salere taken, and conducted is to Bastia.

freedom of King's Lynn in t, was presented to John , Esq; for his constitutional, , and uniform cenduct, in f of the liberties of this the LONDON GAZETTE. eball, October, 2. By letters d from Jamaica, it appears, e late earthquake, which ed in Hispaniola, was felt r that island, but no cone damage happened at any lace than at Port au Prince; re its effects were terrible; pple loft their lives, the fora on the illand or key gois totally deftroyed, and, a few houses, the whole es in ruins. The governor sabitants, who are reduced in tents, are exerting thema building of wooden honfes, learned, from fatal expethat buildings conftructed er materials are exceedingerous, in a country where ; earthquakes happen.

The Common Cryer of the y read at the Royal Exhis Majesty's proclamation, to such seamen who shall sily enter into his service, y of thirty shillings.

rday the Commissioners for og his Majesty's navy, conwith Mr. Mellish for 2000 it 23 s. 9d. per hundred to be killed between the present time and the 31st of December, at the Victualling-office, Tower-hill.

A root of the true rhubarb, which weighed 35 lb. was taken up in the garden of the Lord Chief Barron, at Dean in Scotland. The feeds of this plant were brought from China by Dr. Mounfey.

At the general quarterly meeting of the Guardians of 4th, the Afylum for Female Orphans, the Hon, and Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Hereford was unanimously elected Vice President of that charity, in the room of Sir Tho. Hankey, deceased.

The first stone of the new bridge at Exeter was laid by Joseph Dixon, Esq;

Dublin, Sept. 29. The Neptune. Broomhall, deeply laden with fift, from the banks of Newfoundland, foundered on the 12th of August. being the second day after patting to fea. She was bound to the West of England; had 33 servants on board, seven of whom were drowned; the others, with the captain and fhip's company, were taken up by a French banker, who used them with great humanity for 19 days, when they met with a large cat, from Whitby, in the North of England, who received them on board and landed them at Burlington, on the 17th inft. Of the unfortunate people who were drowned, it is faid there were three English, two Irish, one Scotchman, and a black boy, about 15 years of age.

By letters from Leghorn we learn, that the destruction of the Turkish sleet was occasioned by the activity of Capt. Greig, Lieutenant Torrington, and Lieutenant Dogdale, three Englishmen, who commanded the fire-ships. When the latter had steered his vessel in the night close to a Turkish man of war of 84 guns, his design was discovered, which threw his crew of Russian sailors into such a consternation, that they immediately abandoned him, and rowed off in the boat; notwithstanding which, he bravely hooked grapuel-iron into the rigging of the enemy, and then jump d into the sea, from whence he was luckily taken up, and foon after conveyed on board the Russian Admiral, who loaded him with caresses, advanced him to a command, and promised to recommend him for his gallant behaviour to the Empress.

[4] 4

com-

They write from Boston, in New-Bugland, that the Assembly of that province had met at Cambridge the end of July, according to their adjournment, and after sitting about eight days, without doing any business, they resuling to act, as an Assembly, at any place out of Boston, they were prorogued to the 5th of September, then to meet.

- Gloucester, C&. 1. A few days ago a fisherman, who was fishing for falmon in the Severn near the Old Passage, entangled in his net a large seal or sea-dog, which, with difficulty, he drew out of the water upon the fands, and some other men coming to his assistance, The animal, they took it alive. which the man has brought here to shew, is larger than a bull-dog, which it retembles very much about the head, only it has no ears. Its skin is covered with short hair, dark on the back, and spotted on the belly; its tore-feet or fins are about fix inches long with five claws upon each. The body runs taper to the tail, near which the hinder feet are placed, whi broad and webbed. It is I a large piece of water, in w moves with great nimbleness

The Professor of Archite ture read his first lecture the Royal Academy, wher introduced the History of tecture, and the Sciences of ing on it; the origin of and of the Grecian and orders; and concluded wineral instructions on the sta practice of Architecture.

Was read in full converted a letter from the Right H Earl of Litchfield, Chance the University of Oxford, it ing, that it would be for nour and advantage of the versity to continue the Re Wetherell Vice-Chancellor other year, and defiring to currence of convocation if purpose, which was unan assented to.

Account of the Loss of his A Ship Swift, on the Constagonia; extracted from a from a Gentleman who Roard, to his Friend in La

We sailed from Port on a cruize the 7th of Mar and had a violent gale of w some days, which drove us the coast of Patagonia: As sickly, and wanted refress we resolved to go into Port sinding ourselves within lea ues of it: On attemp work in, we struck on where we beat for an hour half before we were able the ship off. We then (tipust at that time coming eastward) ran up the river out half a mile up, we another rock, and, as this time ebb tide, our nets to get her off, proved : She hung up in this the fore-feet, her flern azingly dipressed, about ers; the then flipt off, ed tuck in eight fathom This happened at fix in ing: Some got on the ers twam for the thore, for the boats; fo that Il laved, with great diffikeps three men. Lie we met with atterwards etter conterved than dethat temp throus climate New fails, which were acfaveu; and no other pane a tree or buth in the an rocks and stones, for some a tree or bush in the untry. We lived upon and sometimes sea lowl, could get them, for we rather better than the otwithstanding they were take: We had nothing but dirty brackish water, here Providence was so to lead a shower of rain, time every one drank at of the cavities of the could not say by a store want of yessels to keep matter and tix men failed tree for Port Egmont, in possible, to bring the Fato our relief. This was, the most dangerous unthey succeeded, and remain atterwards: Every pressure of the four or hve, had lest all hopes, and given her up a fortnight before the appeared in fight, and we were beginning to prepare for a march to B cues Avres; but, by what we have fince learned, it would have been tuipo? bie for any of us to have got their; for the diffance, as we could not have gone in a flraight line, on account of the large rivers that are in the way, is near 2000 miles; not to mention the want of provisions and water, the laying on the cold ground without any covering, and the dangers we had to dread from the native tavages, which we have fince been informed are very numerous for several hundred leagues to the loothward of Bucnos Ayres. - We saw no inhabitants during our flay at Port Defire, nor were we able to kill any guanacoes, although they were very plenty, but extremely thy. Capt I somer, and Mr. Thomion, our lurgeon, went in a fmal, boat about so leagues up the river, in hopes of making some discoveries, and getting some guanacoes, but were obliged to return on the fifth day, as they could get nothing to est or drink. In fhort, it is the most barren, defolate country, I suppose, in the world.

This morning, the five convicts under fentence of death in Newgate, were executed at Tyburn, namely, Mary Ann Ryan, Joseph Jotephs, and James Simpson, for rebbing William Wright on the highway, in Write-chapel; Henry Dixon, for barglary, and it altog goods in the house of James Wood, in No manfireet, in St. Lunes patish, and Charles McDonald, for robbing John Tomlin on the highway of a filver watch. Mary-Ann Ryan was dressed in white with black trimmings, and her cossin on the cops of the cart, together with M'Donald on the right, and Dixon on her lest hand, went in the first cart; and Josephs (being a Jew, was attended by one of that persuasion, who read to him in the Hebrew) together with Simpson, who seemed very ill, in the other cart. The last session, which proved fatal to Ryan, was the third in succession in which she had been tried at the Old Bailey for capital offences.

The first stone of the intended City of London Lying-in hospital. at the corner of the City-road in Old-street, was laid by the Right Hon. Barlow Trecothick, Lord-Mayor, and President of the said hospital, accompanied by John Paterson, Esq; one of the Vice-Presidents, and Treasurer, and a great number of the Governors, amidst the loud and repeated acclamations of a valt concourse of people assembled on the occasion. —After the ceremony, the Building Committee and Officers, together with Mr. Mylne, the architect, and the contractors for the building, were elegantly and politely entertained at dinner by his Lordship at the Mansion-house.

They write from Parma, that there was lately erected in that city, by order of the Infant Duke, a white marble monument in the form of an ancient altar, dedicated to Friendship. It is raised as a token to perpetuate the double alliance which at present subsists between his Royal Highness and the Emperor. The period that gave birth to this event, together with a Latin inscription composed by Father Paccindi, is engraved thereon.

Extract of a Letter from Sept. 10.

Two murderers were e here last Saturday in the Del Popolo, where it is a upwards of 40,000 people sembled; and just at the that the last of the crimin going to be dispatched, th Merli, who had given his lution, retiring too far ba fell from the scaffold, and a mortal wound on the head occasioned a great bustle, people pressed so eagerly spot to see the priest, that th were not able to make as against them, but were themselves to retire. fusion then became gener great numbers had their a legs broke, and were terribly maimed.

Coyde, a tea-broker, charged with forging a warrant for the delivery of three of tea at the India Houbrought to be examined I Court of Directors at the House; and while they we bating, actually effected his although three constable placed to guard him. He posed to have got out of the room, through the door which to the Secretary's parlour, a unobserved from one room ther till he came into the str

At a court of Common held this day, after very we bates, a question was mov James Eyre, Esq; the presecorder, be no more advise retained, or employed in the affairs of this corporat being deemed by this Coworthy of their future trust

The fame was declared carried in the affirmative. s queftion, fix Aidermen, ety-eight Commoners, beo tellers; against the quesven Aldermen, and fortyanmoners, bendes two tel-

s then moved by Mr. Judd, all cases relative to the afhis city, where it may be neto have the advice, opinion, ince of any Council learned aw, John Glynn, Big; Sert Law, shall for the future, occasions, be advised with, l, and employed; which was in the affirmative. Mr. ore moved, That the freethis city be presented to Junning, Eig; for having, iolicitor-General to his Maefended in Parliament, on pdest principles of law and istitution, the rights of the to penision and remonstrate; was carried without a dedivition.

of a Letter from Dublin, Sept. 11.

bout ten days ago, one , a farmer at Turveynear Rush, came to this receive col. and having a er married here to a chairie went with the farmer to the money; on feeing it e demanded his wife's forbich the farmer refused till uch; on which the chairman he would be up with him, sey then parted, when the went home without the least ition: but the fon-in-law the farmer's house in the night, and cut the throats of the old man, his wife, fon and daughter, from ear to ear. His grandson being at a neighbour's house, happening to come home the inflant after this shocking deed was committed, he heard fomething was wrong, and took to his heels, when the ruffiana overtook and killed kim, as they supposed, and threw him into a potatoe rig, but he was found alive next morning, and giving some account of them, three of thefe wretches were taken, and committed to the gaol of this city."

Dublin, Off. 2. Joseph Dawa now in Newgate for the marder of the unfortunate people at Turvey, has made an ample confession of the fact, in which he acknowledges himfelf to be the only person concerned in the faid murder; in confequence of which, John Ryan and John Farrel, now in cultody on the former testimony of the faid Daw. are to be enlarged. Joseph Daw acknowledges that he perpetrated the murder thus: He called the old man, his fon, and grandion, one by one, to the back of their dwelling; then stabbed each of them. with a pitchfork, and afterwards cut their throats. The old woman he strangled in her bed.

At a court of commoncouncil held this day, the Lord Mayor acquainted the court, that he called them to proceed on the adjourned butiness of the laft court; but as the report of the committee to confider of the embankment at Durham Yard was part of the bufinefs, he thought proper to inform them, that he had held a court of confervancy. ten ruffians, they attacked and that five bills of indictment had been found against different persons for encroachments on the ziver.

156] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The report of the aforesaid committee was then read: a motion was made by Aldermen Crosby to agree with the committee in their report; after a debate of near three hours, he withdrew his motion, and made another, that the report be printed, and a copy sent to each member of the court; which was carried in the affirmative.

Another motion was made, that the evidence the said committee have had be likewise printed, by way of appendix, and sent with the foregoing; which was likewise carried in the affirmative.

Another motion was made by the Lord Mayor elect, that a committee be appointed to join the committee of the livery, to have the opinion of council concerning their memorial presented at a former court.

Another motion was made, that the memorial be now read, and it was read accordingly.

Mr. Potter defired the Lord Mayor to alk the memorialists, for what purposes they thought them-selves appointed a committee of the livery? But Mr. Aldermen Town-send moved, that they might withdraw, which they accordingly did, vithout being asked the question.

After much debate, the first uestion being withdrawn, Mr. Jillon made a meti n, that a mmittee be appointed of the embers of that court only, to assure the memorial, and to have a advice therein, as they shall k proper, and report to that their orinion thereon; which carried in the assure, and a committee was accordingly pointed of fix aldermen and two commoners, viz. Aldermen Commoners, viz. Aldermen Commoners, Townsend, Sabridge, Wilkes, and Oliver. Commoners, Holker, Judd, Townsend, Sharp, Hurford, Beardmon Bellas, Bishop, Stavely, Goss, and Nicholson.

A motion was made, that they be impowered to draw on the chamberlain for a sum not exceeding 5001. which was agreed to.

The petition of the livery of the company of goldsmiths was read, and a motion being made that it be referred to the former committee, the same was agreed to, and ordered, that they have such advice thereon as they shall think proper, and report their opinion to that court.

This morning, about two o'clock, an express arrived at the Duke of Rutland's at Knightsbridge, with the melancholy news of the death of the Right Hon. the Marquis of Granby, who died at Scarborough on Thursday evening, at fix o'clock, of the gout in his stomach. — His Lordship finding himself much out of order in his stomach and bowels, sent for Dr. Daltrey from York, who (with Dr. Moussey who attended his Lordship before) were well convinced he had strong symptoms of the gout, and accordingly advised the Marquis to put his feet and legs into hot water, at the same time administering the highest cordials to drive it into the extremities, which soon had the defired effect; that immediately after his feet swelled, looked influmed, and had all the appearance of the disorder being settled there, when his Lordship retired to another room, where he was immeentery feized with a fainting fit, and expired without a groan, in the prefence of his physicians.

Creders are fent to the Lords lieuteneants of the different Counties to office out their warrants to me Conflables and Headboroughs in their respective diffricts, to imports men for the more expeditious manning the Royal Nasy, that shall espeur to have no visible way of

They write from Parma, that the intercardinal Borion, bishop of Para, had, for the encouragement of population, directed by his will the two of twelve hundred crowns to be annually divided among twenty four young women as marriage por-

On Thursday the Lieutenant of apreligang was brought before the Lord Mayor, and severely reprinated by his Lordsh p, for impresing men in the city without bring attended by a contable.

Ar a general affembly held at the I hobel of Dutlin, " Received, That it would be a very faintary and conflitutional proceeding in be corporation of the city of Duban, to pretent a petition to the Ling, expre live, in the most grateful terms, of that real and loyalty buch warm the breatts of his Maeay's furthful citizens of Dubling and at the fame time, in the most semble and durital manner, to prehat to the throne the many grievlezza faux et by this kingdom by the rate prorugations of parltabent.

Between eleven and twelve 27th. Jath oight, their Rosal Highreffer the Princets Dasager of Wales, and the Dake of Gloucester, landed at Dover, from Germany, and after taking some refreshment, they set out for London, and arrived at Carleton House this morning about ten o'clock, in perfect health. His Majesty being previously informed of their arrival, came to town from Richmond, and after staying some time to congratulate them on their sate arrival, retuined to Richmond. Their Royal Highnesses set out from hence on their tour to Germany on the 8th of June last.

john Shine, a journeyman barber, impressed as a teaman, by virtue of a warrant from the Lords of the Admiralty, and backed by the Lord Mayor, was brought before John Wikes, Esq; the fitting Alderman at Guidhall; when the Alderman adjudged the impressing illegal, and ordered Shine to be discharged.

The Lords of the Admiralty having written to several Noblemen and Gentlemen for their affistance in providing hands for manning his Majesty's steet; and among others to his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, lord-lieutenant and cuftos rotulorum for the county of Middlefex, that nobleman has written to Sir John Fielding upon the fubject, the contents of which his worthip communicated to the other Jullices of the peace, who met at Guildhall, Westminster; after which the Benen took the matter into erefideration, and refolved to put in force every legal method to forward the above necessary business.

On Fuerday the Committioners for paving, &c. the city, fined a bricklayer the tum of 5 l. for taking up the pavement, and making a cellar-window, in Thames-fireet, without leave of the faid Commifficances.

158] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The report of the Committee appointed to inspect the embankment at Durham-yard, delivered to the Court of Common-council on Friday last, sets forth, that the buildings erected by Mess. Adams, project into the river 28 seet, and that their farther encroachments, by earth and rubbish, project into the river 175 seet in depth, and 397 seet in length.

That Mr. Paine's buildings project at the East end 18 feet, at the West end 9 seet, in length from West to East 83 feet six inches; and that Mr. Paine's farther encroachment by rubbish, &c. projects into the river 108 feet in depth, and about 461 feet in length:

That the encroachment by Mr. Kitchiner is 52 feet at the West end, and 40 feet at the East end, and about 104 in length:

That these encroachments are prejudical to the public, and hurtful to the navigation: And that the representations and memorial of the Committee of watermen and lightermen's Company, of the chief owners of coal crast, and of the corn lightermen, contain allegations against the said encroachments, which the Committee and by evidence to be fully verified and established.

Warrants were yesterday issued out at the Admiralty, signed by Sir Edward Flawke, and sent to the constables of the disserent parishes within twenty miles of London, ordering them to impress ablebodied men for his Majesty's seaservice: They are to be paid 20 s. for each man, and sixpence a mile for bringing them up, not exceeding 20 miles, and to deliver them at the rendezvous in Mark-lane.

Orders are given for leveral small sloops and armed cutters to cruite in the channel, and on the Scotch coast, to prevent any ships putting into our ports, suspected of being insected.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Goucester, in his tour through Germany, dined the 16th ult. with the Emperor; but was taken ill the same evening.

The curious in Astronomy, by letting the sun's image through a telescope on white paper, may now see several solar spots, appearing larger than Venus did at the Transit.

The fessions at the Old Bailey, which begun on Wednesday, ended, when eight prisoners capitally convicted, received featence of death, viz. Charles Burton for a burglary; Bartholomew Langley, for the detestable crime of bestiality, with a she-ass, in a hovel near Knightsbridge; John Barton, for horse-stealing; Joseph Knight, Thomas Bird, and William Payne for robbing the house of Mrs. Jeredare of a large quantity of filver plate; William Williams for a highway robbery, and William Brent for a burglary in the house of Lewis Cartier, in Spur-ftreet, Leicester-fields, and stealing a pair of diamond ear-rings of great value, several bank notes of the value of 15001. 240 guineas, and fix Portugal pieces, valued 101. 16 s. the property of Edward Jordan, Liq. At this sessions thirty were ordered to be transported for seven years; one was branded in the hand, who was a hackney coachman, for manslaughter; four were ordered to be privately whipped, bliely whipped, and thirre discharged upon proclaigh others who were acat this laft Seffions, was a nafter, who was indicted ing one of his Scholars, a gentleman, fon to a late , who being very inattennstruction, his Master, after l admonitions, intending to n a small box on the ear, fortunate youth standing e fire, and thrinking from rrection, most unhappily se fide of his head against . or moulding in the chime, which beat in a piece kell, and the extravalated fining from the contusion the brain, he died early morning. The Master had excellent character for his tendernels, and care of his , and particularly to this faletter from Charles-Town, Aug. 24, 1770.

Affembly has been fitting : 14th inft. The Lower is come to feveral refolutierning the Council, which e communicated to them, hich a reply is preparing. ne of contention is the Rerling voted the Bill of People. The Lieutenant r has communicated to the r a Royal instruction convery firong terms, respectaid 1500 l. and fuggesting r modes in passing moneywhich the Commons House Ireffed his Honour for cois letters to the King's Ministers on that affair, which have been refused. We have agreed to stop all commercial intercourse with New-York, on account of that Province breaking the Non-Impertation Agreement, which we strictly adhere to.

Admiral Knowles has obtained permission to enter into the Czarina's fervice. He is to rank First Admiral of the Czarina's fleet, and have a leat in her Council. His penfion is ten thousand rubles (2250 L) a year, and a 1000 l. sterling annually to be paid to his Lady and family, with the benefit of furvivorship. A compliment of five hundred guineas is to be made for present pocket expences, and he is to be received, in his journey, at her Majesty's expence, at his arrival on the edge of the Ruffian dominions. Upon quitting the Caarina's fervice, he has a promife of being reinstated in his present rank.

The secretary of the society of agriculture of Leon, hath drawn up a memorial, wherein he proves, that the great number of useless dogs in the kingdom, annually confume of aliments proper for the human species, to the amount of sixteen millions, which would furnish subsitence for upwards of 300,000 men.

A most horrible attempt has been made at Cortona in Italy: All the Monks of the convents of the Serviles were poisoned by something put in their victuals, but they were preserved from death by the speediness with which remedies were brought. They are making all possible search to find out those who were culpable of this enormous crime.

This morning, about ten, a prodigious number of people 31st. crowded

160] ANNUAL ŘEGISTER, 1770

Westminster-hall, crowded into which continued to fill till noon, when Mr. Wilkes came into the hall, attended by Mr. Sawbridge, and having received several huzzas, he ascended the stairs, and after informing the company of the intent of their present meeting, he began to read a paper of instructions to their members, the purport of which was, That as petitions, addresses, and remonstrances to the throne, for a redress of grievances hitherto unprecedented, had been of late despised, and by the advice of evil counsellors, dismissed from the throne; therefore, that their representatives be instructed to move for an impeachment of Henry North, commonly called Lord North, as not only the contriver and schemer, but even the carrier into execution of these cruel and unconstitutional machinations.

Mr. Sawbridge opposed the in-Aructions, for this reason, "That Lord North, having places and pensions at his disposal, was at the head of a let of people, against whom the nation had evident reafon to complain; that in the house of Lords he had the Bishops and Scots peers; and all the placemen in the house of commons on his fide; that if his conduct was brought into question in either or both houses, he would be acquitted, and they precluded from any complaint hereafter." He therefore moved for a remonstrance, and the question being put, it was carried in the affirmative. A committee went out to draw it up, and returned with it in half an hour, the heads of which were as follow:

1. That a bill be brought in and passed for establishing triennial parliaments.

3. That a law be made electors of Great Britain powered to chuse any re tives they think proper, wi gard to any sentence what

4. That no general wa ever issued, even in case ning a sleet, or recrui army.

5. That a law be mad pealing to a superior of bringing in an additional to convict a man, even as been acquitted by a Jury some favourable circumst obtained the royal mercy.

It was then agreed, that be presented by Sir Romard, not, as Mr. Sawb litely observed, out of a spect to Lord Percy, we could not help thinkin thy representative, and a liberty, but because that was out of the kingdom.

Married, at Camberwo Mr. William Barton, age of the George and Vultu Cornhill, to Miss Smith, o Rov, Camberwell, aged Died lately, aged 101 feph Davis, many years African trade.

NOVEMBI

A woman in the Old I received the following from her hulband, who to his garden near Isling

Dear wife, before this reaches you. I shall be no more: The weight of my misfortunes, which I have brought upon myfelf by my triminal intercourse with Mrs. D. I am not able to bear any longer, an therefore determined to quit a life, that for fome years has been but of little use to you or my children. Farewell, for ever. From hin who was once an indulgent behand."-As foon as the received the above letter, the hafted with a friend to endeavour to divert him from his purpose, but to her grief food him hanging in his own fummer-house, quite dead.

The collector of the cultums at Irvine in Scotland, ordered all the foregling vessels about the point of From, to be feized and secured less they should be a means of importing the plague. This was effected without the least opposition.

Being the birth-day of our glorious deliverer, King William, the equestrian statue of his line Royal Highness William Duke of Cumberland was opened for the impedion of the public, in the tentre of Cavendish Square. The incription is as follows: "William, Duke of Cumberland, born will 15, 1721; died 31st of Octor, 1766. This equestrian state was erected by Licutenant-general William Strode, in gratitude whis private kindness, in honour his public virtues, Nov. 5, Anno omini 1770.

This morning Michael Thomas, a black, and Ann andley, a white, were married St. Olave's, Southwark; but alle the ceremony was perform, a prefs-gang interrupted the aither in the colebration of his Vot. XIII.

office; upon which a contest arose, and the clergyman received a blow on the breast, but a constable being called immediately, the Lieutenapt was secured and carried before a Magistrate, but after proper submission, was, by the generosity of the minister, released without farther prosecution. The poor black, with his bride, made his escape in the fray.

The two Kennedys were brought to the bar of the Court of King's-bench, in order ter plead to the appeal lodged against them by the widow Bigby ; but the matter being made up before-hand, the did not appear, and fuffered a non-fuit. An evening paper fays, that when the went to receive the money (350 l.) the wept bitterly, and at first refused to touch the money that was to be the price of her ausband's blood; but being told that nobody elfe could receive it for her, the held up her apron. and bid the attorney, who was to pay it, fweep it into her lap.

The Westminster remonfirance was presented to his Majesty at St. James's, by Sir Robert Barnard, one of the members for that city, which was received, but no answer returned. It was signed, "By order of the general meeting, JOHN WILKES, Chairman."

At a court of Aldermen held at Guildhall, Brais Croiby, Efq; the Lord Mayor elect, was fworn into that office for the year enfung. Upon this occasion Mr. Trecothick addressed himself to the hall, to explain the motives of his conduct during his mayoralty; He observed, that many ill-natured resections had been thrown out against him for backing pressure.

[M] Warranta

162] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

warrants in the city, in which he remarked, he was justified by the precedents of all the former Lord Mayors; that, at a time when the whole nation was alarmed with the enemy's great preparations for war, he should have thought himself inexcusable, as Chief Magistrate, if he had thrown any obstruction in the way, which might have retarded the manning of our fleet; that though he had his doubts with respect to the legality of press-warrants, yet, as an individual, though in so high a station, he though wit too weighty a matter for him fingly to determine upon, and the more particularly as the parliament was fo near upon meeting, under whose confideration only such business could with propriety come. Trecothick faid further, that he despised the low and illiberal means that had been made use of to prejudice him in the minds of the public; and as he had, in every respect, executed the business of Chief Magistrate, to the best of his judgment and abilities, his conscience was perfectly easy, and he did not doubt but he should meet with the approbation of all his impartial fellow-citizens. His speech was received with applause.

A letter from Portsmouth of 9th. this day's date, alarmed the whole city of London; it imported, that at Spithead, there was an outward-bound Dutch East-Indiaman, which had on board 286 men, of whom apwards of 90 were sick of an epidemical fever; and that two custom-house officers, who were put on board her, were already dead. As the plague is now so general in many parts of Europe, every body dreaded that most fatal distemper; but it has since appeared, that the fever on board ship, though infectious, was pestilential, but only a kind of sever, owing to foul air, to rem which, Dr. Hales's ventilator been successfully applied.

Mr. Serj. Glynn moved in Court of Common Pleas, for a to shew cause why the verdict agi Mr. Horne should not be set ass when, after a full hearing, the o granted the rule.—On this occa the right of petitioning was affe and proved; if then the right of titioning is the right of the subj it must follow, that the freedon debate is the right of the for also, otherwise the right of p tioning would be nugatory. the evil conduct of Ministers, instance, is the grievance ago which the subject has cause to o plain, how can that evil con be justified, if it is not fully p ed? and how can this be pro if it is not fully and freely debat Freedom of debate must there be inclosed in the right of as the law gives e tioning, thing necessary to the enjoys of a right when it gives the righ be enjoyed.

This day his Majesty went in the usual state to the House of Peers, and ope the session with a most gran speech from the throne.

The infectious fever onboard the Dutch outwardbound Indiaman at Portsmouth so far abated, that the captain tends sailing the first fair w No person has taken the infer from any of the crew on board, cept the two custom-house of already mentioned.

A motion was thir day mad a Court of Common Council

F163

all, that an humble adsonfirance and petition ed to his Majesty, toucholated right of election, ng for a diffolution of t; which was declared in ttive; and a committee ited to prepare and bring ch was done accordingly, and ordered to be pre-on was then made, that of the court be given to recordick, Efq; the late ror, for his upright conig his mayoralty, by the idence to the administralice, his conflant endeapreferring the peace and of the city, and for preery encroachment on the and liberties of his felns; which was agreed to ly.

from Mr. Serjeant Glynn d Mayor was read, exey had conferred upon m Gazette, Saturday 17. s offered by the under-. cities and towns to en-:amen to enter voluntais Majesty's fervice.

ble feaman to enter vointo his Majesty's for-Briffel. Twenty faillings ible feaman, and fifteen revery ordinary feaman. Mentrefe. Two guineas ble, and one guines to nary feaman. Edinburgh. The same as

Town of Aberdeen. One guines. to every able feaman, and fifteen shillings to every landman.

Town of Lynn. One guines to every able feaman.

N. B. Thefe bounties are over and above the bounters granted by government

The greatest part of the spacious old church at Tedbury in Gloucesterthire being, as is supported. undermined by the floods, tambled down, and the organ, pulpit, reading-desk, and most of the pews, were all crushed to pieces by the falling in of the roof.

This morning, about twenty minutes after two, a fire broke out at the coach-office, the bottom of Surry-firect in the Strand, which entirely confumed the fame, together with the house of-Neale, Biq; above it, and on the other fide, the house of Mr. Comyns the quaker, who planned the taking of Senegal. The flames s acknowledgment of the raged with great fury, and it was with much difficulty Mr. Crosby, e resolution of the 12th head clerk of the coach-office, and r last, which was or- three young women, his daughters, be entered in the journal faved their lives by getting along the gatter on the roof into the garret of Robert Smith, Efq; whole house, having a strong party-wall, happily put a flop to the farther speading of the configration. Mrs. Comyns, mother of Mr. Co-Loudon. Forty shillings myns, being old, was carried out on a feather-bed.

Mr. Stephens, author of the pamphlet against the illegality of imprisonment for debt, was, by a bench rule, called up before Lord Mausfield, and the rest of the Judges of the King's-Bench, where he spoke for above half an hour, on the subject of his pamphlet and his cale, quoted Magna Charta, and several acts of parliament, with great readiness, and insisted on his releasement, which he urged was no more than his right, and the right of every subject in Great Britain. Lord Mansfield heard him very attentively the whole time, and when he had concluded, said, it was not in his power to comply with his request; and remanded him back to prison. Mr. Stephens then asked, Whether that was his Lordship's final opinion? And, being answered in the affirmative, 'he desired his Lordship to take care whether the prisoners would not right themselves.' Accordingly, when the account of his ill-fuccess arrived at the prison, those confined there immediately arose, secured the turnkeys, and seven of them, who were in upon writs of ad fatisfaciendum, made their escape. The marshal then sent directly to the Tower for a party of the guards, by which the rest were secured.

[M] 2

His Majesty has been pleased to give 1000 l. towards the relief and affiftance of the Protestant Dissenting Ministers, settled in Nova Scotia, in North-America; and likewife 500 l. towards building a church in the Savoy, for the use of reformed German Protestants.

Lord Mansfield gave the opinion of the Court of King's-bench, in the case of the King against Woodfall, the purport of which was as follows: That Mr. Woodfall being charged in the information with printing and publishing Junius's Letter to the King, if the word only had not been inserted in the verdict, the court would have ordered it to be entered up as legal; but as the addition of that word seemed to imply a reserva well as a difference of opi the Jury, they were of a there was fufficient ground new trial; which was acco awarded.

This day at one o'clock, Brais Croiby, Eig; Lord Mayor of this city, attend Aldermen Trecothick, Step Townshend, and Oliver, t sheriffs, and about an hum the common council, pre from Guildhall to St. Jam present to his Majesty the c monttrance. They arrived two o'clock, and were intr to his Majesty by the lo waiting, when the remot was read by Sir James F town-clerk, (the recorder tending.)

To which his Majesty wa ed to return the following as

" As I have feen no re alter the opinion expressed aniwer to your address up subject, I cannot comply w prayer of your petition."

The waters by the late were so much out at He Oxfordshire, that there road over the bridge obs but by ropes as direction Henley, Abingdon, coaches, were obliged eight hories to draw them: wall, which stands near the T was carried away by the c and on Sunday a bay horfe, faddle and bridle on, fwam the Thames without a ride is unknown. The waters t much out at Staines, that I press was hindered for some part of the bridge at Walli Berks, is carried away by th flux of waters; a waggon pere overfet at Maidenhead; guides are placed on the and there is no navigation Thames, in that part of the

A rule was granted in the court of King's-bench, on a made by Mr. Moreton, sconded by the counsellors a and Dunning, for an insua against seven of the dars concerned in breaking the King's-bench last Monad are now commed in the gaoi.

Came on at the court of Common Pleas, before Ld. Vilmot, and the rest of the of that Court, a motion to s the verdict in the case of . Hon. G. Onflow, against loroe,-Serjeant Whitaker, l for Mr. Onflow, opened adings by observing, that no immediate damages e proved by Mr. Onflow, in ence of the words spoken, reflections made use of by wne, afperfive of his chamust sensibly affect him as man, and therefore, he hoprerdict would be confirmed. feconded by Serj. Leigh, raded how tender the law the character and good of even the fubordinate of men, how much more of the higher ranks of life; actuded with asking, what imputation could be thrown character of a gentleman, representing him as a man > promife, but regardless ing his word? he, thereas clear in his opinion, t verdick ought to be con-

Serj. Glynn, after confidering the words spoken, proceeded to thew the nature of the meeting at which they were spoken, a legal meeting of the electors of a county, for conflitutional purpofes, where freedom of debate and freedom of investigation were effectially necessary, and where, if the characters of representatives were not to he canvalled, the very purpole of the meeting must wholly be defeated. He concluded, with averring that no precedent could be produced in any of our law-books, where words spoken against a reprefentative, merely affecting his character in that capacity, were deemed actionable. In this he was supported by Serj. Johnson, who quoted a number of precedents to the contrary. Upon the whole, the court was of opinion, that the matter was of too much weight to be haftily determined, and that it was too late in the term to give judgment; and, therefore, ordered that it lie over till next term.

His Excellency the Count de Guigne, the new French Ambassador, notified his arrival, to the Secretaries of State; but has not yet delivered his credentials.

 $[H]_3$

Forty thousand seamen were voted for the service of the ensuing year. The expence, it is said, will amount to two millions ster-

Insurances upon outward-bound ships arose from four to ten per Cent.

At a general court at Christ's Hospital, a donation from Mrs. Webb of 2001 was received; and another of the like fum from Thomas Calverly, Esq;

This day his Majesty 29th. went, with the usual state, to the House of Peers, and gave the royal affent to the bill for prohibiting, for a further limited time, the expertation of corn, grain, meal, mal, flour, bread, biscuit, and starch; and to such other bills as were ready.

Notice was given at the Castle of Dublin, that it was his Majesty's pleasure that all officers belonging to the army should forthwith repair to their respective regiments, except such as were employed on necellary fervices.

At the universary meeting of the Royal Society held in Cranecourt, the annual Gold Medal of that Society was given to Mr. William Hewson, for his curious papers on the lymphatic system in animais.

They write from Manchester, that as the ship Mars was going out of Liverpool, for Jamaica, attended by feveral gentlemen, clerks, women, and pilots, to the amount of 22 persons; the pilot-boat, meeting with a strong easterly wind, and losing her Rays. was driven upon Hoyle's Bank, where the struck; most of the people immediately took to the punt, but the finking in the breaken it being an ebb-tide, was on the bank again; when (relieved, eleven men got int to fetch the people on shore the pilot-boat, but the tide against them eight of the me at the oar with the fatigue pilot-boat was beaten to and all the persons on board ed (among whom was the of the ship) except two pik a clerk; one of the pilot's fo ing quite spent with rowing, to his father, laid his head knee, and instantly expired.

The Sieur Ranzonet, maker at Nancy, in Lorrai made a watch of the co pocket fize, in which he ha an instrument of his own invi which plays an air en dae the parts of this little piece chanism are distributed wit art, as not in the least to aff movement of the watch. It so nicely constructed, as no effected either by heat of dryness or moisture.

The King of Denmark, I on the liberty of the press of the most efficacious means ward the progress of the & has published a rescript, da the castle of Hirscholm, th of September, in which he e from every kind of censi books which shall be pris his dominions.

The plague continues to cruel ravages in Constant Not less than 1000 perso victims daily to this d scourge. Poverty and fami fuid to fill up the measure calamities, and render the dition horrible.

Greek lady having lately ined to the Tornagi Bachi, Turk had killed her hufthe Bachi told her, that ad the people would oppose aithment of the murderer. oman wept bitterly. The to appease her, said, "I it upon a method of conton; embrace the religion great Prophet, and I will a murderer of your husband y you."

Empress of Russia has puban ordonnance, commandwho profess the Jewish reto depart her dominions in ed time. The reason asis, that these people hold spondence with their enewrite from Oran, a fortress coast of Barbary, belonging paniards, that one of their magazines was lately set there by lightning, by the purpose which seventy perished.

oce, Nov. 6. The excefas have occasioned so great of the Tyber, that it has wed its banks, and done lamage at Rome and the t country.

e, Nov. 6. We learn from in the Upper Silelia, that with feveral domesticks, me there a few days ago oland, all died sudderly ht after their arrival; this t at first caused great conca amongst the inhabitants, ought those persons died of sque; but their fears soon I, when it appeared that d been possoned by eating yours.

Extrast of a Letter from Dubling November 26.

" On the 7th inft. we had a violent florm on this coast, when great damage was done amongst the shipping. The following particulars are come to hand: the Endeavour, of Whitehaven, Mackmerry, loft, and all hands. The Harlequin, Johnson, of ditto, lost, and all hands. The Primrofe, Steel, of Warkington, loft, and all hands. A Brig, Mcffenger, of Maryport, loft, the crew faved, except the Master and one hand. A Brig, Bifcoe, of ditto, loft, all hands faved. A Brig, Mufgrave, of ditto, loft, all hands faved. A Brig, Simpson; the Good Intent, Thompson; a Sloop, Jackfon; and the Pretty Jenny, Perkins, are all supposed to have foundered at fea, no account having been heard of them."

The accounts that have been received during the course of the prefent month, of the melancholy effects of the floods in feveral parts of the kingdom, exceed any thing of the kind that has happened in the memory of man. The cities and towns fituated on the banks of the Severn have suffered very great dittress; those on the Trent have suffered still more; the great Bedford Lewel is now under water; houses, mills, bridges, on almost every brook, have been borne down; but the most affecting scene of all happened at. Coventry, where the waters in the middle of the night came rolling into the lowermost firect of the town, and almost in-[M] 4 stantaneously rose to an alarming height. The poor there, fill the houses from top to bottom; those who occupied the lower apartments perished immediately; some who dwelt on the first sloors, ascended higher and faved their lives; but those who attempted to escape by wading, perished by the inundation. More than seventy persons have been taken up drowned in that city only, and accounts have been received of many more in other places.

Died, on the first of October, the Rev. George Whitefield, at Newbury - port, New England. The following anecdote reported of him is truly characteristic — In the early part of his life, he was preaching in the open fields, when a drummer happened be present, who was determined to interrupt his pious bulinels, and rudely beat his drum in a violent manner, in order to drown the Preacher's voice. Whitefield spoke very loud, but was not so powerful as the instrument; he therefore called out to drummer in thefe words: -- " Friend, you and I ferve the two greatest Matters existing, but in different callings; you may beat up for volunteers for King George, I for the Lord Jesus Christ. In God's name then don't let us interrupt each other; the world is wide enough for us both, and we may get recruits in abundance." speech had such an effect, that the drummer went away in great good humour, and left the Preacher in full possession of the field.

Mrs. Gray, aged 121, at Northsleet: the was born deaf and dumb.

DECEMBER.

His royal Highness Prince Edward and Princese Augusta S phia, were inoculated for the small-pox, by Pennel and Cziar Hawkins, Elgrs.

A cause came on to be beard before the Lords Con missioners Smythe and Buthurst, wherein Mr. Macklin, late of Covent garden theatre, was plaintiff, and two bookiellers were defendants. It appeared that the defendants were the publishers of a monthly production, and had hired a perior to take down the first Act of a farce called Love A-la-mce, written by the plaintiff; they then inferted it in their magazine, 4500 of which were printed, and 3500 fold; the plaintiff therefore prayed, that the defendants might account for the profits, and might be restrained by the court from selling any more of the said books. After hearing counsel on both granted Mr. the court Macklin a perpetual injunction.

In consequence of a petition of feveral merchants of London, trading from Hamburgh and Bremen, fetting forth, that there doth not appear to be the leak imptom of an epidemical difi mper within feveral hundred n les of either of those places; that the linens imported by the petitioners are all manufactured different parts of Germany, where there are not the least signs of any infection; and praying, that all ships from Hamburgh and Bremen, that have no rags or cottonwool on board, be not obliged to perform quarantine; his majeky tips and veffels coming provided that they have r cotton-wood on board, he master, &c. of fuch ft make oath before the ne officers or chief mao their arrival at the are bound to, that they such at any place from sarantine is required to ted, nor had communiany fhip or veffel fubo during the voyage; the crew are all in

[169

y all the rendezvousattended the Lordbeing in office fince the der to have their warr backed for preffing, same was refuted; he hat the city-bounty was prevent fuch violences. er near Swineshead, in re, having a small field ground which the late not reach, but appeared island in the midst of a 😘 a quantity of theep ge thereon, which the ring would be starved to ployed men with boats hem away, and among ted up above twenty sares, which had herded his day John Barton, . Knight, Tho. Bird, rent, (this last for stealnotes, &ca. to the value from Lady Mayo) and rous to remove all re- were all executed at Tybura. sa trade, so far as may During their execution a large at with the fafety of his scaffold fell down, by which some s pleased to order that were killed, and many hurt,tine at prefent sublisting. Payne was capitally convicted some time ago for abusing Mary Brand, burgh and Bremen, be a little girl under eight years of age, but received the King's pardon. Langley denied the fact for which he foffered, with the facrament in his mouth.

The Lieutenants in the prefs fervice waited on the Lord Mayor of this city with a mellage from the Admiralty, defiring his Lordship to back the prets-warrants, which his Lordship resuled.

Came on at Doctor's Com-mons, the admissibility of Lady Grosvenor's recriminate allegations, charging his Lordship with acts of adultery with feveral different women some time before her Ladyship was charged with the like crime by his Lordship, when part of the allegations were rejected and part admitted.

The fessions ended at the Old Bailey, when five capital convicts received fentence of death, John Clarke and John Joseph Defoe, for robbing Alexander Fordyce, Efq; of a gold watch on the highway; Thomas Meekins, for affaulting Suturnah Matemore on the highway, ravishing and robbing her; Mark Marks, a Jew, for robbing Joshua Crowden in Duke's Place; and Thomas Hand, a Cowkeeper, for wiltully and malicioully firing a pistol at Joseph Holloway, (executor to the prifoner's brother) one of the balls of which entered above his writt, and came out near the elbow.

At this fessions 60 prisoners were tried, one received lentence ew Langley for bestiality, to be transported for 14 years;

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770. 170]

14 to be transported for seven years; 16 to be whipped, and two fined and imprisoned.

A resolution has passed; 378,7521. shall be granted for the ordinary supply of the navy for 3771.

A refolution has also passed, to grant 423 747 l. for defraying the charge of buildings and rebuildings, and repairs of ships, for 1771.

A trial came on in the court of King's - beach, wherein a clergyman in Cambridgeshire was plaintiff, and a Corn Merchant, his neighbour, The action defendaut brought for the feduction of plaintiff's daughter; when jury, that was special, gave 1200 l.

damages.

Whitehall, Dec. 8. The Halifax schooner, Capt. Glassford, is arrived from Boston, and brings advice, that the trial of Captain Presson, on the indictment preferred against him in consequence of what happened on occasion of the riot in that town on the 5th of March last, came on in the superior court of judicature and court of affize and general gaol delivery, on Wednesday the 24th of October, and continued till the 30th, when he was fully acquitted.

Friday was tried in the court of King's-bench, the great cause between Daniel M'Kercher, Esq; plaintisf, and Francis Heylon Peacock, E'q; defendant, concerning a will, wherein was devised about 50,000 l. a year to the former by the wife of the faid Peacock; and atter a long hearing, the jury brought in a verdict for the defendaat.

The council for the Royal Academy in Pali-Mall, gave ten gold and filver medals, (being the first impressions from their new dies) executed by Mr. Pingo, from a design of Mr. Cipriani, to the undermentioned artifts, whose performances were adjudged worthy of premiums last year. Inscribed round the edge of each is the following:

GOLD MEDALS.

To Mr. James Gandon, for the best design in architecture, 1769.

To Mr. Mauritius Lowe, for the beit historical picture, 1769.

To Mr. John Bacon, for the best model of a bas-relief, 1769.

SILVER MEDALS.

To Mr. Matthew Liart, for a drawing of an academy figure, 1769.

To Mr. John Graffi, for ditto. To Mr. John Kitchingman, w ditto.

To Mr. Joseph Strutt, for ditte-To Mr. Thomas Hardwicks, for a drawing of architectus, 1769.

To Mr. P. M. Van Gilder, for a model of an academy figure.

1709.

To Mr. John Flaxman, jun for a model of ditto.

At a court of Common Council a motion was made, that the thanks of the court be given to the Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor and committee, for their diligence in profecuting the intestions of the court, to procure seamen for his Majesty's service; by which means the former difagreeable method of impressing seames has become unnecessary, &c. which was unanimonfly agreed to. It appeared by the committee's account, that 482 men were enreteg*

[171

ad sectived the city's ticle having appeared in ic papers, fetting forth, he two young Princes at ader inoculation, are kept ge room without a fire, curtains to the bed they Dr. Wintringham, under re they are, has thought stradict the fame; first, as te falshood; and secondly, it be the occasion of carto practice what would be with pernicious conseill to continue the duties mum, cyder and perry.

This day the following ils received the royal afirtue of a commission from sty, viz.

sill for the better supply sers and seamen to serve sajesty's ships of war, and and on board merchant dother trading vessels.

rill to amend an act, for ral quiet of the subjects all pretences of conceal-n fuch other bills as were the loss of the ship Gro

the loss of the ship Gro
the loss of the ship Gro
the John Beatson, matter, om Leith to London: she son the Spuro rocks, near

th of the Humber, on the e coast, on the 27th of er, and went to pieces

the strappeared that there persons in all saved; viz.

sin, his son, and nephew,

other, in the boat, and with six others drove on the wreck; and that 19

all perished.

By accounts from Liverpool we learn, that on the 6th inft. a most violent storm of wind from the South-West set in with the tide. and kept increasing until about high water, when it shifted to the North-Weil, doing on that day, and the two days following, incredible damage to the ships both in and out of the docks. A floop from Scotland, with refined fugar, being driven among the flats and fmall craft was buiged and funk. At noon tide the water role over the quay, opposite the customhouse, and washed away upwards of 2000 deal planks, befides great quantities of balks. Several calks of butter and tallow were driven on thore near Formby, with the Cork mark upon them; and as two vessels are expected from Cork, it is feared that at least one of them is loft. Several coafters to Prefton. Lancaster, and Carlisle, are lost, and three pilot-boats are missing. The Whale, Albburn, from Liverpool for Carlille, drove afhore near Formby land-mark; the pegple are all faved, but the cargo is entirely loft.

By the storm of wind which began last night, and continued to blow with great violence this morning, incredible damage has been done to the shipping all along the sea coast, particularly at Yarmouth, where sixteen sail were driven upon the sands, and every foul on board perished.

This morning, about a quarter before one, a whole range of the east battlement of Westminder-half gave way, the binding and coment being thoroughly decayed. The stones fell upon Oliver's Coffeenhouse, broke through the ceiling, though of lead, and through the corner

172] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

corner of the porch or gallery over the hall gate, but no lives were lost. The stones of which this antient and noble pile is built, were brought from Caen in Normandy, and are something between limestone and freestone, of a sandy texture, and, by age, a yellowish cast.

The company of Grocers have ordered 2001. to be distributed among their poor members by way of Christmas relief; also have given 1001. to the Mirine Society for fitting out poor and deserted boys for the King's ships; besides a donation of 201. to ten poor Clergymen's widows.

The trial of Mr. Robinson for publishing one of Junius's letters, came on at Guildhall. Whilst the judge was giving his charge, one of the jury started up, and cried out, "You need not say any more, for I am determined to acquit him;" on which the attorney-general moved to have that man removed from the jury; but this was objected to by Serjeant Glyan; on which the trial was put off till next term.

Thiel, Dec. 5. The Rhine and the Waal have risen to an uncommon height for some days past, and this day we received the melancholy account that the Rhine Dyke between Opheniden Lakemond, was broken through last Sunday; by which all Betuve, Thielward, Curen, Cuilenberg, Beeft, Renay, Acquoy, Asperen, and Heukelom, with all the country between the Wall, the Rhine, and the i eek, to the Deitdyk and Gorcum, are laid under the water. Thus all the inhabitants are again: in the utmost milery, this being the same country that was overflowed in a former winter by the Dykes breaking near the little town of Heussen.

Extrast of a Letter from Edinburgh, Dec. 16th.

"I am extremely forry to inform you of the loss of the Belfak Trader; which happened on Tuefpay night the 11th inft. In terming the point of Girvin in a violent gale of wind, the was driven against the rocks near that place, beat to pieces, and every foul perished; she was laden with linem, butter, hides, &c. and had several passengers on board. The Earl of Catalla immediately repaired to the spot, with some servants and dependants, crected a tent on the shore, gave orders that such dead bodies as were cast on shore should be taken due care of, decently isterred, and the money or effects found upon them, to be preserved for their friends."

An embargo was laid by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland on all shipping, laden with Irith provisions, in the Ports of that kingdom, except to Great Britain and the dominions thereunto be onging. By this measure both Spain and France will be very much distressed to victual their respective sleets.

This day the following bills received the royal affent, by a commission from his Majesty, viz.

The bill for granting an aid to his Majesty by a land-tax, to be raised in Great Britain for the service of the year 1771.

The bill for punithing mutiny and descrition, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters.

The

The bill for the better regulation of his Majesty's marine forces when on thore.

The bill to continue an act for allowing the free importation of falted provisions from Ireland, and from the American colonics, for a further limited time.

The bill for shutting up certain soct-paths in Kentish-town, and opening others in their room.

And to several private bills.

A few days lince, as a young man was washing himself in his father's kitchen near the Tower, a woman who lived in the house came to him with a child in her arms, defiring him to kis it: he replied, that he would kiss no bastard; upon which she threatened to turn him out of doors, as she had done his fifter: words arifing, be ran up stairs, fetched a loaded pidol, with which he wounded her in the throat, and the died yesterday. The young man immediately furrendered himself to Justice Pell, and was committed to the Tower goal.

Notwithstanding it being 25th. Christmas-day, there was a great board of Admiralty held.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Edward and the Princess Augusta-Sophia, who were lately under inoculation for the small pox, are now so well recovered as to be able to go abroad,

Mr. Arnod, watch-maker, in St. James's street, presented to his Majetty a small repeating watch in a ring, the cylinder of which he made of an oriental ruby. Its diameter is the 54th part of an inch, its length the 47th, and its weight the 200 part of a grain.

Mr. Cunningham, a merchant in Belfast in Ireland, having cauted a man to be apprehended who had committed waste on the cliate of the Earl of Donnegal, more than 1000 armed rullians affembled next day, set sire to his house, and burnt it to the ground with all the valuable furniture; the whole damage sustained amounted to 8000 l. On leaving the town they took several merchants as hostages for the release of the prisoner, whom it was thought proper to fet at large in order to regain the hostages. As soon as that was obtained, a party of the military went in pursuit of them, but with what success is not yet publicly known.

A very melancholy accident happened to a poor family at Horncattle in Lincolnshire, burning clarcoal in an iron pot to dry a new plaistered chamber, in which lay a man and his wife, and three children. The wife being taken ill in the night, the hufband got up to call some neighbours to her athitance; two women came directly, who with the man, his wife, and the three children, were all suffocated by the fumes. A caution this against sleeping in rooms with burning charcoul.

The general increase of agriculture in the several provinces of France, for the last fix years, is worthy of attention, and may one day or other affect the general œconomy of this nation more than the advantages they can ever obtain over us by a war. It appears by exact accounts delivered in to government, that the wastes inclosed and cultivated within the short term of five years (without including the present year) amount to 360,000 aspents, or 400 000 English acres nearly, At the lowell lowest estimation these wastes that were before barren have produced 900,000 quarters of grain, and that the lands before in tillage, by the great improvements that have been lately made in their culture, have equalled the above in their additional increase. Upon calculation it has been found, that 1,830,000 quarters of corn will supply 1,500,000 people with bread a whole year, or the whole French nation one month.—If peace should continue, and the spirit of agriculture increase, France will become the common granary of Europe for corn.

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1776. 174]

Dr. Rotheram, in a Philosophical Enquiry into the nature and properties of Water, lately published, fays, "One effect of how, which I can assure my readers of, is, that a certain quantity of it, taken up fresh from the ground, and mixed in a flour pudding, will supply the place of eggs, and make it equally light; the quantity allotted is two table spoonsful instead of one egg; and if this proportion be much exceeded, the pudding will not adhere together, but will fall to pieces in boiling. I affert this from the experience of my own family; and any one, who chuses to try it, will find it to be fact."

A letter from Mr. Edmonstone, who was one of the passengers saved out of the ship Grocer, says, that it is supposed the sand-bank at the mouth of the Humber, on which the ship struck, was thrown up by the rapidity of the stream and the meeting of the tide, during the late great floods in that river, as ships went into the Humber some months ago, without meeting with any obstructions. This is mentioned as a caution to seamen.

The answer returned to fuch mercantile bodies as have applied for the protection of their trads, is, that their requests shall be granted, if a war be declared before the time they require it; and this regards the applications of the India Company and Carolina Mochants, as well as other bodies of capital traders.

Lord Bute is at Venice, and has lately sent to England three boxes of human and other bones, which may be counted a curiofity, and come from a place in Istria, which his Lordship calls in a letter of his The Catacombs of the World. k is certain that in an island oppofite Dalmatia, there were found, after digging through the furniti about four feet, such a quantity of human bones, going a prodgious depth, and running under the sea, probably to the oppose shore, as is assonishing and wholly The bones are unaccountable. not all human, but mixed with those of other animals; nor can they be a lusus natura, having the properties of bones, except that of stinking when put in the fire, which they may have he through the prodigious time they muit have been deposited.

Sir Charles Knowles, lately appointed Chief President of the Admiralty to the Empress of Russia, set out with his family for Petersburgh, by the way of Calais, to take on him that office.

This night there was a 30th very hot press on the river Thames; they paid no regard to protections, but Aripped eraf vessel of all their hands that were useful. They boarded the Glama East-Indiaman; but the crew made ence, got on thore, and London about twelve It is computed that on and on thore, they took 700.

CHRONICLE. [175

y arrived in town from New-England, Capt. 20 was tried there lately t of fome lives being riot between the town sidiery, but was honourrted. eruption of Mount Velately alarmed the adatry, but ferves to amufe The aperture is not feot in diameter. The quid fire runs down the : mountain at a great es than five miles in an as this ffream is not twelve or fourteen feet udeft parts, and spreads former lavas as foon tes the great valley that een Vetuvius and the of Somma, it is hoped t reach the fertile and parts, unless it should reatly. The mouth of no imokes much, but ts up flones nor makes so that one may walk banks of this extraorver with the greatest received by the general lay, are full of the dae by the dreadful florm afts of this kingdom. aty fail of the colliers fied. One of the goarmed veffels, with 127

wrecks and dead bodies filling the flores arrives daily. There has not been fo general a destruction among the faipping on our coafts in the memory of man.

Letters from Mahon advise, that two chefts, one containing the Gospel, most cariously bound, with golden covers, and a very curious fet of Communion-plate, all rickly imboffed; and the other, containing equally magnificent vertments for the Priests of the Greek church at Mahon, has been fent as a prefent by the Emprefs of Russia, which were received by them the third of October, the coronation-day of the Empress.

Rome, Dec. 19. Cardinal Colorins, vicar to the pope, has published a placard, by which all women, of what degree foever, are forbid to appear in the churches with their faces uncovered.

Hague, Dec. 21. On Wednefday last, being the day appointed for christening the new-born daughter of their Serene and Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princes of Orange, that ceremony was performed with the greatest solemnity, in the great church of this town. The young Princels was named Frederica - Louisa - Wilhelmina : and had the honour to have the King of Great Britain, the King of Prussia, and their Mightinesses, among her (ponfors. The Prince of Orange entertained the States-General, &c. in a splendid man-London were wrecked ner at dinner, after the ceremony uth, and many of the was over, at the palace called the Old Court.

Yesterday, and this day, depuboard, suffered in the tations from the States-General, er. From every quarter and the different provinces and nelancholy accounts of towns, have had the honour to Wais wait upon the Princels of Orange, and accompanied their compliments of congratulation with the free gift of their constituents, to the new-born Princels; which amount to upwards of 35,000 flo-sins yearly for her life.

176] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

It appears by the abstracts of the accounts, laid by the Black-friarsbridge committee before the court of Aldermen, that the sum of 166,217 l. 3 s. 10 1 d. paid to the several artificers, in the bridge account, includes the ium of 5830 l. for arching and filling up Fleet-ditch, and making the way from Flect-street, to the upper ground in the parish of Christ-Church, Surry; 5000 l. for piling the foundation of the feveral piers; 400 l. for the three privies, at the ends; and 2167 l. for making, altering and repairing the temporary bridge, which being deducted, the nett expence of the building the bridge, is 152,840 l. 3s. 10d i. and was completed by Mr. Mylne in ten years and three quarters, from the time of his being employed by the city for that purpole, for which his falary for himself, as surveyor, architect, engineer, measurer and his clerks, amount to 3762 l. 10s.

It appears also by the said abfiract, that the repairs of Londonbridge amounted to 80,060 l. for which the architects and surveyor had five per cent. on the artificers bills, and one per cent. of the purchases.

Westminster-bridge cost 218,8101.

and was eleven years and nine months in building, for which the Parliament granted for building and procuring the several conveniencies requisite thereto, from the year 1,37 to 49, inclusive, the sum of 389,500 l. and sons employed in the conformation of architect, engineers, sand compareller to the briavenues received the sum of 10 s. exclusive of gratuitic inventors of centers, and several engines and maching the said work; all whiness we find Mr. Mylne for 3,762 l. 10 s.

There has been, accor the above abstract, on the of last January, 70,000 rubbish laid on the marsh on the Surry side of Blac bridge, towards making roads from thence by the dalen-hospital to the turn order to give it a solidity gravelling.

By the said abstract it pears, that the tolls receithe temporary bridge pexpence of paying the money to the Watermen pany, for the Sunday sent the charge of erecting, and watching it, and as the building sund, the 1,757 l.

Died lately, in Scotland 102d year of his age, Joh nis, a labouring man. He the militia at the battle c cranky; followed his c employment till within 1 of his death; and retain senses to the last.

At Massiac in Auvergn Amouroux, in the 117th his age. He enjoyed a from the King for these six past, on account of his great

At a village near Cardi South Wales, one Joseph R carpenter, aged 106.

HRONICLE.

neral Bill of all the Christen. The Groft Product of the Duty on s and Burials, from December , 1769, to December 11, 70.

riftened Buried 8761 Males 11210 ties 8348 Females 11224

17:00 22434 used in the burials this year 587.

med in christenings 395.

Paris, Births 19549. Deaths 3. Marriages 4775. Found-received in the Hospitals, Increased in the hitths year 104. Increased in the 1 392. y and suburbs of York, ned 517. Marriages 173.

s 429. Increased in christen-7. Decreased in burials 32. the course of last year 3890 mve been cleared from Newof which 3520 were coastand 370 only for foreign ies, being 58 lefs than were d out last year. L. XIII.

Hops for one Year, ending the 5th of January, 1771.

•	1.	8.	đ.
Barum	- 43	9	3
Bath	0	9 6	6
Bedford	48	16	ø
Bucks	19	9	- 4
Cambridge	- 64	15	Š
Canterbury -	27650	- 4	2
Cornwall	124	8	4525042
Derby	406	11	0
Doncafter	15	₹	- 4
Dorfet	. 14	6	*
Effex —	2781	19	8
Exon	- 15	10	3
Gloucester -	- 23	10	Š
Grantham	- 43	11	0
Hants	8324	12	11
Hereford	7065	2	4
Hertford -	55	12	8
Lincoln —	1798	7	- 4
Lynn	22	7	$
Manchefter -	75	13	10
Northampton -	_ 3		5
Norwich	22	16	*
Ozon — —	- 0	8	11
Reading -	1221	7	28
Rochester —	28243	12	8
Sarom — —	129	12	8
Salop	9	2	0
Sheffield	704	18	8
Suffolk —	1191	10	0
Surry	138	17	11
Suffer — —	13687	2	8
Taunton	- 6	13	0 4 4 0 8
Tiverton	- 4	11	4
g Baft		15	4
Middle	- 19	9	0
₩eft -	4	7
Wolverhampton -		-	10
Worcester -	2611	14	4
Total		_	4
Total —	101131	Z	Ż
CM)		Bir	AL-
[N]		ar II (

178] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

BIRTHS for the year 1770.

Jan. 2. Lady of Lord Viscount
Gage, of a child stillborn.

7. Lady Susan Burgersh, of a daughter.

Bellasyse, of a daughter.

Dean of Worcester's Lady, of a son.

23. Lady of Lord Viscount Weymouth of a son.

29. Right Hon. Lady Hope, of a daughter.

Feb. 1. Dutchess of Gordon, of a son and heir.

Lady of Sir Sampson Gideon, Bart. of a daughter.

11. Lady of the Hon. George Hobart of a daughter.

The Lady of Sir John Gresham, of a daughter.

24. Countels of Offory, of a daughter.

Lady of Lord Fortescue, of a daughter.

Mar. 6. Lady of the Right Hon.

Lord Archibald Hamilton, of a son.

Lady of Sir James Lake, of a daughter.

22. Right Hon. Lady Arundel, of a daughter.

Lady of Sir William
Wake, of a daughter,

Dutchess of Grafton, of a son.

Countels Dowager of Dumfries, of a son.

May 3. Princes of Wurtemburgh, of a Prince.

Lady of the Right Hon.

Lord Milbourn, of a fon.

May 7. Lady Mounthemart, of a fon.

Countels of Fingal, of a Champneys, Bart. of a son.

o'clock, the Queen was happily delivered of a Princess, at her Majesty's palace, St. James's-park.

June 9. Lady of Sir William

Maxwell, of a fon.

Lady of Sir William

Stapleton, of a son.

July 1. Her Grace the Dutchess of Portland, of a son.

Egerton, Bart. of a daughter.

Aug. 3. Princes Royal of Pruss, of a Prince.

18. Her Royal Highness the Princels of Brunswick, of a Prince.

Her Grace the Dutchess of Manchester, of a daughter.

Countels of Drogheds, of a fon.

Sept. 1. Lady of Lord Craves, of a son.

11. Countels of Thanet, of a fon.

Countels of Dalhouse, of a fon.

22. Counters of Cork, of a fon.

Lady of Sir John Trevelion, of a fon.

Rev. Mr. Byron, of a fon.

Lady of Sir Robert Bewick, of a fon.

Lady

CHRONICLE.

[179

t. 22. Lady of Sir James Ibbotfon, of a daughter.

lock, Bart, of a daugh-

10. Her Grace the Dutchess of Boccleugh, of a daughter.

Countels of Aucram, of a daughter.

v. 1. Countels of Landerdale, of a daughter.

9. Lady of the Right Hoo. Lord Viscount Powerfcourt; of a daughter.

Lady of Sir Fitzgerald Aylmer, Bart, of a Lady of the Hon. Lord Blany, of a fon.

38. Dutcheis of Parma, of a Res.

> Lady Viscounters Sudley, of a daughter.

1.3 Lady of Sir Peter Rivers Gray, Bart. of & ion.

Lady Germaine, of a foo.

Countels of Dunmore, of a fon.

A. Her Grace the Dutchess of Marlborough, of a

Her Royal Highness the Princels of Orange, of a Princefa.

29. Lady of Prince Gallitzin, the Ruffian Ambaffador at the Hague, of a foo.

Lady of Sir Sampfort Gideon, Bart, of a See.

MARRIAGES, 1770.

. g. Lady of Sir Henry Huu- Jan. 9. Ifasc Spooner, Efq; to the eldest daughter of Sir Henry Gough, Bart.

Hon. and Rev. Mr. Henry Beauclerk, to Miss Drummond.

Feb. 15. Bdwin Lascelles, Esq; to Lady Flemming.

William Lestie Hamilton, Esq; to Lady Isabella Erikine, fifter to the Earl of Buchan.

24. Captain Fitzgerald, to the fifter of the Right Hon. Thomas Connoily.

Right Mar. 5 Henry Lord Borthwick, to Miss Drammond.

7. Sir Charles Stile, Bart. of Wateringbury, Kent, the Hon. Miss Wingfield. daughter to Lord Powerscourt.

9. Thomas Hogg, jun. of Newliston, Eiq; to a daughter of Lord Lauderdale.

13. At Edinburgh, Sir William Murray of Auchtertire, Bart. to Lady Augusta Mackenzie. daughter of Lord Cromartie.

19. Hon. and Rev. John Harley, Alderman of Hereford, and brother to the Earl of Oxford; to Miss Vaughan of South Wales, with a fortune of 3000l. a year.

20. Sir Daved Dalrymple, Bart, to Mils Ferguson.

FAZ 🚊

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770. [081

- Mar. 22. The Earl of Carlisle, to June 2. Col. Clements, & the second daughter of Earl Gower.
 - 26. The Right Hon. the Earl of Jersey, to Miss Fanny Twisden.

Sir Gilbert Heathcote, Bart. to Miss Hudson.

- April 2. David Gavin, Esq; of Langtown in Scotland, to Lady Maitland, eldest daughter of the Barl of Lauderdale.
 - 14. The Hon. Thomas Willoughby, brother Lord Middleton, Miss Chadwick.

The Hon. Thomas Erskine, to Miss Moore.

- 20. The Right Hon. the Earl of Albemarle, to Miss Miller.
- 23. The Earl of Exeter, to Anna Maria Cheatham, of Sodorhall, Yorkshire.

- Churchill, Rsq; to Lady Louisa Greville, youngest daughter to the Earl of Warwick.

May 19. The Dauphin of France, to the Arch-dutchess Antoinetta, of Austria.

- 21. Charles Deering, Esq; to Miss Farnaby, fister to Sir Charles Farnaby.
- 23 Sir Archibald Grant, Bart to Mrs. Millar, Palimail.
- 24. Bennet Langton, Esq; of Langton in Lincolnfhire, to the Countels of Rothes.
- June 1. Sir George Cooke, Bart. to Mis Middleton, fifter to Sir William Middlewa.

Webb, only d to General Wel

- 7. Sir John Wrc Bart. to the Ho Courtenay, one Maids of Honor
- 9. Alderman Trecot Miss Meredith to Sir William dith.
- 20. The Hon. and Dr. Shute Barr Lord Bishop of daff, to Miss niece to the la neral Guise.
- 26. Alexander Fordycı Banker, to Lad garet Lindsay, daughter to the of Balcarras.
- July 11. Earl Fitzwilliam, dy Charlotte Po daughter to the of Besborough.

Aug. 7. Right Hon. Lord fington, to Mil celles.

- 30. Rev. Mr. Bow Miss Hales, si Sir Tho. Pym Bart.
- Sept. 17. At Calais, Mon-Prades de la 1 Captain in th ment of Piedr garrison at Ca Miss Harriot cumbe, daugh Lady Fenoulhe niece to Georg Edgcumbe.

24. The Right Ho Earl of Buckin shire, to Miss (ly, daughter of Anne Connolly.

CHRONFCLE.

t. 24. John Bateman, Efq; to the Countefs of Rofs.

25. Sir Robert Goodyere, to Mils Pits.

t. 13. At New-York, Sir William Draper, Knight of the Bath, to Miss Susanna de Lancey, daughter of the Right Hon. Oliver de Lancey.

Sir Brownlow Cuft, Bart.
 Mife Drury.

Charles Nelson Cole, Esq; of the Inner-Temple, to Miss Abdy, fifter to Sir Anthony Abdy, Bart. of Albys, Essex.

Right Hon, the Earl of Eglington, to a daughter of Lord Glencaire.

26. Lord Digby, to Milis Polly Knowler, of Canterbary.

Nov. 5. Major General John Scott, to Lady Mary Hay, eldest daughter to the Earl of Errol.

At Dublin, John Hamilton, Esq. representative in parliament for the borough of Strabane, to the Hon. Miss Hamilton, daughter of Lord Vitcount Boyne.

General M'Kay, to Mils Car, with 30,000 l.

Captain Bathurst, of the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards blue, to Miss Ashby of Derby, with 20,000 l.

Thomas Ackland, Efq; to Lady Mary, daughter to the Earl of Hichefter. Principal PROMOTIONS for the Year 1770, from the London Gazette, &c.

Jan. 17. Right Hon. Charles Yorke, Efq; to be Keeper of the Great Seal, a Privy Counfellor, and likewife Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, and he accordingly took his place at the Board.

Yorke, Eig; Lord High Chancellor, the dignity of a Baron of Great Britain, with remainder to his heirs male, by the name, file, and title, of Lord Morden, Baron of Morden, in the County of Cambridge.

- 19. Duke of Somerset, a Privy Counsellor.

Sidney -- 22. Sir Stafford Smythe, Knight, one of the Barons of his Majesty's court of Exchequer, the Hon. Henry Bathurst, Esq; one of the Justices of his Majesty's Court of Commonpleas, and Sir Richard Afton, Knight, one of the Justices of his Majefty's Court of King's-bench, Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal, in the room of Lord Morden, deceafed, - Lord Mansfield, by a Commission under the Great Sea!, to supply the place of Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, in the House of Peers.

- 23. Right Hon, Sir Fletcher Norton, Speaker of the House of Commons.

- 28. Lord North, first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, in the room of the Duke of Grafton, resigned.

of the Stole, and first Lord of the Bed-Chamber. — Peter [N] 3 Chester

Chuster, Esq; Captain - General and Governor in chief of West-Florida.

Feb. 2. Right Hon. Welbore Ellis, one of the Vice Treasurers of Ireland, in the room of the Right Hon. James Grenville, refigued.

- 6. Charles Townshend, Esq; one of the Lords of the Treasury.

- 9. The Earl of Hallisax, Lord Privy Seal, in the room of the Earl of Brittol.

- 13. Hon Thomas Robinson, Esq; Vice - Chamberlain to the Queen, in the room of Lord Villers, now Earl of Jersey.—Right Hon. Sir Edward Hawke, Knight of the Bath, John Buller, Eiq; the Right Hon. Henry Viscount Palmeriton, of the kingdom of Ireland, Charles Spencer, Esq; commonly called Lord Charles Spencer, the Right Hon. Wilmot Viscount Lisburne, of the kingdom of Ireland, and Francis Holburne, and Charles James Fox, Esqrs. Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

- 19. Right Hon. Thomas Robinson, Esq; Vice Chamberlain to her Majesty, a Privy Counfellor.—James Sampson, Consulgeneral at Tetuan.—George Pitt, Eig; Ambassador extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to his Catholic Majesty.—Alexander Munro, Esq; Consul at Madrid.

Mar. o. Major Gorham, Lieutenant Governor of Placentia, in the room of Otho Hamilton, Esq; deceased. - William Faulkener, Eig; to be Fort-Adjutant of Fort-Augustus, in Scotland, in the room of Richard Trought, Gent. deceased.

Mar. 19. Mijor-General Clavering, Governor of Landguard-

Fort, in the room of the 1st? Lieutenant-General Robert miger.-William Stewart, Lieutenant Governor of island of Tobago....Israel Wilkes, Esq; brother to John Wilker, Esq; Consul at Aleppo in Syria. -Colonel James Cunningham, Governor of the island of St. John's, Newfoundland. — Edward Thurlow, Esq; Solicitor-General, in the room of Mr. Dunning. -John Nicholson, Esq; Solicitor to the Stamp office, in the room of Mr. Cruwys, deceased. — Thomas Davison, Esq; to be Collector-general of his Majesty's cultoms for the island of Jamaica.

April 10. The Earl of Drogheda, Master-General of the Ordnance in the kingdom of Ireland.

-- 16. Soame Jenyns, Edward Elliott, John Roberts, William Fitzherbert, Robert Spencer, (commonly called Lord Robert Speacer] George Greville, (commonly called Lord Greville) and William Northey, Esqrs; Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

- 37. Iiis Royal Highness Major General William Duke of Gloucester, Colonel of the first regiment of foot guards, in the room of Field Marshal John Earl Ligonier, deceased.-Lieut. Gen. John Earl of Loudon, Colonel of the third regiment of foot guards, in the room of the Duke of Gloucester.-Major General John Parflow, Colonel of the 30th regiment of foot, in the room of the Earl of Loudon.—Generals: Sir John Mordaunt: the Hon. James Cholmondeley: Peregrine Lascelles: Lord John Murray: John Earl of Loudon: William Earl of Panmure: William Marquis of Lothian; William Earl

54

CHRONICLE

LIBUTERART-GENERALS:

on Skinner: the Hon. RoMonckton: John Henry

Edward Sandford: The-

Dury, John Parker:
Lumbton: the Hon. Charles 1: John Parslow: William e: the Hon. Thomas Gage:
e Viscount Townshend: Frederick Cavendish: John e la War: Charles Duke of cond: Henry Earl of Pem: John Severn: Sir John ht, Bart, Henry Whitley: Clavering: the Hon. George

George Gray: James
hus Oughton: James Duke inster: his Royal Highness m Duke of Gloucester. son-Genthals: Marisco ick: William Earl of GlenWilliam Deane: John ThoRobert Dalrymple: Horne stone: William Evelyn: Salter: Thomas Earle:
d Worge: James Johnston:
Philip Sherrard; the Hon,
e Lane Parker: James GifCharles Earl of Drogheda:

Tatton: Francis Grant: d Bendiche: the Hon. Alex-Mackay: William Augustus John Scott.

'iscount Dungannon, Hugh e Jones, Eig; Bellingham Efg; Right Hon. John Beard Sir William Ofborne, to be Chief Commissioners Revenue and Excise, and Commissioners and Goverall and every other part of jesty's revenues in the king-

Ireland.—The Right Hon. Rice, Efq; Treasurer of tjesty's Chamber, a Privy lor.—Justice Bathurst took place in the Court of Common-Pleas, in the room of Sir Edward Clive, Knight, refigned.— Justice Gould, in the room of Justice Bathurst.—And Sir Joseph Yates, from the court of King's-bench, as junior Judge in the said court.

—And in the court of King's-bench, Justice Aston took place in the room of Sir Joseph Yates.

—Judge Willes, in the room of Justice Aston.—And William Blackstone, Esq; Solicitor to her Majesty; junior Judge of the said court, and a Knight.

May 7. Lord Miltown, Sir William Ofborne, Sir Archibald Achefon, Sir Arthur Brooke, Mr. James Fortescue, Mr. Heary King, Mr. Ralph Howard, Mr. Silver Oliver, and Mr. Edward Cary, Privy Connsellors of the kingdom of Ireland.

- 19. The Right Hon. Catharine Countels of Egmont (fecond wife of John now Earl of Egmont in Ireland, Baron Lovel and Holland in Great Britain, and fifter to Spencer Compton, now Earl of Northampton) the dignity of a Baronnels of the kingdom of Ireland, by the title of Lady Arden, Baroness Arden of Lohort Caftle, in the county of Corke, to hold the faid dignity unto her the faid Counters of Egmont, and the dignity of a baron of the faid kingdom of Ireland to the heirs male of her body lawfully begotten, by the title of Lord Arden, Baron Arden of Lohort Caille, in the faid county of Corke.-The Right Hon. William Henry Fortescue, Esq; and the heirs male of his body, the dignity of a Baron of the faid kingdom, by the title of Baron Clermont of Cermont, in the county of Lonth .- Tho-[N] +

mas Dawson, Esq; and the heirs male of his body, the dignity of a Baron of the said kingdom, by the title of Baron Dartrey of Dawson's Grove, in the county of Monaghan. - William Henry Dawson, Esq; and the male of his body, the dignity of a Baron of the said kingdom, by the title of Baron Dawson of Dawson Court, in the Queen's county.—Bernard Ward, Esq; and the heirs male of his body, the dignity ef a Baron of the said kingdom, by the title of Baron Bangor of Castle Ward, in the county of Downe.—And Sir Penistone Lamb, Bart, and the heirs male of his body, the dignity of a Baron of the faid kingdom, by the title of Lord Melbourne, Baron of Kilmore, in the county of Cavan.—Colonel John Burgoyne, comptroller of Chester, in the room of Edward Herbert, Esq; deceased.—William Bromhill, Esq; Patent Cuitomer of the Ports of Southampton and Portsmouth. - William Senhouse, Esq; Surveyor-general of the customs in Barbadoes, and all the Leward Mands, in the room of the Hoh. Thomas Gibbs, Esq; deceased. -Dr. Spencer Madan, a prebend in the cathedral of l'eterborough.

June 20. William Ashurst, Esq; a Knight, and one of the Judges of the court of King's-bench.

July 14. Sir William Young, Bart, Governor of the island of Dominica.—General James Cholmondeley, Governor of the garritin of Chefter, in the room of the E. of Cholmondeley, deceafed - Major David Home, Lieutenant Governor of the faid garriton, in the room of General Cholmondelcy.

The Right Hon. Ham --- 24. Stanley, Esq; Vice-Admiral of the Isle of Wight.

August. Hugh Palliser, Esq; Comptroller of the Navy.—George Mackenzie, Esq; Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels on the Jamaica station, is the room of Commodore Forek -William Frager, Esq; under Secretary to Lord Weymouth, Gazette Writer, in the room of Edward Weston, Esq; deceased .-The Right Hon. L. C. J. Paterfon, a Privy Counseller of Ireland. -John M'Kenzie, Esq; of Device, Deputy Keeper of his Majefy's Signet in Scotland, in the room of the late Alexander M'Milla, Esq; deceased.

Oct. 5. William Fawcet, Esq; Lieutenant - Governor of Penderin nis Callle, the room of Esq; deceased Richard Bowles, -Hon. John Forbes, and Francis Holbourn, Esq; Admirals of the White.

Oct. 18. Sir Thomas Frankland, Bart. his Grace the Duke of Bolton, Sir Charles Hardy, Kal. Right Hon. George Earl of Northesk, Right Hon. Sir Charles Saunders, Knight of the Bath, Admirals of the Blue - Thomas Pye, Eiq; Sir Samuel Comit, Bart. Francis Geary, Esq; Vice-Admirals of the Red .- Sir George Bridges Rodney, Bart. Sir William Hurnaby, Baronet; James Young. Eig; Vice-Admirals of the White. - Sir Piercy Brett, Knight, Sir John Moore, Knight of the Bath, Sir James Douglas, Knt. Sir John Bentley, Knt. Vice-Admirals of the Bive.—Right Hon. George Lord Edgeumbe, Samuel Graves, Eig; William Parry, Esq; Hon. Augustus Keppel, Rear-Admirals of the

be red.—John Amherst, Esq; his loyal Highness Henry Frederick Duke of Cumberland, Sir Peter Denis, Bart. Matthew Buckle, Esq; lear-Admirals of the White.—lobert Man, Esq; Richard Spry, sq; Robert Harland Esq; Right Hon. Richard Lord Visc. Howe, lear-Admirals of the Blue.

Oct. 24. Sir George Bridges Rodney and Sir William Burnaby, Barts. to be Vice-Admirals of the Red:-Sir Piercy Brett, Knt. Sir John Moore, Bart. and Knt. of the Bath, Sir James Douglas and Sir John Bently, Knts, to be Vice-Admirals of the White.—The Right Hon. George Lord Edgcumbe, Samuel Graves, William Parry, Esque. the Hon. Augustus Keppel, John Amherst, Esq; and his Royal Highness Henry Frederick Duke of Cumberland, to be Vice-Admirals of the Blue.—Sir Peter Denis, Bart, Matthew Buckle and Robert Man, Esqrs. to be Rear-Admirals of the Red.—Richard Spry, Esq; to be Rear-Admiral of the White. — And the following gentlemen were appointed flag offipers, viz.—Robert Hughes, Esq; to be Rear-Admiral of the Red. -Clark Gayton, John Barker and Lucius O'Brien, Esqrs. to be Rear-Admirals of the White. - John Montagu, Thomas Craven, and James Sayer, Esqrs. to be Rear-Admirals of the Blue. — And to rank as such with officers of the ame flag, according to their feniwity as Captains.—General Conway, Colonel of the Royal Reginent of Horse Guards Blue, in the room of the Marquis of Grany, decased.

— 25. Sir Jeffery Amherst, Knt. of the Bath, Lieutenant General of his Majesty's forces, Governor of the Island of Guernsey, the castle of Cornet, and all other islands, forts and appurtenances thereunto belonging. - Thomas Hutchinson, Esq; Captain General and Governor in chief of his Majesty's province of the Massachuset's Bay, in New-England. - Andrew Oliver, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor; and Thomas Flucker, Esq; Secretary of his Majesty's said province of the Massachuset's Bay. — William Stewart, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor of his Majesty's island of Dominica. - William Young, Esq; Lieutenant-Governor of his Majesty's island of Tobago.

- 27. The Hon. and Rev. Brownlow North, D. L. and one of his Majesty's Chaplains in ordinary, the place of Dean of the metropolitical church of Canterbury, void by the death of Dr. John Potter.—Rev. Benjamin Kennicott, D. D. the place of a Canon of the cathedral church of Christ in the univerfity of Oxford.—Hon. and Rev. James Cornwallis, clerk, M. A. the place of a prebendary of the collegiate church of St. Peter Westminster, void by the resignation of Dr. Kennicott.—Rev. Dr. Lumner, Vice-chancellor of the university of Cambridge.

Dec. 8. Earl of Dunmore, Governor of New York, to be Lieutenant and Governor General of Virginia, in the room of Lord Bottetourt, deceased.—Wm. Tryon, Esq; Governor of North Carolina, to be Governor of New York, in the room of the Earl of Dunmore.

—And Henry Martin, Esq; Governor of North Carolina.—Rt. Hon. Earl Cornwallis, to be Constable of the Tower of London, in the room of John Lord Berkeley of Stratton, resigned.

Dec. 19.

199]

in all the wars of Queen Anne unde, the Duke of Marlborough, and in every fuceeding war, with a bravery and conduct that deservedly raised him to the chief posts in his profession.

May 1. Rt. Hon. Lord George James Montague, youngest son to his Grace the Duke of Manchester.

9. Prince Charles, the reigning Landgrave of Hesse Phillipshal, in the 88th year of his age.

Sir William St. Quintin of Harpham, Yorkshire, Bart. His title and ettate devolves to his son William.

15. Lady of Sir William Innes,

Bart. at Ipswich.

18. Claud. Wm. Testu, Marquis de Balincourt, sirst Marshal of France, Knight of the King's orders, Governor of the town and citadel of Strasbourg, &c. in the 91st year of his age.

21. Rt. Hon. Alexander, Lord

Colville.

Lately, Thomas Shewell, Esq; who has left the following charities by will: To the charityschool for girls at Hadley in Middlesex, 201.—To the charity school for girls of the parish of St. Luke, Old-threet, 201.—To the incorposated lociety in Dublin, for promoting English protestant schools in Ireland 500 !.—To the Small Pox Hospital in Coldbath-sields, 500 l. -To St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 1500 l.—To the Hospital for Lunaticks, commonly called St. Luke's Hospital, 1000 l.—To Christ's Hospital, 1000 l.

22. Lord James Murray, the Duke of Athol's second fun.

25. At Geannies, in Rossshire by a fall from his horse, Sir Alex. Mackenzie, of Gerlock, Bart.

Lady Emilia Chichester, youngest daughter of the Earl of Donaegal. Mils Tarnour, fifter to Lond Winterton.

Lady Lambert, reliet of Sir Daniel Lambert.

27. The Queen Sophia Magdalena, dowager of Christian VI. and grandmother to the present king of Denmark, at the palace of Christiansbourg, in the 70th year of an age.

Howe, brother to Lord Chelworth.

7. Sir Joseph Yates, Knt. one of the honestest Judges that ever filled the bench.

Mrs. Gunning, housekeeper of Somerfet-house, and mother to the present Dutchess of Hamilton.

10. Right Hon. George Earl of Cholmondeley, Viscount Malpan He is succeeded by his grandion, just come of age.

18. Sir James Cotter, Baronet; in Ireland.

21. Right Hon. William Beckford, Esq; Lord Mayor of London.

Francis Ernest, Count Salma Russercheid, Bishop of Toursay, aged 75.

Hon. Arthur Trevor, Esq; only son of Lord Viscount Dunganson, member for Hillsborough.

Hon. Miss Dormer, niece to the Earl of Shrewsbury.

July 3. Lady of the Right Hon. Lord William Beauclerk, brother to the Duke of St. Alban's.

Sir Thomas Hankey, Knight,

the great Banker.

5. Sir David Cunningham, of Corsehill, Scotland.

Lady Peshall, mother of Sir John Peshall.

14. Relict of Sir John Way, Baronet.

18. In Ireland, the Lady of Robert

CHRONICLE.

[189

itewart, Efq; and daughter arl of Hertford.

he Hon. Mr. Liddell, broord Ravensworth.

Rt. Hon. Lord Charles Cavendith Bentinck; fon ake of Portland.

famous old man of the Christian Jacob Drakentely died at Aarhuns, in hyear of his age. He was Stravanger in Norway, in 1624 and lived single till of 113 years, when he marvidow of 60 years of age, the latter part of his life requently visited by persons ighest rank, who were cusee and converse with him. aid there is a print of this in England curiously ento the prefent Lord Bulkel lady to Col. Sir Hugh s, Bart. member for Beauit Barnhill, North Wales. homas Wallace, Bart. of a Scotland.

6. Duke Clement of Barrit confin and prefumptive the Elector. He has left by his Dutchess, lister to for Palatine. His income confiderable.

ance, the Rt. Hon. John tirn.

obert Clarke, Baronet, of ham, in Norfolk.

Lord Baron Bellew, of Du-

12. Lady Drummond, fifter late Duke of Perth.

Hon. William Annesley, lerawley, and Baron Anf Castle-William, in the f Down, Ireland. Lady Monnoux, at Wooton; Bedfordshire.

Hon. Mrs. Elizabeth Hume Campbell.

At Milibank, Westminster, the Hon. Mrs. Cross, relict of the late Sir John Cross, Bart.

14. In Ireland, the Rt. Hon, Lady Viscounters Townshend; the was the only surviving child of James, the fifth Earl of Northampton, and Baroners Ferrers, of Charaley, in right of her mother. She married Viscount Townshend, the present Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, in December, 1751, and by his Lordship has had seven children, sive of whom are living, viz. four sons and a daughter.

26. Lady of Sir Edward Hales, Bart. of Sifterton, Canterbury.

30. Rt. Hon. Sir Thomas Robinson, Lord Grantham, Knt. of the Bath, one of the Privy Council, and F. R. S.

Oct. 1. Sir Richard Lyttleson, Knt. of the Bath; at Cheifea.

4. Rt. Hon. Lady Euphemia Stuart, fifter to the Earl of Moray, Edinburgh.

Most Noble, George, Marquis of Tweedale, Earl of Gifford, Vifcount Walden and Peebles, and Baron Yester, in the 13th year of his age, non, fifter to the Earl of March-

14. Lady Hankey, relict of Sie Joseph Hankey, Bart, at Bath.

Hon. Mrs. Rooke, aged 70, relist of Geo. Rooke, Esq; son of the famous Admiral, and faster to Lord Viscount Dudley.

Oft. 11. At Belvoir Castle, to the irreparable loss of his country, and the inexpressible grief of all true

190] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

true Englishmen, the most noble the Marquis of Granby, eldest son to his Grace the Duke of Rutland, by Bridget (only daughter and heiress to Robert Sutton, Lord Lexington) who was married to the Duke of Rutland, August 27, 1717. The Marquis was born January 2, 1720-21, and was elected for Grantham in three Parliaments; and in those of 1754, 1761, and 1768, for Cambridgeshire, and is the 24th in paternal descent from Sir Robert de Manners, the patriarch of his Family.

In the Rebellion in 1745, his Lordship raised a regiment of soot for his Majesty's service; and March 4, 1755, was promoted to the rank of Major-General of his Majesty's forces.

In May 1758, his Lordship was apprinted Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, and promoted to the rank of Lieutenant General on February 5, 1759. The 25th of August following, he was constituted Commander in chief of all his Majesty's forces, then serving in Germany in his Majesty's army under Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick. In which command he not only shared the fatigues and danger of the troops under his command, but when the British forces were but in very indifferent quarters (not owing to any defect in his conduct) he procured provisions and necessaries for the private soldiers at his own expence, his table being at the same time open to the officers.

On September 15, 1759, he was appointed Lieutenant General of the Ordnance; and Prince Ferdinand being elected a Knight of the Garter, his Lordship was nominated first plenipotentiary for investing his Serene Highness with the ensigns of the order, which he performed in October following, with all the magnificence that a camp would admit of, and entertained the new knight and his retime with a sumptuous dinner.

Privy-Counsellor on May 2, 1760; and refigning the office of Lieutenant General of the Ordnance, was, on May 14, 1763, consisted Master-General of that department.

On February 21, 1764, he was declared Lord Lieutenant and culos rotulorum of Derbyshire.

His Lordship married September 3, 1750, the Lady Frances Seymour, eldest daughter of Charles Duke of Somerfet by his fecond wife, the Lady Charlotte Finch; and by her, who died January as, 1760, he had John, Lord Ross, born August 27, 1751, and died June 3, 1760; Charles, now Marquis of Granby, born March 15; 1754; Lady Frances, born March 24, 1753; Lady Catherine, bort March 28, 1755, and died January 4, 1757; Lord Robert, born February 6, 1758, and Lady Caroline, who died an infant.

19. Lady Turner, mother of the present Sir Edward Turner, Bart.

Rt. Hon. Lady Herbert, aunt to the Earl of Portimouth.

Rt. Hon. Lady Anstruther, at Baleaskie House, Fischire.

Sir David Murray, Bart, at Leghorn.

23. Hon. Arthur Barry, in Dablin.

The Hon. Mrs. Mary Colvil, fifter to the late Lord Colvil.

28. Rt. Hon. David Lord Oliphant.

30. Sir Samuel Cornift, Bart. a brave and experienced Admiral; semarkable for his services, as well in the late, as in sormer wars.

At Poole, Sir Peter Thompson,

Knight.

Nov. 6. The Rev. Sir Ashurst

Allen, Bart.

Marquis de Feuente, minister plenipotentiary from the King of Spain to the States of Holland.

Baron Monckhausen, prime mimiker to the electorate of Hanover.

9. In the 77th year of his age, his Grace John Duke of Argyll, great master of the household in Scothad, one of the fixteen peers of Scotland, general of his Majesty's forces, colonel of the royal regiment of grey dragoons, governor of Limerick, knight of the thillle, and one of his Majesty's most homorrable privy council. In 1761 he succreded his cousin Archibald, third Duke of Argyll, in titles and By his Lady, a fifter of the late Sir Henry Belanden, he has left three fons and one daughter, viz. John (now Duke of Argyll,) married to the Dutchess of Hamilton; Lord Frederick, married to the Countels Downger of Ferrers; Lord William, Gov. of Nova-Scotia, married to Miss Islards, of Charles Town, S. Carolina; and the Right Hon. the Counters of Aylesbury, Lady of Gen. Conway, and mother to her Grace the Dutchess of Richmond.

Right Rev. Dr. James Leslie, Bishop of Limerick, Ardsert and Aghadoe. He was promoted to those Sees in 1755, on the death of Dr. Buricough.

His Excellency Lord Bottetourt, Lieut. and Gov. General of Virginia, greatly lamented by the whole Colony.

Alexander Thompson, Esq; of

New York; by whose indefatigable pains the non-importation agreement was abolished, and commerce with the mother-country revived.

Rt. Hon. Countess of Harbo-rough, at Bath.

ville, member for Buckingham, and one of his Majesty's most honourable Privy Council. He was born in 1712, and in 1749 he married the daughter of Sir William Wyndham, Bart. and sister to the late Earl of Egremont, by whom he had two sons, and three daughters. When his body was opened, the blood vessels in the head were nearly empty; the rib bones on one side rotten, and two on the other side the same.

At Paris, the celebrated Henry-Francis Ledran, Surgeon General of the French King's armies.

23. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Mathias Mawson, Lord Bishop of Ely. His lordship was the oldest consecrated bishop in England and Ireland, being a bishop in the year 1738, on the death of Dr. Harris, bishop of Llandaff, from which see he was in 1740 translated to that of Chichester on the death Dr. Hare, and in 1754 promoted to Elv on the death of Bishop Gooch. His lordship has left to Corpus Christi College, of which he was formerly matter, 6000 l. for founding scholarships and exhibitions; and 3000 l. for rebuilding the College.

Hon. Matter Byng, only son of Rt. Hon. Lord Viscount Torrington.

Pris. Wilhelmina-Maria, Landgravine of Hesse-Hombourg, aged

Dec. 4. At his house in Pallmall, the Rt. Hon. John Percival, Earl of Egmont, in Ireland, May 7, 1762.

192] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

1762, his Lordship was called to the House of Peers by the title of Lord Lovel and Holland of Enmore, Somersetshire. He is succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son the Rt. Hon. John-James Visc. Percival, Col. of a company in the foot guards.

12. At her house in Hill-street, Mrs. Levercy, grandmother to Lord Viscount Molyneux.

16. Sir Tho. Frederick, Bart. The title descends to John Frederick of Burwood, Surry, and his estate to his two daughters.

27. Rt. Hon. Lady Mary Whitbread, Bedwell Park.

The Rt. Hon. Matthew Ducie Moreton, Lord Ducie of Moreton, in Staffordshire, and Lord Ducie of Tortworth, in Gloucestershire, who fucceeded his father, May 2, 1735, and was created Lord Doce of Tortworth, with remainder in failure of iffue to Thomas Reynolds; Esq; his nephew, and his heirs; and in the failure of his issue, to his brother Francis Reynolds, Esq; April 23, 1763. Robert Ducie, one of his Lordship's ancestors, was Lord Mayor of London in the reign of Charles the first, and though he lent his Majefty 80,000 l. which was loft by the King's being driven from Losdon, he died, however, worth His Lordship is fee-400,000 l. ceeded in his title and effaces by his fister's son, Major Reynolds, elder fon of Francis Reynolds, Esq; the present member for Lancaster.

[193]

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

Two PROTESTS of the House of Lords.

Veneris, 2do Die Februarii, 1770.

read for taking into confideration the State of the Nation, and for the Lords to be furnmoned. It was moved that the House should be put into a Committee thereupon. Accordingly,

The House was adjourned during pleasure, and put into a Commit-

See. After fome time

The Houle was refumed.

Then it was moved to refolve, That the House of Commons in the exercise of it's judicature in matters of election, is bound to judge according to the law of the land, and the known and established law and custom of Parliament, which is part thereof.

Which being objected to-and a question stated thereupon, after long debate,

The previous question was put, Whether the faid question shall be now put,

It was refolved in the affirmative. Contents 96, not Contents 47.

Diffentient',

r. Because the resolution was in our judgment highly necessary to ay the soundation of a proceeding a this House, which might tend to uset the minds of the people, by long them justice at a time, when the decision of the other house, which appears to us inconfishent Vol. XIII.

with the principles of the conflicution, and irreconcileable to the law of the land, has spread so universal an alarm, and produced so general a discontent throughout the kingdom.

2. Because, although we do not deny, that the determination on the right to a feat in the House of Commons is competent to the jurisdiction of that House alone; yet when to this it is added, that whatever they, in the exercise of that jurifdiction, think fit to declare to be law, is therefore to be so considered, because there lies no appeal, we conceive ourselves called upon to give that proposition the firongest negative; for, if admitted, the law of the land, by which all courts of judicature, without exception, are equally bound to proceed, is at once overturned and refolved into the will and pleafure of a majority of one House of Parliament, who, in assuming it, assume a power to over-rule at pleasure the fundamental right of election, which the ancient conflitution has placed in other hands-thole of their conflituents. And it ever this pretended power should come to be exercised. to the full extent of the principle, that House will be no longer the representative of the people, but a legarate body, altogether independent of them, self-existing, and self-elected.

deat

[0]

3. Because, when we are told, that expulsion implies incapacity, and the proof infifted upon is, that the people have acquiefeed in this principle, by not re-electing persons who have been expelled, we equally deny the position as salse, and reject the proof offered, as in no way supporting the position to which it is applied. We are fure the doctrine is not to be found in any flatute or law book, nor in the journals of the House of Commons; neither is it confonant with any just or known analogy of law. And as not re-electing would at most but infer a supposition of the electors approbation of the grounds of the expulsion, and by no means their acquiescence in the concluson of an implied incapacity, fo were there not one instance of a reelection after expulsion but Mr. Woolaston's, That alone demonstrates, that neither did the conftituents admit, nor did the House of Commons maintain incapacity to be the consequence of expulsion. Even the case of Mr. Walpole shews, by the first re-election, the sense of the people, that expulsion did not infer incapacity; and that precedent too, which is the only one of a declaration of incapacity, produced as it was under the influence of party violence in the latter days of Queen Anne, in so far as it relates to the introduction of a candidate having a minerity of votes, decides expressly against the proceedings of the House of Commons in the late Middlesex election.

4. Because, as the constitution has been once already destroyed by the assumption and exercise of the very power, which is now claimed, a day may come, when freedom & speech may be criminal in that House, and every member, who shall have virtue enough to with stand the usurpations of the time, and affert the rights of the perple, will, for that offence, be expelled by a factious and correct majority, and, by that expulsion, rendered incapable of ferving the public; in which case the elector will find themselves reduced to the miserable alternative of giving w altogether their right of election, w of chuling only such as are enemin of their country, and will be palies at least, if not active, in subverting the confliction.

q. Because, although it has been objected in the debate, that it is unusual and irregular in either House of Parliament to examine into the judicial proceedings of the other, whose decisions, as they essnot be drawn into question by sp peal, are, it is faid, to be fabriant to without examination of the principles of them elsewhere; we coceive the argument goes directly w revive and establish the explosed doctrine of passive obedience and non-resistance, which, as applied so the acts of any branch of the supreme power, we hold to be equally dangerous; and though it is generally true, that neither Hank ought lightly and wantonly to interpose even an opinion upon matter which the conflitution has entrained to the jurisdiction of the other, w conceive it to be no less true, the where, under colour of a judici proceeding, either House arrogan to itself the powers of the whol legislature, and makes the las which it professes to declare, the other not only may, but ought affert its own rights, and those o

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. [195

opie; that this House has > in former inflances, pary in the famous case of and White, in which the first on of the Lords declares, neither Hoofe of Parliament power, by any vote or dem, to create to themselves w privilege that is not warby the known laws and cuf-Parliament." We ought to * at this time the rather, as ence on fo important and ig an occasion might be inad into an approbation of niere, and be the means of that confidence with the , which it to effectful to the welfare, that this Hodfe, the ary guardians of their rights, ax all times endeavour to is.

ecause, upon the whole, we the power which the House tinous have affumed to themof treating an incapacity, va to the law, and thereby ing in effect all the electors est-Britain of their invaluights of free election, conto them by so many folema 🖟 a flagrant njurpatien, 25 repagnant to every effential er of the conflitution, as the finip-money by King Charles tat of the suspending and difg power by King James II. ing indeed, in our opinion, uding and dispensing power, ally affamed and exercised by use of Commons, against the annd fundamental liberties of the

it was moved to refolve, iny refolation of the House, y or indirectly impeaching ment of the House of Comin a matter where their jurifi is competent, final, and five, would be a violation of the conflicational right of the Commons, tends to make a breach between the two Houses of Parliament, and leads to a general confusion.

Diffentient',

t. Because, we apprehend that the rights and powers of the Peerage are not given for our own particular advantage, but merely as g conflitutional truft, to be held and exercised for the benefit of the people, and for the prefervation of their laws and liberties; and we should bold ourselves betrayers of that truft, unworthy of our high rank in the kingdom, and of our feats in this House, if we confidered any one legal right of the subject, much less the first and most important of all their rights, as a matter indifferent and foreign to the Peers of this kingdom.

2. Because, by this resolution, it is declared to the world, that if the Hoose of Commons thould change the whole law of election, should transfer the rights of the freeholders to copyholders and leafeholders for years, or totally extioguish those rights by an arbitrary declaration; (bould alter the constitution of cities and boroughs, with regard to their elections; should reverse not only all the franchiles of fuffrage, which the people hold under the common law, but also trample upon the fanctions of fo many acts of Parliament, made for declaring and fecaring the rights of election, that even in such a critical emergency of the constitution, the people are to despair of any relief whatsoever from any mode of, direct or indirect, interference of this House.

3. Because, by this resolution, the House not only resules to fland by the people, in case they should [O] a suffer fusfer the most grievous injuries from their representatives, but it abdicates its ancient and unquestioned province and duty of the hereditary Council to the Crown, rendering itself unable to give its advice in a point, in which of all others the King may stand in the greatest need of the wisdom and authority of the Peers; a point, such as the present, in which numbers of the constituents have, in a manner agreeable to law, carried up their complaints to the Throne against their representatives.

4. Because, by the said resolution, we do a most material injury to the House of Commons itself. The resolution, by the studied latitude of the words, directly or indireally to censure, puts it out of the power of the Lords to offer, either in the present, or in any future unfortunate difference between them and their constituents, even in the way of friendly conference, our amicable and healing mediation; the want of which may be a means of letting such difference run to extremities, fatal to the Houle of Commons itself, to the constitution, and to the nation.

5. Because, we consider ourselves also, as an House of Parliament, to be most materially interested, that the people should be legally and constitutionally represented; for as the House of Commons makes an essential part of Parliament, if that House should come to be chosen in a manner not agreeable to the laws and constitution of the kingdom, the authority of Parliament itself must suffer extremely, if not totally, perish; the Peers can no more, in their legislative capacity, do any valid act, without a ligal House of Commons, than without a legal Prince upon the Throne.

6. Because, by this resolution, the conflitutional control has been given up, which this Hoole, as appears by antient and recent macedents, have constantly daims and exercised; and for the purpose of which the legislature has been divided into separate brushe, We are far from denying fich $ reciprocity of controll in the out House, even in matters within ieparate and final jurishtim neither arrogating to ourleben acknowledging in others, power distinct from, or above m law of the land. But we cannot be bold, without the utmost sheet indignation, this House making voluntary surrender of Its undoubted, legal, necessary, and cred rights; not only omitting, refuling to examine precedent not previously desiring a conferm with the other House, to discon whether they were inclined wa mit in this House a correspond immunity from interpolitics their part, in matters within particular jurisdiction of the Part These proceedings are as design tory from the dignity of the as they are contrary to its day They cannot fail its interest. lowering this House in the opin of mankind, who will not been that the Peers can have any me tion to the welfare of the population when they have shewn so little to their own bonour. This refole must tend to forward that I which, with great uneafines have seen, for a long time. matically carried on for lowers constitutional powers of kingdom, rendering the Hugi Commons odious, and the Hop. Peers contemptible.

7. Because, the impropriety this resolution was infinitely #

21313

PPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. [197

by the fudden and formethod by which it was ato, and carried through e, That a refolution new , wide in extent, weighty ance, involved in law and stary precedents, should l at midnight, after the s spent with the fatigue of debate; that an adjournonly two days, to enable to confult the Journals aportant point, should be sod that an immediate ould be preffed, are cirs which firongly mark a of the movers upon the their own propolition. roceeding appears to us unparliamentary and anmaft, in every inflance is practifed, preclude all of debate; and when, by s, all argument and fair is suppressed, the delibethis House will degenelent votes. ak ourselves, therefore, and as Englishmen and (names as déar to us as whattoever) indispensably protest against a resoluy subversive of the authodignity of this House, jurious to the collective ie people, to their repreand to the Crown, to me eur advice upon every aergency ; a refolution, mostitutional; in preceily unauthorised, but conin tendency rainous; in ind manger of obtaining and furreptitions. And lemnly declare, and pleage the Public, that we will a acuting carrelives, as thes, of every right, and e, week which the confli-tution has armed as for the good of the aubole, in order to obtain full relief for the injured electors of Great-Britain, and full security, for the future, against this most dangerous usurpation upon the rights of the people; aubi. b, by supping the fuudamental principles of this government, threatens its total dissolution.

E. Temple
L. Fortescue,
L. Audley,
D. Bolton,
L. Craven
L. Wycombe, E. of Shelburne,

D. Portland,
D. Richmond
E. Radnor,
L. Chedworth,
L. Ponfonby, E.
L. Lyttelton,
Of Besborough,

E. Suffolk, E. Chatham,
E. Aylesford, L. Hyde,
B. Fitzwilliam, L. Monfon,
L. Trevor, E. Albemarle,

M. Rockingham, E. Scarborough,
E. Berkeley, E. Huntingdon,
E. Coventry, L. Abergavenny,
E. Stamford, L. Boyle, E. of
B. Bangor, Corke,

B. Bangor, Corke,
B. Exeter, E. Buckingham.
V. Torrington, Shire,

E. Tankerville, L. Milton,
E. Effingham, D. NorthumberL. Archer, land.

N. B. The same Lords signed the two Protests with the exception of the Earls of Suffolk and Bucking-hamshire, who signed only the first.

Die Martis, 1º Maii, 1770.

THE order of the day being read for the Lords to be furnmosed,

The Earl of Chatham prefented to the house a bill, intituled,

"A Ball for reverling the Adjudications or the House of Commons, whereby John Wirkes, Eig: bas been adjudged incapable of being [O] 3 elected elected a member to serve in this present parliament, and the freeholders of the county of Middlesex have been deprived of one of their legal representatives."

Whereas the capacity of being elected a representative of the commons in parliament is (under known limitations of law) an original inherent right of the subject; and forafmuch as to deprive the subject of this high franchise birthright, otherwise than by a judgment according to the law of the land, and the constant established usage of parliament conformable thereto, and part thereof, is directly contrary to the fundamental laws and freedom of this realm, and in particular to the act, "Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown, at the ever-memorable Period of the Revolution; when free election of members of parliament was expressly vindicated and secured:

And whereas John Wilkes, Esq; having been duly elected and returned a knight of the shire to serve in this present parliament for the county of Middlesex, was, on the 17th of February, 1769, without being heard, adjudged incapable of being elected a member, to serve in this present parliament, by a resolution of the House of Commons, as follows:

" Resolved, That John Wilkes, Elq; having been in this sellion of parliament expelled this Houle, was and is incapable of being elected a member to serve in this present parliament."

And whereas on the same day the faid House of Commons farther resolved as follows: "That the late Election of a knight of the shire to serve in this present parliament for the county of Middlesex is a void election :?"

And whereas the said John Wilkes, Biq; haying been again duly elected and returned a knight of the shire to serve in this present parliament for the county of Middlefex, the faid House of Common did, on the 17th of March, 1769, resolve in the words following, "That the election and return of John Wilkes, Ríq; who hath been by this House adjudged incapable of being elected a member to ferve in this present parliament, are sall and void:"

And whereas the faid Jobs Wilkes, Efq; having been again duly elected and returned a knight of the shire to serve in this present parliament for the county of Middlesex asoresaid, and having on the original poll books, eleven hundred and forty-three votes in his favour, against two hundred and ninety-fix, in favour of Henry Lawes Lutrell, Eig; the House of Commons did, on the 15th of April, 1769, without a hearing of parties, and in manifest violation of the indubitable right of the freeholders of the county of Middlesex to chuse their own representatives in parliament, reloive as follows:

" That Henry Lawes Luttrell, Esq: ought to have been returned a knight of the shire to serve in this prefent parliament for the county of Middlesex, and thereupon ordered the faid return to be amended accordingly:"

And whereas, by another refolution of the 8th of May, 1769, the faid H. of C. did, apon bearing the matter of the petition of the freeholders of the county of Middlesex, as far as the fame related to the election of Henry Lawes Luttrell, Esq; farther resolve as soilows:

PPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. [199

Henry Lawes Luttrell, elected a knight of the we in this prefent parthe county of Middleafmuch as all the refoelaid, entting off the his indubitable birthvote of one house of exercising discretionted legislative authorislow of a jurisdiction, are most arbitrary, iltagerous:

Eing's most excellent and with the advice and he Lords spiritual and and Commons, in this ament assembled, and of the same, That all tions contained in the med several resolutions and illegal, and the d shall be hereby relied, and made void, and purposes whatsofirst reading of the faid moved, That the faid the fecond time on tt. Which being obter a long debate, the put thereupon. It in the negative by 89 vas moved, That the ejected. The quenion supon, and it was reaffirmative.

e foundations of this fully laid in the read in two protefts enbe Journals of this 2d day of Febuary ink it indifpensably protest against the rejection of the fame, to the intent that it may be delivered down to posterity, that this great conflicutional and effectual method of remedying an unexampled grievance hath not been left unattempted by us; and that, to our own times, we may find as men determined to perfevere in renewing, on every occasion, our numost endeavours to obtain that redrefs, for the violated rights of the subject, and for the injored electors of Great Britain, which, in the prefent moment, an over-ruling futality hath prevented from taking effect; thereby refuting reparation and comfort to an opprefied and afflicted people.

Chatham, Portland, Plymouth, Rockingham, Abingdon, Boyle, Grofonnor, Stanbope, Ponfenby, Suffolk, Richmond, Radnor, Archer, Fitzwelliam, Temple, Torrington, Rusland, John Bangor, Wycombe, Fortefene, Huntingdon, Tankerwille, Abergawenny, King, Ferrors, Lyttelson, Bolton, Camden, Goventry, Buckinghamshire, Scarborough, Northumberland, Manchester.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The bumble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayer, Aldermen, and Livery of the City of London, in Common-ball affembled.

(Prefented at St. James's, on Wednefday, the 14th of March, 1770.)

May it please your Majesty,

WB have already in our petition, dutifully reprefented to your Majefty the chief injuries we have fostained; we are [O] 4 unwilling unwilling to believe, that your Majesty can slight the desires of your people, or be regardless of their affection, and deaf to their complaints. Yet their complaints remain unanswered, their injuries are confirmed; and the only judge removeable at the pleasure of the Crown, has been dismissed from his high office, for defending in parliament the laws and the con-Aitution.

200] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

"We therefore venture once more to address ourselves to your Majesty, as to the father of your people; as to him who must be both able and willing to redress our grievances; and we repeat our application with the greater propriety, because we see the instruments of our wrongs, who have carried into execution the measures of which we complain, more particularly distinguished by your Majesty's royal bounty and favour.

" Under the same secret and malign influence, which, through each successive administration, has defeated every good, and suggested every bad intention, the majority of the House of Commons have deprived your people of their dearest rights.

"They have done a deed more ruinous in its consequences than the levying of ship-money by Charles the First, or the dispensing power assumed by James the Second. A deed, which must vitiate all the future proceedings of this parliament; for the acts of the Legislature itself can no more be valid without a legal House of Commons, than without a legal prince upon the throne.

" Representatives of the people are essential to the making of laws; and there is a time, when it is morally demonstrable that men cease to be representatives That time is now arrived. The prefent House of Commons do sot represent the people.

"We owe to your Majety m obedience, under the rearrition of the Laws, for the calling and deration of parliaments. And your Majesty owes to us, that our representation, free from the force of arms or corruption, should be preserved to us in Parliament. It was for this we successfully struggled under James the Second; for this we seated, and have faithfully supported your Majesty's family on the The people have been invariably uniform in their object, though the different mode of attack has called for a different defence.

" Under James the Second they complained, that the fitting of Parliament was interrupted, because it was not corruptly subtervient to his designs: We complain now, that the fitting of this Parliament is not interrupted, because it is corruptly subservient to the defigns of your Majesty's ministers. Had the parliament under james the Second been as submissive to his commands, as the Parliament is at this day to the dictates of a minister, instead of clamours for its meeting, the nation would have rung, as now, with outcries for its dissolution.

" The forms of the constitution. like those of religion, were not established for the sorm's sake; but for the substance. And we call God and Men to witness, that as we do not owe our Liberty to those nice and subtle distinctions which Places, Pentions, and lucrative employments have invented; so neither will we be deprived of it by

them 1

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. [201

set as it was gained by the rene of our ancestors, by tue of their descendants in preferved.

nce therefore the mildeeds Majesty's ministers in viohe freedom of election, and ng the noble conflitution of ienta, que notorious, as weji erfive of the fundamental d liberties of this realm: oe your Majetty, both in and juttice, is obliged into preferve them, accord. the oath made to God and bjects at your coronation: er Majefty's remonstrants, erfelves, that your Majelly Rore the conflitutional goat and quiet of your people, lving this Parliament, and g those evil ministers for m your councils.

Signed by order, nes Hodges, Town Clerk."

ich Address, Remonstrance, Petition, bis Majesty was d to return the following er.

half always be ready to ree requests, and to listen to plaints of my subjects: but me great concern to find of them should have been to d, as to offer me an Address cannot but consider as disl to me, injurious to my ent, and irreconcileable to ciples of the constitution.

the rule of my conduct, g it my chief glory to er a free people. With I have always been carevell to execute faithfully the trust reposed in me, as to avoid even the appearance of invading any of those powers which the conflictation has placed in other hands. It is only by persevering in such a conduct, that I can either discharge my own duty, or secure to my subjects the free enjoyment of those rights which my family were called to defend: and while I act upon these principles, I shall have a right to expect, and I am consident I shall continue to receive, the steady and affectionate support of my people.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Address, Remanstrance, and Petition, of the Lord Maybe, Aldermen, and Common-council of the City of London.

(Presented on Wednesday, May 23d.)

May it please your Majesty, WHEN your Majesty's most faithful subjects, the citizens of London, whose loyalty and affection have been fo often and to effectually proved and experienced by the illustrious house of Brunfwick, are labouring under the weight of that displeasure which your Majetty has been advifed to lay upon them, in the answer given from the throne to their late humble application, we feel ourselves constrained with all humility to approach the Royal Father of his people.

Confcious, Sire, of the pureft fentiments of veneration which they entertain for your Majesty's person, we are deeply concerned that what the law allows, and the constitution teaches, hath been milcon-

misconfirmed by Ministers, instruments of that influence which shakes the realm, into disrespect to your Majesty.

Perplexed and aftonished as we are, by the awful fentence of censure lately past upon this city in your Majefty's answer from the throne; we cannot, without furrendering all that is dear to Englishmen, torbear most humbly to supplicate, that your Majesty will deign to grant a more favourable interpretation to this dutiful, though perfevering claim of our invaded birthrights; nothing doubting that the benignity of your Majesty's nature will, to our unspeakable comfort, at length break through all the secret and visible machinations to which the city of London owes its late severe repulse; and that your kingly justice, and fatherly tendernets, will disclaim the malignant and pernicious advice which fuggested the aniwer we deplore: an advice of the most dangerous tendency; inasmuch as thereby the exercise of the clearest rights of the subject, namely, to petition the King for redress of grievances, to complain of the violation of the freedom of election, and to pray for a dissolution of Parliament, to point out mal-practices in adminiltration, and to urge the removal of evil ministers, hath, under the generality of one compendious eword, been indifcriminately checked with reprimand; and your Majesty's afflicted citizens of London have heard, from the throne itself, that the contents of their humble Address, Reconft. ance, and Petition, laying their complaints and injuries at the feet of their Sovetelio, as faiber of bis people, able and willing to redress their grienances, cannot but be confidered by your Majesty, as disrespectful to yourfelf, injurious to your Parliament, and irreconcileable to the principles of the conflitution."

Your Majesty cannot disapprove, that we bere affert the cleans principles of the confitution, against the insidious attempts of evil counsellors to perplex, confound, and foaks them. We are determined to abide by those rights and liberties, which our forefathers bravely vindicated, at the ever-memorable Revolution, and which their fons will ever refolately detend. We therefore now renew. at the foot of the throne, our claim to the indispensible right of the sobject, ---- a full, free, and assestilated Parliament, legally chosen in all its members; ---- a right which THIS house of Parliament have manifestly violated, depriving a their will and pleafure, the county of Middlesex of one of its legal representatives, and arbitrarily =minating, as a Knight of the shire, a person not elected by a majority of the freebolders. As the only constitutional means of reparation now left for the injured electors of Great Britain, we implore, with most urgent supplications, the offolution of this present parliament, the removal of evil Ministers, and the total extinction of that satal influence, which has caused such mational discontent.

In the mean time, Sire, we offer our constant prayers to Heaven, that your Majesty may reign, as Kings only can reign, in and by the hearts of a loyal, dutiful, and free people,

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

e Majesty's Arswer. fould have been wanting e public as well as to myif I had not expressed my isfaction at the late ad-y featiments on that subject and the fame: and I should ferve to be confidered as the r of my people, if I could · myfelf to be prevailed upn make fuch an use of my egative, as I cannot but inconfident with the inteand dangerous to the conion of the kingdom."

r his Majesty had been to make the foregoing , the Lord Mayor requested o reply, which being grant-Lordship addressed him in lowing words : .

l gracious Sovereign, ILL your Majesty be pleafed to fur to condescend, as nit the Mayor of your loyal London to declare in your prefence, on behalf of his citizens, how much the bare ention of your Majesty's fare would, at all times, heir minds; the declaration : displeasure has already filem with inexprefible anxiad with the deepest afflicermit me, Sire, to affure Majefty, that your Majesty t in all your dominious any s more faithful, more dutimore affectionate to your y's person and family, or ready to facrifice their lives stance in the maintenance true honour and dignity of F-Wille

"We do, therefore, with the greatest humility and submission, most carnestly supplicate your Majefty, that you will not difmis us from your prefence without expresfing a more favourable opinion of your faithful citizens, and without fome comfort, without fome prefpett, at least, of redrefs.

" Permit me, Sire, further to observe, that whoever has already dared, or shall hereafter endeayour by falle infinuations and fuggestions, to alienate your Majesty's affections from your loyal subjects in general, and from the city of London in particular, and to withdraw your confidence to and regard for your people, is an enemy to your Majesty's person and family, a violator of the public peace, and a betrayer of our bappy constitution as it was established at the glerious and sece∬ary Revolution."—

The Lord Mayor waited near a minute for a reply, but some was given.

To the Right Honouvable the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

London, Oct. 26.

My Lords,

Am under the necessity of sepresenting to your Lordships. that a measure, very injurious to the inhabitants of this city, as well as derogatory of the authority of its laws, and of its Magistracy, hath lately been taken, under the fanction of your Lordship's authority-I mean, that of granting to citizens, carrying on the feveral branches of butiness, protections from the Admiralty, for the mea employed by them, provided they are not seamen; to obtain which protections, protections, the citizens are at the trouble of reforting to the Admiralty-Office, at much loss of time, and are befides obliged to pay a guinea for each protection.

I am fure that no fuch idea can be entertained by your Lordships, as that any protection, besides that of the laws, is necessary to secure persons employed in the manufactures and commerce of this city. I beg leave, therefore, to submit to your Lordships, that this mode of protection be defisted from; and whether it may not tend to the more quiet and effectual carrying on the public service, it the naval officers, employed to inpress men, be enjoined by your Lordships to pay due regard to certificates, attested by the Magistraces of the city, in favour of persons (not seamen] employed by the inhabitants in their respective business, and described in the manner required by your Lordships' protections. have the honour to be, with great respect,

My Lords,
Your Lor ships most obedient humble servant,
BARLOW TRECOTHICK,
Mayor.

To the Right Honourable the Lord-Mayor of the City of London.

Admiralty-Office, Oft. 26.

Thip's letter of this day's date, repretenting, that a measure, very injurious to the inhabitants of this city, as well as derogatory of the authority of its laws, and of its Magistracy, hath lately been taken under the sanction of our authority, viz. That of granting to citizens, carrying on the several branches of business, protections from this office, for the persons employed by them, and submitting, whether this mode of protection may not be deliked from, and whether it may not tend to the more quiet and effectual carrying on the public service, if the naval officers employed therein, be enjoined by us to pay due regard to certificates attested by the Magistrates of the city, in favour of perions (not feamen) employed by the inhabitants, and described in the manner required by our protections.

We are to acquaint your Lordship, that application being made to us for protections for perions under the description above-mentioned, they were at first refused, and those who solicited them told, they were unnecessary, the officers employed on the service of raising men being restrained from impresfing landmen; but several persons in great branches of butiness repeating their folicitations, and afferting that their nien, from the apprehensions of being impressed, could not be prevailed upon to follow their work, we did therefore, in order to remove such apprehensions, which, bowever, groundless, might prove prejudicial to them in their bufiness, at length comply with their request; but, in regard to your Lordship's representation, we shall for the future defit from granting any fuch protections.

We are further to observe to your Lordship, that the warrants issued by us to the officers employed in procuring men for his Majesty's fleet, do not authorize them to impress any but seamen, seafaring-men, and persons whose occupations

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. 205

and callings are to work s and boats upon rivers; : the infructions accomthose warrants expressly them from impressing dman: and we affure rdfhip, that in case any all prefume to exceed the granted him by fuch warr disobey the orders conhim by fach instructions, be exemplarily punished, porties injured have rearedress. Under these cires, therefore, it feems ury for us to give fuch particular inftructions with to the certificates your propofes; and indeed we id such certificates, would nature be a mode of prowhich we are not authorizre any fanction to.

re, my Lord, your Lordoft humble fervants,

Py.) E. HAWER, C. Spencer, C. J. Pox.

the Letter transmitted yesterthe Lords of the Admiralty Right Hon. the Lord Mayor.

alty-Office, 20 Nov. 1770. ord,

E city remembrancer havig attended Sir Edward with a copy of the refoif a common-council, held inth at Guildhall, offeronty for the encouraging to enter into his Majetty's ce; and fignified the rethe faid Court, that Sir Hawke would, at a proper sity, lay the same before esty, as an humble testif their zeal and affection for his most facred person and government: and Sir Edward being prevented by illness from attending the King therewith, he transmitted a copy of it to Lord Weymouth, one of the principal Secretaries of State, for his Majesty's information: and his Lordship having this day acquainted us, that he took the earliest opportunity of laying the faid refolution before the King, and that his Majesty was pleafed to express great fatisfaction upon receiving this mark of zeal and affection for his person. and government; we fignify the fame to your Lordship; and are, my Lord,

Your Lordship's Most humble servants.

Rt. Hon. Brain J. Buller, Croiby, Eiq; Palmerstone,
Lord Mayor C. Spencer, of London. Lisburne,

Wednesday, Nov. 21, 1770.

F. HOLBURNE.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

The humble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord-Mayer, Aldermen, and Commons of the City of London, in Common-Council assembled.

W E the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and Commons of the city of London, in common-council affembled, most humbly beg leave to approach your Majetty, and most dutifully to lay again at the foot of the throne curaggravated grievances, and earnest supplications: although, through prevalence of east countellors, our just complaints have hitherto met with repulse and reprimand, nevertheles we will not forego the last consolation of the unhappy, hope, that our sufferings will at length find an end, from the innate goodness of your Majesty; the gracious effects of which have, to our unspeakable grief, been intercepted from your injured people, by a fatal conspiracy of malevolent insuence around the throne.

206] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

We, therefore, again implore your Majesty in this sad criss, with hearts big with sorrow, and warm with affection, not to be induced by sale suggistions, contrary to the benignity of your Royal nature, to shut up your paternal compassion and justice against the prayers of unhappy subjects, claiming, as we now again presume to do, with equal humility and free-born plainness, our indisputable birth-rights, freedom of election, and right of petitioning.

We have seen the known law of the land, the sure guardian of right, trodden down; and, by the influence of daring ministers, arbitrary discretion, the law of tyrants, set up to overth: ow the choice of the electors, and nominate to a seat in parliament, a person not chosen by the people.

Your majesty's throne is sounded on the free exercise of this great election;—to preserve it inviolate, is true loyalty;—to undermine and destroy it, is the most compendious treason against the whole constitution.

Deign then, Sire, amidst the complicated dangers which surround us, to restore satisfaction and harmony to your faithful subjects, by removing from your Majesty's presence all evil counsellors, and by recurring to the recent sense of your people taken in a new parliament.

By such an exertion alone of your own royal wisdom and virtue; the various wounds of the consistation can be effectually healed; and, by representatives freely chosen, and acting independently, the falutary awe of parliament cannot fail to secure to us that sacred bulwark of English liberty, the trial by jury, against the dangerous designs of those who have dared openly to attempt to mutilate its powers, and destroy its esseat.

' So will distatisfaction, and national weakness, change at once into public confidence, order, strength, and dignity; and this boafed constitution of England, so late the envy of nations, no longer be held forth to the derifion of Europe, electors not suffered to elect, juries forbid to judge of the whole matter in issue before them, and detiful petitioners, remonstrating the most flagrant grievances, brasded by the ministers who oppress them, as seditions infractors of that constitution which we religiously revere, and, together with your majesty's sacred person, will uncer! fingly defend against all enemies and betrayers."

His Majesty's Auswer.

As I have no reason to alter the opinion, expressed in my answer to your last address upon this subject, I cannot comply with the prayer of your petition.

Account of the Proceedings at the County Meeting at York, in a Letter from a Gentleman profest.

from York, yet, as a friend to liberty and the conflitution, I

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

the county meeting adverthe 25th inft. About noon ge Armitage was requelled the chair. After expreffeate of the honour cona him, and giving afterthe exertion of his abilities ufiness for which they were d, he told them he would I their late petition, and e an account of its recepich was nothing more than : King received it with a

G. Saville then rose up, e a very brief account of d been done in the house, to remedy the grievances complained of, but faid to countenance a remon-

George Armitage, (withig the lenfe of the freeholdcerning a remonstrance,) leave to read a paper, conthanks to their worthy retives for their conduct in est, the last fession.

e next (peaker at this meet-Charles Turner, Efq. He is the least disapprove what ge Armitage had proposed, ght if this was all they inby salling the freeholders ,-if they took no notice contempt of their dutiful al petition to the throne, the freeholders would be disappointed; that they e the laugh of the ministry; y thould be thought to fore cause in which they had ed; and therefore proposed ional remonstrance, in supwhich he was very warm, endly opinion of him.

" It was then agreed, that the letter of thanks should be first voted; -and then the fense of the freeholders taken concerning a remonstrance. The letter of thanks was affented to without one diffenting voice.

" Mr. Turner had proposed a committee, with whom was to be trufted the whole affair; this was the next subject of consideration. Sir George Armitage then proclaimed aloud, ' all who are for " the committee bold up their band, * ail who are against the committee " bold up their hand likewife." This cauling some confusion, a division was agreed upon, and those who were not freeholders were requested to leave the room for a few minutes. -Against the committee a great majority.

" Lord John Cavendish was, I think, the next speaker; he recommended lenient and gentle measures, as the most probable method of having all their complaints redressed, when his Majesty perceived they did not oppose the measures of government for the fake of opposition, but in desence of their own privileges, when violated and infringed.

" After some triffing sitercation, it was next proposed by (if f am not mistaken) Sir Cecil Wray, that the fenfe of the freeholders should be taken concerning a remonstrance; when it was observed by Lord J. Cavendish, that, in the letter already affeated to, they had expressly declared they forbore to reiterate their complaint before the throne, and that they now were, in direct contradiction to themke to the fatisfaction of felves, going to reiterate. Accordrho, before, had not the ingly ail was quashed, and Sie George Armitage left the chair."

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770 208]

The following is the Letter of Thanks to the Knights of the Shire above alluded to.

To Sir George Saville, Bart. and Edwin Lascelles, E/q.

York, Sept. 25, 1770.

Gentlemen.

 TX7E the freeholders of the VV county of York, assembled here, defire to express our Tentiments to you on the prelent dangerous fituation of affairs.

In prefenting a petition to the throne, we acted from the strongest conviction, that it was our duty to represent to his Majesty how sewerely we thought the rights of all the electors of Great Britain struck at by that resolution which nominated a representative to a county, in opposition to the votes of a majority of the freehelders.

"We had reason to hope, that an application, so full of affectionate loyalty to our fovereign, and prefented in a mode to agreeable to the principles of the constitution, would have met with a Favourable reception. But we neither can nor will impute its failure to any other cause, than the arts and management of those, who have no other means of justifying their own misconduct to their sovereign, than by missepresenting the defires and affections of a loyal people.

44 Hopeless of success from a reiterated petition, whilst the same influence prevails, we forbear to make a further application to the throne; being confident that the former will remain an authentic sestimony of our unalterable sentiments, which, by every justifiable method, we are determined to support; and we doubt not, that, by a steady perseverance in t ciples, the electors of (tain must finally obtain their violated rights.

"Your conduct, gentle justly merited the thanks constituents; and we has tisfaction to declare, thi tirely approve all that done and faid in support liberties.—By the explici and determined part y taken, during the last 1 parliament, the sentiment whose interest is intrusted care, have been most fait prefied.

" It is not, therefore, nish or instruct, but to out as examples to ani encourage others, that we press our sense of the firm vigilance of your conduct times of new and dange trines; when not only re the violation of the righ tion hath not been obta every attempt to fecure 1 from future violations h evaded.

" It is become but too that neither the most saci of the people, nor the the crown, have been (their care whole station them more peculiarly r for a strict attention to bo

"The public welfare, mands, that those who s to guard its interest, sh ploy their utmost attentiquire into the causes of the ral dissatissaction which p the minds of a free, a and a loyal people; ar there be found any just o national selentment, we t neither ministerial power

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE. [209

eat, nor retirement from the minds of his Majefals may be united in a smillion to legal authoral fleady relistance to the rights ople may be fecured by and prudence of their rives, the natural guarmole rights, is the fervent tery friend of the conflid you may be affured, unlist of those objects, ways be supported by olders of the county of

of the meeting, ARMITAGE, Chairman."

mebolders of the County of imbled September 25, at

VING had the honour of receiving, by the hands of the Armitage, a commuty your featiments, I begine first place to return rateful acknowledgment arts of it as regard my-always thought myfelf in the opportunities of knowing from time to ntiments of my conftituels to meet on those it has been my partituels to meet on those ith their approbation, deed, no longer serve fatisfaction to my own I had reason to believe almost coincided with air in essential and functions.

predion it has made on my mind, and the variety of matter contained in the paper transmitted to me, oblige me to extend my answer beyond the length that is usual or necessary in mere returns of compliment, or in answers on more ordinary occasions.

" It is impossible for me not to lament with you, that any unhappy interpolition of interelled men between a gracious fovereig, and his people, should make it eligible to forbear a fecond application; hoping and trusting at the same time that your confidence is well founded. I do hold it to be impossible. while one grain of purity or vigour remains in the conflitution, that principles and doctrines directly subversive of it, can take root and flourish, nay, that they can even exist with any continuance. I am tempted for far to go beyond the limit of what is more effentially a necessary part of my answer, as to express the satisfaction it affords me to observe, that while you decline a measure, which to many might naturally feem more directly tending to redrefs, you have taken effectual care plainly to draw the line, and firongly to mark the distinction (that distinction so essential in Questions of Right) between forbearance and acquiercence.

I accept with a pride, which I will acknowledge and avow every where, the teltimony you bear to the little I can have done, in the profecution of my duty; and I wish you to be affured, that I will perfevere, not only in afferting, but in maintaining to the utuselt of my power, those principles you have approved, the principles of the continuion; and more especially that first right, the right of election, under which alone my office [7] exists, and without which even the two characters in which we are now conversing, the represented and the representative, are mere illusory fictions.

" I desire likewise to assure you, that I will omit no opportunity of fulfilling that particular duty, which the present occasion has called upon you to remind me of; I mean the searching out the causes of public distatisfaction, and the objects of a just public resentment; trusting to your candour, if the fuccess does not answer to the warm expectations of many honest men, and the ardent wishes of all. have more than once over-rated my abilities to serve you; I wish I had not reason to fear, that in this inflance you experience a striking example of it.

"It is my first duty to join in your wish, that due order and submission, as well as a resolute adherence to the rights of freemen, may prevail. It is the most perfect felf-interest, and the highest ambition to join with you in the other, that I may be in any degree the fortunate instrument in preserving those rights.

"I beg leave to subscribe myself, Gentlemen, Your much obliged, and faithful humble servant, GEORGE SAVILLE."

To the Freeholders affembled at York, on the 25th of September, 1770. Gentlemen.

T is scarce possible for words to express the lively sense of gratitude I feel, for the very favourable opinion you are pleased to entertain of my public conduct.

"It has always been my greatof ambition to gain the approbation of gentlemen of your characters. If I have been so fortunate as to succeed, I must think I an more indebted to your partial opinions, than to any real or subfluetial merit of my own.

" I know it would be vain and impertinent to expect any future favours from you, was I ever to betray the trust, you have condescended to honour me with.

" I flatter myself, whilst I petferve my independency, and an not actuated with views of ambition, avarice, and luft of power, you will have no cause to withdraw your usual indulgence from mc.

" I have ever confidered the very unfortunate decision of the rights of the freeholders of Middlesex, as highly detrimental w those of all the electors of Great Britain; therefore, shall steadily persevere to contribute all in my power to obtain redress of those violated rights.

"I most heartily concur with you, gentlemen, in all your constitutional wishes. My greatest ambition is, to render myself worthy of your choice, which I know can only be effected by supporting the fundamental principles of our constitution, and the undoubted birthright of our fellow-subjects. When you find me deficient in those grand points, I defire to enjoy no longer the honourable station of being one of your representatives; but, until that event happens, the only favour I now alk of you, is, to give me credit for my unskaken loyalty to our most gracious sovereign, my esteem and regard for the interest of our fellow-subjects, and my implicit veneration for our most excellent constitution.

ee I bave

One

"I have the honour to be, with the most sincere esteem and regard, Gentlemen,

Your most obliged, an l most faithful humble servant, EDWIN LASCELLES." Guldesborough, Sept. 28.

The unbappy Riot at Boston has been to variously represented, and is in itself of so interesting a Nature, that we think it necessary to lay the different Accounts of it before our Readers.

Boston, March 12.

On the evening of Monday, being the 5th current, several soldiers of the 29th regiment were seen parading the streets with their drawn cuttasses and bayonets, abuing and wounding numbers of the inhabitants.

" A few minutes after nine o'clock, four youths, named Edward Archbald, William Merchant, Francis Archibald, and John Leech, Jan. came down Cornhill together, and separating at Dr. Loring's corner, the two former, in passing a narrow alley, where a soldier was brandishing a broad sword, of an encommon fize, against the walls, out of which he struck fire plentifally, and a person of a mean countenance, armed with a large cudgel, by him, Edward Archbald bid Mr. Merchant take care of the fword, on which the foldier turned round, aruck Archibald on the arm, and then pushest at Merchant. Merchant then Rruck the soldier with a Short Rick, and the other person ran to the barrack, and brought with him two foldiers, one armed with a pair of tongs, the other with a shovel; he with the tongs purfued Archbald back through the alley, collared and laid him over the head with the tongs. The noise brought people together, and John Hicks, a young lad, coming up, knocked the foldier down, but let him get up again; and more lads gathering, drove them back to the barrack, where the boys stood some time a, it were to keep them in. In less than a minute ten or twelve foldiers came out, with drawn cutlasses, clubs, and bayonets, and let upon the unarmed boys, who, finding the inequality of their equipment, difpersed. On hearing the noise, one Samuel Atwood came up to see what was the matter, and met the foldiers aforefaid ruthing down the alley, and asked them if they intended to murder people? they answered, Yes, by G-d, root and branch! with that one of them thruck Mr. Atwood with a clab, which was repeated by another, and, being unarmed, he turned to go off, and received a wound on the left shoulder, which reached the bone. Retreating a few steps, Mr. Atwood met two officers, and faid, Gentlemen, what is the matter? they answered, you'll see by and Immediately after, there heroes appeared in the square, asking where were the boogers? where were the cowards? thirty or forty persons, mostly lads, being by this gathered in King-street, Capt. Presson, with a party of men with charged bayonets, came from the main-guard, and taking their stations by the Cultom-house, hegan to push and drive the people off, pricking some, and threatening others; on which the people grew clamerous, and, it is faud, threw suow-balls. On this the captain commanded his men to fire, and more inow-balls coming, he again said, d-n you, fire, be the consequence what it will!-

 $[P]_2$

One soldier then fired, and a townsman, with a cudgel struck him over the hands with such force that he dropt his firelock, and, rushing forward, simed a blow at the captain's head, which grazed his hat, and sell pretty heavy upon his arm: however, the soldiers continued the fire, successively, till seven or eight, or, as some say, eleven guns were discharged.

By this fatal manœuvre, several were laid dead on the spot, and some lay struggling for life; but what shewed a degree of cruelty unknown to British troops, at least since the house of Hanover has directed their operations, was an attempt to fire upon, or stab with their bayonets, the persons who undertook to remove the slain and wounded! At length,

"Mr. Benjamin Leigh, of the Delph Manufactory, came up, and after some convertation with Capt. Preston, relative to his conduct, advised him to draw off his men; with which he complied.

"The dead are, Mr. Samuel Gray, killed on the spot, the ball entering his head and beating off a large portion of his skull.

A mulatto man, named Crifpus Attucks born in Framingham, who was here in order to go for North Carolina, also killed instantly: two balls entering his breatt, one of them in special goring the 1 ght lobe of the lungs, and a great part of the liver most horribly.

of Capt. Morton's vessel, in like manner killed by two balls entering his back.

" Mr. Samuel Maverick, a promising youth of seventeen years of age, son of the widow Maverick, mortally wounded; a ball through his belly, and was coat his back: he died the next to

ing.

"A lad, named Christ Monk, about seventeen yea age, apprentice to Mr. W. shipwright, wounded; a bal tered his back about four above the lest kidney, nea spine, and was cut out of the on the same side; apprehend will die.

- about seventeen years of age, parents live at Medford, won a ball entered just below his and came out at his hip, so opposite side; apprehended lie.
- or, Mr. Edward Payne, town, Merchant, standing entry door, received a ball arm, which shattered some bones.
- "Mr. John Green, taylor ing up Leverett's-lane, reconstant ball just under his hip, and in the under part of his which was extracted.
- "Mr. Robert Patterson, faring man, wounded; a be through his right arm, and fered great loss of blood.
- "Mr. Patrick Carr, at years of age, who worke Mr. Field, leather breeches in Queen-street, wounded entered near his hip and at his side.
- "A lad named David an apprentice to Mr. E wheelwright, wounded; a tered his thigh.
- "The people were ima alarmed with the report horrid massacre, the belts a ringing, and great numl at the place where this ene had been acted; their asy be better conceived reffed; and while some ng care of the dead and the reft were in confulit to do in those dreadful But so little intiwere they, notwithstandbeing within a few yards singuard, and feeing the iment under arms, and in King-street, that they r flation, and appeared, icer of rank expressed it, un upon the very muzzles jufkets. The Lieut. Goon came into the Townd there met some of his council, and a number of giftrates; a confiderable the people immediately the council-chamber, and themfelves to his honour freedom and warmth behe occasion. He used his ideavours to pacify them, that they would let the blide for the night, and to do all in his power e should be done, and the its course; men of inad weight with the people wanting on their part to their compliance, by reg the horrible consequence sifeuous and rath engagethe night. The inhabiinded to thele luggestions, egiment under arms being to their barracks, they and returned to their s by one o'clock. At three Captain Preston was comprison, as were the foldiers l, a few hours after him. siday morning prefented a cking scene, the blood of our fellow-citizens running like water through King-street, and the Merchants Exchange, the principal spot of the military parade for about 18 months past. Our blood might also be tracked up to the head of Long Lane, and through divers other streets and passages.

At eleven o'clock the inhabitants met at Faneuil-hall, and after fome animated speeches they chose a committee of fifteen respectable gentlemen to wait upon the Lieut. Governor in council, to request of him to issue his orders for the immediate removal of the troops.

That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that the inhabitants and foldiery can no longer live together in fatety; that nothing can rationally be expected to reliore the peace of the town, and prevent turther blood and carnage, but the immediate removal of the troops: and that we therefore most fervently pray his honour, that his power and influence may be exerted for their inflant removal."

His Honour's Reply. Gentlemen.

" I am extremely forry for the unhappy differences between the inhabitants and troops, and elpecially for the action of the laft evening, and I have exerted myfeif upon that occasion that a due enquiry may be made, and that the law may have its course. I have in council confulted with the commanding officers of the two regiments who are in the town. They have their orders from the General at New-York. It is not in my power to countermand those orders. The council have defired that the two regiments may be removed to the cattle. From the particular con- $[P]_3$ CCLU gern which the 29th regiment has had in your differences, Colonel Dairymple, who is the commanding Officer of the Troops, has fignified that that regiment shall, without delay, be placed in the barracks at the Castle, until he can send to the General and receive his further orders concerning both the regiments, and that the mainguard shall be removed, and the 14th regiment to disposed and laid under fuch restraint, that all occasion of future disturbances may be prevented."

The foregoing Reply having been read and fully confidered—the question was put, Whether the report be satisfactory? Passed in the negative (only one dissentient) out of upwards of 4000 voters.

" It was then moved, that John Hancock, Efq; Mr. Samuel Adams, Mr. Williani Molineux, William Phillips, Esq; Dr. Joseph Warren, Johna Henshaw, Esq; and Samuel Pemberson, Elq; be a Committee to wait on his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, and inform him, that the Reply made to the Vote of the inhabitants is by no means satisfactory; and that nothing less will fatisfy, than a total and immediate removal of all the troops.

"The Committee having waited upon the Lieutenant Governor, his Honour laid before the Board a vote of the town of Boston, pailed this afternoon, and then addiested the Board as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Council,

"I lay before you a vote of the town of Bolton, which I have just now received from them, and I now ask your advice, what you judge necessary to be done upon iş."

"The Council thereupon exprefied themselves to be anaximusly of opinion, " that it was absolutely necessary for his Majesty's service, the good order of the town, and the peace of the province, that the troops should be immediately removed out of the town of Bollou; with which opinion Colonel Dalrymple gave his word of Honor that he would acquiesce."

Upon the above report, the inhabitants expressed the highest 4tisfaction; and after measures were taken for the security of the town

the meeting was dissolved.

A most solemn processon was made through Boston at the fuseral of the four murdered youts, On this occasion all the shops were thut up, all the bells in the town were ordered to toli, as were those in the neighbouring towns, and the bodies that moved from different quarters of the town, met at the fatal place of action, and were carried together through the main streets, followed by the greatex concourse of people ever known, all tellifying the most sensible grief, to a vault provided for them in the middle of the great buryingground.

From the time of this fatal tragedy, a military guard of town militia has been constantly kept in the Town-house and Town-prison, at which some of the most respectable citizens have done duty as common soldiers.

consequence of this affair, the inhabitants of Roxburgh petitioned the Lieutenant Governor Hutchinson to remove the troops from Boston; and received for answer, That be bad no authority to order the King's troops from any place wbers

8

they are posted by his Majesty's at the same time he aced them with what had been with the concurrence of the ading officer.

Captain Thomas Preston of the 29th regiment.

s matter of too great notoriety need any proofs, that the arof his Majesty's troops in was extremely obnoxious to habitants. They have ever in the regiments, and to bring into contempt, by promoting iding defertions, and with im-, even where there has been careft evidence of the fact, g grossly and falfely propag entruths concerning them. e arrival of the 64th and 65th, ardoor feemingly began to ; it being too extensive to de fo many; and attempts of tind rendered too dangerous the numbers. But the fame revived immediately on its known that those regiments ordered for Halifax, and wer fince their departure been ing out with greater violence. their embarkation, one of Justices, thoroughly acted with the people and their ions, on the trial of the 14th ent, openly and publickly, in earing of great numbers of e, and from the feat of e, declared, " that the foldiers now take care of themselves, wh too much to their arms, for were but a handful; that the itants carried weapons contunder their cloaths, and destroy them in a moment, if they pleased." This, considering the malicious temper of the people, was an alarming circumflance to the foldiery. Since which feveral disputes have happened between the towns people and foldiers of both regiments, the former being encouraged thereto by the countenance of even some of the Magifirates, and by the protection of all the party against Government. In general fuch disputes have been kept too lecret from the Officers. On the 2d inflant; two of the 20th going through one Gray's ropewalk, the rope-makers infultingly asked them if they would empty a vault. This unfortunately had the defired effect by provoking the foldiers, and from words they went to blows. Both parties suffered in this affray, and finally the foldiers retired to their quarters. The Officers, on the first knowledge of this transaction, took every precaution in their power to prevent any ill confequences. Notwithstanding which, fingle quarrels could not be prevented; the inhabitants conflantly provoking and abusing the foldiery. The infolence, as well as utter hatred of the inhabitants to the troops, increased daily; infomuch, that Monday and Tuefday, the 5th and 6th instant, were privately agreed on for a general engagement; in confequence of which feveral of the militia came from the country, armed, to join their friends, menacing to deftroy any who flould oppose them. This plan has fince been discovered.

On Monday night, about eight o'clock, two foldiers were attacked and beat. But the party of the towns people, in order to carry matters to the utmost length, broke into two Meeting Houses and rang the alarm bells, which I supposed was for fire as usual, but was soon undeceived. About nine some of the guard came to and informed me, the town inhabitants were afsembling to attack the troops, and that the bells were ringing as the figual for that purpole, and not for fire, and the beacon intended to be fired to bring in the distant people of the country. This, as I was Captain of the day, occasioned my repairing immediately to the main guard. In my way there I saw the people in great commotion, and heard them use the most cruel and horrid threats against the troops. In a few minutes after I reached the guard, about an hundred people passed it, and went towards the Cuttom House, where the King's money is lodged. They immediately surrounded the centinel posted there, and with clubs and other weapons threatened to execute their vengeance on him. I was foon informed by a townsman, their intention was to carry off the toldier from his post, and probably murder him. On which I desired him to return for further intelligence; and he foon came back and assured me, he heard the mpb declare they would murder him. This I feared might be a prelude to their plundering the King's chest. I immediately sent a non-commissioned officer and twelve men to protect both the centinel and the King's money, and very foon folloved myself, to prevent (if postible) all disorder; searing lest the officer and soldiery, by the insults and provocations of the rioters, should be thrown off their guard and commit some rash act. They fcon rushed through the people, and, by charging their bayonets in half circle, kept them at distance. Nay, so far was I had intending the death of an gr that I suffered the troops - 50 the spot where the unhap took place, without any l their pieces, nor did I orders for loading them. miss conduct in me perham censure; yet it is evidence ing from the nature o which is the best and sure be offered, that my intem not to act offensively, but trary part, and that nc compulsion. The mob sti ied, and were more our striking their clubs or one against another, and out, 'Come on, you Rascare bloody Backs, you Lobster drels; fire if you dare, GcP you, fire and be damn'd; you dare not; and much ≠ 14 fuch language was used. A time I was between the foldier the mob, parleying with and deavouring all in my power to suade them to retire peaceably; to no purpose. They advanced the points of the bayonets, freet fome of them, and even the marzles of the pieces, and seemed w endeavouring to close with the soldiers. On which some well-behaved persons asked me if the gent were charged; I replied, yes. They then asked me if I intended to order the men to fire; I answered no, by no means; observing to them, that I was advanced before the muzzla of the men's pieces, and must fall a facrifice if they fired; that the foldiers were upon the half-cock and charged bayonets, and my giving the word fire, on those circumstances, would prove me w officer. While I was thus speaking, 644

[P] 4

: foldiers, hawing received Now with a flick, flepped a one fide, and inflamily s which turning to, and m why he fired without was firnck with a club on which for fome time des of the use of it; which I it been placed on my of probably would have me. On this a general s made on the men by a aber of heavy clubs, and being thrown at them, all our lives were in imlanger; some persons at time from behind calling man your bloods, why do t fire?' Inflantly three or se foldiers fired, one after and directly after three the lame confusion and happy men who instantly in which number was Mr. whole rope walk the prior ook place; one more is 1, three others are dangerd four flightly wounded. le of this melancholy affair facted in almost twenty On my asking the foldithey fired without orders, I they beard the word and supposed it came from is might be the cafe, as the mob called out, ire," but I affored the men ve no fuch order, that my re, " Don't fire, flop your In short, it was scarce or the foldiers to know fire, or don't fire, or thep

ig. On the people's ai-again to take away the ies, the foldiers, fuppofing ning to attack them, were iob then ran away, except making ready to fire again, which I prevented by firiking up their firelocks with my hand. Immediately after a townsman came and told me, that 4 or 5000 people were affembled in the next fireet. and had fworn to take my life with every man's with me; on which I judged it unfafe to remain there any longer, and therefore fent the party and fentry to the mainguard, and when they arrived there, telling them off into Areet firings. divided and planted them at each end of the fireet to fecure their rear, momently expecting an attack, as there was a confiant cry of the inhabitants, " To arms, to arms-turn out with your guns," and the town drams beating to arms. I ordered my drum to beat to arms, and being foon after joined by the different companies of the 29th regiment, I formed them as the guard into freet firings. The 14th regiment also got under arms, but remained at their barracks. Limmediately fegt a Serjeant with a party to Colonel Dairymple, the commanding Officer, to acquaint him with every particular. Several Officers going to join their regiment were knocked down by the mob, one very much wounded, and his fword taken from him. The Lieutenant Governor, and Colonel Carr, were foon after thet at the head of the 29th regiment, and agreed that the regiment should retire to their barracks, and the people to their houses; but I kept the piquet to threngthen the guard. It was with great difficulty that the Lieutenant-Governor prevailed on the people to be quiet and revise: at last they all went off, excepting about a hundred.

A Council was immediately called, on the breaking up of which, three Justices met, and issued a warrant to apprehend me and eight Soldiers. On hearing of this procedure, I inflantly went to the Sheriff, and surrendered myfelf, though for the space of four hours I had it in my power to have made my escape, which I most undoubtedly should have attempted, and could easily have executed, had I been the least conscious of any guilt. On the examination before the Justices, two witnesses swore that I gave the men orders to fire; the one tellified he was within two feet of me; the other, that I swore at the men for not firing at the first word. Others swore they heard me use the word, fire; but whether do or do not fire, they could not say; others, that they heard the word fire, but could not fay if it came from me. The next day they got five or fix more to swear I gave the word to fire. bitter and inveterate are many of the malecontents here, that they are industriously using every method to fish out evidence to prove it was a concerted scheme to murder the inhabitants. Others are infusing the utmost malice and revenge into the minds of the people, who are to be my Jurors, by false publications, Votes of Towns, and all other artifices. That lo, from a fettled rancour against the Officers and Troops in general, the suddenness of my Trial after the affair, while the people's minds are all greatly inflamed, I am, though perfectly innocent, under most unhappy circumitances, having nothing in reason to expect, but the los of life in a very ignominious manner, without the interpolition of his Majeffy's judice and goodness.

An Account of the Trial of Prefice, at Boston, in England.

HE Trial began on \ day the 24th of Octol was continued from day Sunday excepted, till Tue 30th. The witnesses who u amined on both fides amou about 50. The Lawyers Crown were Mr. Barne a Samuel Quincy; for the Mr. Auchmuty and Mr. Adams. Each of them spol hours at least. About Mond the judges began their Judge Trowbridge, who spc entered largely into the co tory accounts given by the nesses, and declared, that it appear to him that the gave orders to fire; but if t should think otherwise, and proved that he did give such the question then would n be, What crime is he gui They furely could not call der —Here he explained th of murder in a very distinct ner, and gave it as his o that by law the prisoner t guilty of murder; observi the King had a right to s troops here; that the Comn Officer of these troops had to place a Centinel at the (house: that the Centinel there on the night of the March was in the King's that he durst not quit hi that if he was infulted or a the Captain of the Guard right to protect him; th prisoner and his party, wh there for that purpole, were King's peace; that while th at the cuilom house, for th protecting the centinel, it ainly proved that he had fisalted by a great number sie; that the people affemere were not in the King's but were by law confidered tous mob, as they attacked isoner and his party with of ice, flicks, and clubs; at even one of the witnesses him, confessed he was armed Highland broadsword; that ers bad knocked down one foldiers of the party, laid feveral of their muskets, it, before the foldiers fired. was, Knock them down! ! Kill them! That all this rn to by the witnesses, and Jary believed them, the could not be found guilty er. He then proceeded to what the law confidered as oghter, and observed, as that if they gave credit to selfes, who testified the afade on the prisoner and his they could not find him f man-flaughter, and conwith faying, that if he was f any offence, it could only fable homicide; that this r founded on the supposition rifoner's having given orfire, for if this was not they must acquit him.

Oliver, who spoke next, ith representing, in a very and pathetic manner, the ad outrages which he, and rt through him, had reta former occasion (meantrial of Richardson) for his opinion in a point of it, notwithstanding, he was to do his duty to his God, and his country; that he both insults and threats, and that he would not forego a moment's peace of confcience for the applause of millions. He agreed in sentiment with the former Judge, that the prisoner was not guilty.

Judge Cushing spoke next, and agreed entirely with the other two, with regard to the prisoner's case.

Judge Lyndex concluded. He spoke a confiderable time, and was of the same opinion with the other Judges. Towards the close of his speech he said, " Happy I am to find, that, after fuch firit examination, the conduct of the prisoner appears in fo fair a light; yet 1 feel myfelf, at the same time, deeply affected, that this affair turns out fo much to the difgrace of every person concerned against him, and fo much to the shame of the town in general." The Jury returned their verdict, Not guilty. He was immediately discharged, and is now in the Caftle. Great numbers attended during the whole trial, which was carried on with a folemn decency.

Account of the Trial of Mungo Campbell, for the Murder of Alexander, Earl of Eglingtonn.

HE account of the prisoner, of the fact for which he was tried, and the law by which he was condemned to die for murder, are in substance as follow:

Mungo Campbell was born at Air, in Scotland, in the year 1712, being in the 58th year of his age, when the dispute happened in which Lord Eglingtoun was killed. He was one of 24 children, and his father was Provost of Air, a man much respected as a mer-

be among his relations and friends

chant and a magistrate, and descended from the noble families of Marchmont, Loudoun, and Argyle. Having, however, a large family, and fultaining many confiderable losses, he died, in indifferent circumstances, and his children were dispersed among the relations and friends of the family. Mungo, who at his father's death was an infant, was taken by his godfather, who dying foon afterwards, left him about 1000 merks, and recommended him to a relation, who educated him with his own children, till he was about 18 years old. As he had not money enough to go into trade, or to support him in a course of study for any of the learned professions, he inlisted in the Scots Greys, a regiment which was commanded by a nametake and relation, from whom he hoped preferment. He served in this corps 12 years, and was, among other engagements, at the battle of Dettingen, yet he obtained no preferment; he was once offered a Quarter-Master's place, worth about 300 l. if he would advance scol, but not being able to procure such a sum, he soon after obtained his discharge, which is dated 1744.

In 1745, he returned into Scotland, where he found his countrymen in arms against each other; he accompanied his Chief and kinsman, Lord Loidoun, in the highlands; and after their return, his Lordinip procured him a commission as officer of the Excise, him in Ayrethire, that he might in his native spot. Upon this duty he entered in 1746, four and twenty years ago, and was at length finally flationed Saltcoats, where he have chosen rather to continue. than to have been raised to a higher office, which would have carried him from his native spot. known and effeemed by the neighbouring gentry, he had licences from Lord Loudoun, and many others, to hunt upon their grounds, with authority to preferve the poachers. game, and profecute He had, however, no such licence from Lord Eglingtoan. Of these licences he did not avail himely often, being, especially of late time, infirm, having a disorder in his breaft, and a lameness from a broken leg; he used now and then to kill a little game as prefents for his friends, but never fold a bird in his life, nor was ever confidered as a common fowler or poacher. In the year 1766 he sold his poister, and never afterwards had a dog; but he kept his gun, which was necessary, as the smugglen, whom it was his duty to detect. always went armed, and with his gun he sometimes shot sparrous and fometimes gulls, as he passed Lord Eglingalong the shore. toun, who was very strict in preferving the game, prohibited all persons from fishing in the waters of Garnock by publick advertisement; and Campbell, to avoid all possibility of offending his Lordship in this particular, gave with a recommendation to station away his fishing rod, which was very curious and valuable, to an

About 551. 128. sterling.

acquaintance

Glasgow.

If one day last spring, being earth of smuggled goods, so others, saw a hare start a bush at the side of the on Lord Eglingtoun's which, he says, partly opine, and possibly from igation of those with him, having before that two the course of their walk.

Eglingtoun, who was then House very near the spot, are gun, and dispatched a penquire about it. Campited the fact, as it is related in Lord Eglingtoun not beafed, tent the servant back one Bartleymore, another and required Campbell to him.

accordingly returned with ans Lordship, who used arth expressions, but Camping his pardon, and proneser more to offend, they as he says, without any being made of his gun, glingtoun knowing that he poacher.

itselfes, lieutenants in the who twear that being in who twear that being in with Campbell at Saltand talking about game, all faid that he had been challenged by Lord Egnor for shooting a hare, and is Lordship had threatened his gun from him, but persisted in the demand; had then told his Lordship de rather die than part with a adding, with an oath, Lord Eglingtoun had per-fifted to take his gun from him, he would have shot him.

If the tellimony of these witnesses is true, Campbell's affertion that Lord Eglingtoun never would have demanded his gun, but for the instigation of Bartleymore, is false.

Bartleymore, however, appears to have been much more criminal than any trespais to shoot game could make Campbell. This fellow, a favourite servant of Lord Eg'ingtoun's, abusing his Lord's confidence, employed his horfes and his care to imuggle goods. On the 8th of last July, Campbell, in consequence of previous information, detected him driving off so gallons of rum with a cart and horfe of Lord Eglingtoun's. Campbeil and his affiliants feized the rum, but the horse and cart appearing to be my Lord's property, were not taken, nor condemned with the rest. It may eafily be supposed, that this event produced much enmity between Campbell and Bartleymore, especially on the fide of Bartleymore who did the wrong. What influence it had in the fatal affair of the 24th of October, the reader must judge.

On the morning of that day, about ten o'clock, Campbell, in company with one Brown, a tide-waiter, fet out from Saltcosts, principally, as he fays, with a view to examine feveral places that were the known haunts of smugglers, but at the same time to amuse themselves by thooting; for both these purposes they proposed to walk from Saltcosts to Montiod bank, by a common road that led through lord Eglingtoun's grounds, and return by another along the feashore. They had no dog, neither had Brown a gun; they proposed only to look for a woodcock on Montsod bank, which was not game, and therefore Campbell had no need of Dr. Hunter's licence, which, however was in his pocket.

When they arrived at Montfod, about three miles distant from Salt-coats, they searched the wood for a cock, but found none; and then passed from Montsod over the Burn, into Lord Eglingtoun's grounds, and walked along the shore within the sea mark, looking for a shot of Plover.

In the mean time, Lord Eglingtoun fet out from his house in a coach, attended by one Wilson, called a Wright, who was employed in some of his Lordship's works, John Millikin, John Hazel, John Cooper, and James Hutcheson, fervants, on horseback; they stopped some time at Park House, to the N. W. of Saltcoats, where they were joined by Bartleymore, and proposed to go on to Addrosfen and Fairly. When they got about half a mile from Park House, in their way to Fairly, one of the servants having discovered Campbell and Brown, told Lord Eglingtoun that he observed more shooters, having seen some that day before: Wilson endeavoured to divert his Lordship from taking notice of them, as they had a pretty long ride before them; but he asked who they were, and being told by Bartleymore that one of them was Campbell, he came out of the coach, and mounting a horse which was led by one of his servants, without whip, slick, or weapon of any kind, he rode towards the persons he saw, who were retired from the ground where they had been first discovered, tr lea-lands; when the about ten yards of them, i " Mr. Campbell, I did not to have found you fo foon l upon my grounds, after yo mile when you fliet the ha the same time demanding h Campbell refused to delive upon which Lord Eglington his horse a kick, having a on, to get nearer to him; retreated, and defin Lordship to keep off, poin gun towards him, not raifu his shoulder, but having h upon the lock; Lord Egi then stopped his horse, a imiling, " Are you going me?" to which the other ed, " I will, if you do m Lord Eglingtoun th mounted and said, that if his gun he could shoot pre too; and immediately ca John Hazel, who was nea " John, bring me my gun." zel accordingly went back coach in which the gun la giving it to Millikin, fervant, ordered him to as fait as possible to my Lore likin took the gun, but i his office to take care of th carry the ammuniti knew it was not charged; h ed it, however, endeavou charge it as he went along.

In the mean time, Lord toun advanced some steps Campbell, leading his horse hand, and many times defin to deliver up his gun, whice often refused; Lord Egl then dropped the bridle, Wilson, being at hand, to and continued to advance Campbell, who still retired is Lordship was thus ad-I beg your pardon, my -to which my Lord reell then, deliver me your umpbell faid again, " I los, my Lord, I will degua to so man, keep off, ad I will thoot you:" after rther altercation, which heard by any of the by-Bartleymore came up and or God's fake, Mr. Campiver up your gun to my to which Campbell replied l not, for that he had a carry a gun; Lord Egfaid, " you may have a zarry a gun, but not upon is without my liberty." l replied, " I ask your and fill continuing to with the gun pointed to lingtoon, and his thumb cock, he ftruck his foot flone and fell backward, he force of the fall, the up, and passing the pertr, pointed backwards. glingtoun feeing him lie ack, stopped a little, and red his left foot, as if ino pais by Campbell's feet; ch he raifed himfelf upon w, pointed the gun at lingtoun, and fired it into Ede of his body, not bethree yards diffant.

is time Millikin was got bost twenty yards with lingtoun's gun; but Lord an having received the his hand upon the wound, nekward and fometimes attacked Campbell, who had re-, but always pointing his covered his legs, and endeavoured. rards Lord Eglingtoun, to fecure him; Campbell still stood upon his defence, and would have or dodging, Campbell wrested the gan from Millikin if Bartleymore had not run to his assistance: in the struggle they gave Campbell feveral fevere blows, upon which Lord Eglingtoun called out "don't use him ill." When he was fecured, one of the attendants carried him up to my Lord, who was lying upon the ground; and my Lord looking at him, faid, " Campbell, I would not have shot you," to which the unhappy wretch made no reply.

> Lord Eglingtoun was borne to his coach, and in that carried back to his house. Campbell having his hands tied behind him, was carried prisoner to Saltcoats; upon his way thither he was asked what his gun was charged with? to which he replied, " It did not fignify, as he had got as much as would do for him, if he was all the Barls in Scotland." He was farther asked if he was not forry for what he had done? to which he replied "No, for I would yield my gun to no man; if it was to do, I would do it again, for I would rather part with my life than my gun."

> The witnesses all seemed to agree, that during the altercation both my Lord and Campbell appeared to be angry. Brown, the tidewaiter, who was with Campbell, ran away almost as soon as Lord Eglingtous came up.

About nine o'clock in the evening of the fame day, Lord Eglingtoun was vifited by a furgeon; when he entered the room, his 1 few pares, and faid he Lordship, who was in bed, said, I Millikin rushed forwards, am glad to see you, but you can be of no use to me now, it is all over. Upon searching the wound, the shot appeared to have entered the lest side, and torn the bowels in their passage to the right, in a dreadful manner; some part had entered the liver, and the belly was full of extravalated blood: his Loroship died a little after twelve o'clock.

ΣĪ

It was urged in defence of the prisoner upon the trial, is, "that the gun went off by accident. adly, That supposing it to have been fired with an intention to kill, the act was justifiable, being done upon just provocation, and in defence of property and life. And, adly, Supposing the fact not justifiable, it could not be murder, the homicide being sudden, and during an affray, and not from malice.

It was unswered, first, that there was indubitable evidence of Campbell's declaring an intention to kill the Barl if he perfifted in the attempt to feize his gun. 2dly, That the fact, if intentional, was not justifiable, for these reasons: 18, There was no provocation, nothing but words being pretended, and words not being effectived provocation in law. 2dly, The harl had a right to feive the prifoner's gun; for by act 13, parl. 2707, it is e welly er cied " that no common towier 2. Il pretune to hunt on any grounds without a warrant from the provinctor, under the penalty, among others, of forfeiting dogs, gan , and neces to the apprehender or diftoverer; from which it follows, that the aphender has a right to a ize of paggave, and nets. Nor is this new in law, for all flatutes against fanogeling authorize the officers of the revenue to begin wi ing the goods, leaving i wards to be tried wheth have been juftly feized 3dly, it is of no moment the prifoner was or was no Earl's ground when the demanded; he had been i Earl's ground immediately under the Earl's observat as it must be prefumed, he was there with an inte kill game if he had for the Earl had the fame . feize his gun as if he has with him before he left the fo that the act not being ju was under these circum murder.

He was sentenced to be on the 11th day of April the and to have his body given Munro, professor of anata be dissected; but on the February, the day after spassed upon him, he hange fels, by sastening a handker the end of a form which he right for that purpose.

Genuine Copy of a Letter fe Committee of the Supporter Bill of Rights to the Hon the Commons Honje of . of South Carolina, on An the Letter from the Ajie South Carolina, concerning scription to the Society of hundred Pounds Sterling.

To the Han. Commons House jembly of South Carolin.

Gentlemen,

WE are directed by ciety, Supporters
Bill of Rights, to transmit tanks, for the very honourfilmony you have at once f your own fentiments, and approbation of their cone fame spirit of union and affiftance, which distated me in our favour, animates ciety. We shall ever conse rights of all our fellowthroughout the British em-England, Scotland, Ireland, series, as flones of one arch, ch the happiness and secuthe whole are founded. Such have been our principle of if the lystem of despotism, tas been adopted, had been rtfally conducted; and we as readily have affociated in fence of your rights as our ad they been separately at-

It Providence has mercifully I to depraved hearts, weak andings; the attack has asde by the fame men, at me time, on both together, ill ferve only to draw us a one great band of mutual hip and support.

wilf the Norman troops of a William kept the English ection, his English soldiers exployed to secure the obeof the Normans. This maent has been too often remow to succeed.

tere was a time when Scothough then a separate and I nation, could avoid the and refused, even under wn Stuarts, to enslave their : enemies. The chains, England and Scotland disto forge for each other, d and America shall never so furnish.

operty is the natural right kind; the connexion between taxation and representation is its necessary consequence. This connexion is now broken, and taxes are attempted to be levied both in England and America, by men who are not their respective representatives. Our cause is one—our enemies are the same. We trust our constancy and conduct will not differ. Demands, which are made without authority, should be heard without obedience.

In this, and in every other conflicutional struggle on either side of the Atlantic, we wish to be united with you, and are as ready to give as to receive assistance.

. We defire you, gentlemen, to be persuaded, that, under all our domestic grievances and apprehenfions, the freedom of America is our particular attention; and thefe your public act and folemn engagement, afford us a pleasing presage, and confirm our hopes, that, when luxury, mifrale, and corruption, shall at length, in spite of all refistance, have destroyed this noble constitution here, our posterity will not, like your gailant anceftors, be driven to an inhospitable shore, but will find a welcome refuge, where they may ftill enjoy the rights of Englishmen amongst their fellow subjects, the descendants and brothers of Englishmen.

We are, gentlemen,

With the greatest respect,
Your most obedient servants and affectionate scallowSigned subjects, JOHN GLYNN, Chairman,
RICHARD OLIVER,
JOHN TREVANION.
Treasurers.
ROBERT BERNARD,
JOSEPH MAWBEY,
JAMES TOWNSEND,
JOHN SAWBRIDGE,

Abstract

Abstract of an Act to regulate the Trials of controverted Elections, or Returns of Members to serve in Parliament.

A S the present mode of decision, La upon petitions complaining of undue elections or returns of Members to serve in Parliament, frequently obstructs public business; occasions much expence, trouble, and delay to the parties; is defective, for want of those sanctions and solemnities which are established by law in other trials; and is attended with many other inconveniencies; for remedy thereof, it is hereby enacted, that, after the present session, on complaint of undue election or return, a precise time is to be fixed for confidering thereof. The Speaker is to give notice thereof, and order attendance; but not within 14 days after appointment of the Committee of Privileges. The House may alter the time on like notice and order. The Serjeant at Arms, before the reading of the orders of the day, is to require the attendance of the Members, and at his return the House is to be counted. which for want of a hundred Members is to adjourn, till a hundred be present. In presence of a hundred, the petitioners, with their Council, Agents, &c. are to be ordered to the bar; and then the names of all the Members of the House, are to be put into fix boxes or glaffes; to be drawn alternately, and read by the Speaker, till forty-nine be drawn. Voting Members at the election, or complainants, are to be All above fixty years set aside. old are excused, or those who have served on a select Committee in the same session, unless the number who have not ferved be infuficient. Members excused shall not be deemed to have served: Members verifying other excuses their allegations are to be entered and, if the House resolve that the are unable to serve, they are to b excused: Instead of whom, other are to be drawn to complete th number forty-nine. Petitioner may name one, and fitting Mem bers another, who may for lik causes be set aside, or excused, as others named. The door of the House, that, during this bufine of chusing by lot, was kept locked is then to be opened, and the House may proceed on other bei ness. Lists of the forty-nine as to be then given to the petitionen their Council, Agents, &c. who with the Clerk, are to withdraw and to strike off one alternately till the number be reduced t The Clerk, within co thirteen. hour, is to deliver a list of them and they, with the nominees, that be sworn a select Committee, 22 the House is to order them to mee in twenty-four hours. On the par ties withdrawing, as aforefaid, the House shall continue fitting; an the fifty-one Members, io choice and nominated, shall not depart the House, till the time for the meeting of the faid select Con mittee shall be fixed. Petition ers, &c. declaring that any Mes ber drawn is intended for a nom nce, and the Member consenti thereto, he is to serve as suc and another is to be drawn to fe ply his place; but on neglect nomination, deficiencies are to supplied by lot; leaving always. teen as a select committee. Previ to taking any such petition i confideration, the Clerk is to 1

mes of the Members drawn box or parcel and attest the and the Speaker is to feal ne, and attest the making up f in his presence. The names mbers undrawn may be read Clerk. The Chairman is to ected out of the Members by lot; and, in case of ry in election, the Member awa to have a casting voice. elect Committee is impow- lend for perfons, papers, cords; to examine witnesses, termine finally. The House pon is to confirm, or alter, turn; or iffue a new writ for election. The felect Comis not to adjourn for more twenty-four hours, without and, if the House be then , business is to be stayed, and . made for farther adjourn-Sanday or Christmas-day ming are not to be deemed sd. A felect Committee-man to absent himself without ser the Committee to fit, till to have not leave, be met. lare of meeting within one a farther adjournment is to de, and reported with the hereof. The Chairman, at ecting, is to report the ab-, who are directed to attend itting; and centured or ed at discretion, unless unsle ablence be proved. If 1 do not attend, the Comis to adjourn; and if less me days, then it is to be difand another choice; and roceedings are to be void. folutions of the Committee, than the determination of int, may be reported, and ofe may make fuch order thereon, as to them shall seem proper. Perfore disobeying summons, or prevaricating, are to be When reported to the Chairman. the Committee chuse to deliberate, the room is to be cleared. Queftions are to be determined by a majority, the Chairman to have a caffing vote, and no determination to take place unless thirteen be prefent; nor any Member to vote. who has not attended every fitting. The oath taken in the House is to be administered by the Clerk, Tad those before the select Committee by the Clerk. The penalties on perjury are extended thereto. This act is to continue in force feven years, and till the end of the feftion of Parliament next after the expiration of the faid feven years, and no longer.

Abstract of an Act, for the better Preservation of the Game, within that Part of Great Britain called England.

THE game having of late been much destroyed at improper feafons, in that part of Great Britain called England: For remedying thereof, it is hereby enacted, that if, after June 24, 1770, any person or persons shall wilfully, upon any pretence whatfoever, take, kill, or deftroy any hare, pheafant, partridge, moor game, heath game, or grouse, in the night, between one hour after fun-fetting and one hour before fun-riting; or ule any gun, dog, fnare, net, or other engine for taking, killing, or destroying any hare, pheafant, &c. in the night as aforefaid; and shall be convicted [L] 2 thereof upon the oath or oaths of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before any one or more justice or justices of the peace, for any county, riding, division or place; every such person shall, for the first offence, be imprisoned not less than three months; and, for other offence, not less than six months; and for each to be publicly whipped. Offenders on Sunday, using any gun or engine for destroying game, on conviction are to forfeit 20 l. to be levied by diffress with charges, and to be applied to the informer and the poor. want of such distress, the offender is to be committed for any time not exceeding fix calendar months, nor less than three. Persons aggrieved may appeal to the quarter-lessions, giving fourteen days notice to per-The jusfons complained against. tices are to hear, determine, and award costs; and their determination is to be final, and not to be removed by certiorari.

Abstract of an act for preventing the Stealing of Dogs.

HE practice of stealing dogs having of late years greatly increased: For remedy thereof, it is hereby enacted, that from and after the first of May, 1770, if any person shall steal any dog or dogs, of any kind or fort whatfoever, from the owner or owners thereof, or from any person or persons intrulled by the owner or owners thereof with such dog or dogs; or shall sell, buy, receive, harbour, detain, or keep, any dog or dogs, of any kind or fort whatfoever, knowing the fame to have been Aulen; every tuch person, upon being convicted thereof upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, or by his or her own confession, before any two or more justices of the peace for any county, riding, division, or place, shall for the first offence forfeit not less than 20 l. and charges of conviction; or, till the penalty and charges are paid, be committed to gaol, for any time not exceeding twelve calendar months, nor less than six, or until the penalty and charges shall be paid. A perion guilty of a subsequent offence, is to forfeit not less than 301. and charges, to be paid to the informer and the poor; and on non-payment, to be imprisoned 12 months, and publicly whipped. Justices are to grant warrants to fearch for dogs stolen or their skins; and the perfons, in whose custody the dogs or their skins are found, are liable to like penalties. Persons aggrieved may appeal to the quarter-lesion. Fourteen days notice of appeal are to be given. Justices are to hear, determine, and award cofts; and their determination is to be find, and not to be removed by cerifrari.

An Abstract of the Act for registering the Prices at which Corn is sold in the several Counties of Great Britain, and the Quantity expented and imported.

I has by some fatality happened, that the preambles to Atis of parliament, which were sormerly of great use in explaining the reations for passing them, have of late been very much shortened, or wholly omitted; the preamble to this Act only suggests, that a register of ices at which corn is fold in reral counties of Great Briwill be of public and general age; for which reason the of the peace for each county eat Britain, are required, at quarter feffions, next after to, annually to direct returns nade weekly of the prices of rye, barley, oats, and beans, many market-towns within espective counties, as they tink proper, not being lefs wo, nor more than fix; and oint a proper person to send ie to a person to be appointreceive them; and in case erion shall die, neglect his w become incapable of perg it, any two justices acting county, may appoint ano-Il the next quarter fessions, the justices may either fuch appointment, or chuse his Act, the meal weighers ity of London are to take an : of the prices at the marithin the faid city, and receive the fame. I average weekly to the personned to receive the fame. Justices for each county shall life a standard Winchester of eight gallons to be kept market town, from whence turns shall be made; and turns shall be the average y the customary measure of pettive market; and also by inchester bushel.

empowered to appoint a fit o receive the returns at the , and to enter them fairly ok kept for that purpose; exports and imports of grain d into Great Britain, with ties paid and received thereon, to be transmitted annually to the same person, and registered in proper books by the person appointed to receive the returns of the prices from the several counties.

No falary is allotted by this Act to the perion to be appointed at the treasury. It is to continue in force for feven years.

Abstract of an All, to prevent Delays of Justice by reason of Privilegs of Parliament.

T is hereby enacted, that from the 24th of June next, any perfon may, at any time, commence and profecute any action or furt in any court of record, or court of equity, or of admiralty, and in all causes matrimonial and tellamentery, in any court having cognizance of causes matrimonial and testamentary, against any Peer or Lord of parliament of Great Britain, or against any of the knights, citizens, and burgeffes, and the commissioners for thires and burghs of the house of commons of Great Britain, or against their menial or other fervants, or any other perion inutled to the privilege of parliament of Great Britain; and no tuck action, fuit, or any other process or proceeding thereupon, thall at any time be impeached, stayed, or delayed, by or under colour or pretence of any privilege of parliament.

It is nevertheless provided, that nothing in this act shall extend, to subject the perion of any of the memoers of the house of commons, to be arrested or imprisoned upon any such suit or proceeding; but whether by neglect or danger, no-cing him out, dragged him ground over flones and ts, ftruck him with their ad clubs, kicked him, and spurned at him, and treatwith every possible mark mpt and cruelty; till at by a violent effort of and activity, he rescued from their merciless claws, a shelter in a house; the purfued him there, and a a ftroke that will probaby one of his eyes: in this and grievoully maimed coney left him for a while, reto the court house, knock-, and very croelly treated uty clerk of the crown, the bench, shook their ver ludge Henderson, told turn was next, ordered perfue bufiness, but in the bey should prescribe, which t no lawyers should enter -house, no juries but what ald pack, and order new cafes where some of them cast for their malepractiey then seized Mr. Hooper, nan of the law, dragged and infult.

losed the first day. But
d day presented a scene, e, more tragic: immediatheir discovering that the d made his escape from
, and refused to submit tate of lawless and despe, they marched in a body
I Fanning's house, and on iven by their ringleaders, is same, destroyed every armiture in it, ript open broke and threw in the led him through the fireets,

ed him with every mark of ffreets every piece of china and glass ware in the house, scattered all his papers and books in the winds, feized all his plate, cash, and proclamation money; entered his cellar, and gorging their stomachs with his liquors, stove and threw in the streets the remainder; being now drunk with rage, liquor, ard lawless fury, they took his wearing cloaths, fluck them on a pole, paraded them in triumph through the streets, and to close the fcene, pulled down and laid his house in rains. Hunter and Butler, two of the chiefs, stripping in buff, and beginning the heroic deed.

They then went to a large handfome church bell, that Colonel Fanning, at the expence of 60 or 70 l. had made a prefent of to the church of Hillsborough, and split it to pieces, and were at the point of pulling down the church, but their leaders, thinking it would betray their religious principle, restrained them. Their revenge being not yet fatiated on this unhappy gentleman, they again purfued him, again craelly beat him, and at length with dogs hunted mm out of town, and with a cruelty more savage than blood hounds, it ned him as he fled.

When they had fully glutted their revenge on the lawyers, and particularly Colonel Panning, to shew their opinion of courts of justice, they took from his chains a negroe that had been executed some time, and placed him at the lawyer's bar, and filled the judge's feat with human excrement, in derision and contempt of the characters that fill those respectable places.

The Lord Mayor's Queries in Respect to the Legality of Press Warrants.

C O P Y.

UERY 1. May the Lords of the Admiralty of themselves, by virtue of their commission, or under the direction of the Privy Council, legally issue warrants for the impressing of seamen?

Q. 2. If yea, is the warrant an-nexed in point of form legal?

Q. 3. Is the Lo-d Mayor compellable to back such warrants; if he is, what may be the consequence of a resulable

"The power of the crown to compel persons pursuing the employment and occupation of Seamen to serve the public in times of danger and necessity, which has its foundation in that universal principle of the laws of all countries, that all private interest must give way to the public safety, appears to us to be well established by ancient and long continued usage, frequently recognized; and in many instances regulated by the legislature, and noticed at least without censure by courts of justice; and we see no objection to this power being exercised by the Lords of the Admiralty under the authority of his Majesty's orders in council.

well as the manner in which such warrants have been usually executed, appear to us to be liable to many considerable objections; lead us to think it the more expedient, that the authority of a civil magistrate should interpose in the execution of them to check and controul the abuses to which they are liable; and, therefore, although we do not think that the Lord Mayor is compellable to back the warrants, or liable to any punishment in case of his retusal, we think it right to submit it to his Lordship's consideration, whether it will not be more conducive to the preservation of the peace of the city, and the protection of the subject from oppression, if he conforms in this instance to what we understand to have been the practice of most of his predecessors upon the like occasion.

AL. WEDDERBURN,
J. GLYNN,
J. DUNNING.

Nov. 22, 1770.

To the KING's most Excellent Majesty.

The bumble Address of the Lad Mayor, Sheriffs, Commons, and Citizens of the City of Dublin, in Common Council as embied.

Most gracious Sovereign,

WE your Majesty's most deciful, loyal, and affectionate subjects, the Lord Mayor. Sheriffs, Commons, and Citizens of your faithful city of Dublin, in common-council assembled, beg leave humbly to approach your Majesty with the most sincere assurance of our steady attachment to your Majesty's illustrious person and family, and our ardent wishes that your reign over us may be long, and as transcendently distinguished as your virtues.

Emboldened by our experience of that attention which your Majesty affords to every part of your subjects.

, permit us, most gracious represent, at the foot of irone, that for fome defects prefent law relative to corn, and other necessaries of life, laws affecting the police of ry, and from the expiration ral temporary statutes, a siin which we most humbly 'e we can only be relieved. meeting of Parliament, your I subjects of this metropolis nce many and great difficulid apprehend yet greater. lon, most gracious Sovereign, e presume further to submit a parental goodness, that public works, necessary to comerce of this city, which egun and promoted by nabounty, must be indebted to d bounty for their compleand that your subjects of netropolis, who, by large ations of the manufactures eat Britain, have provided

seir domestic confumption, which in every alternate year increases in proportion to the number assembled for national business, do already seel a decay of their trade and credit, even from a temporary decrease of inhabitants.

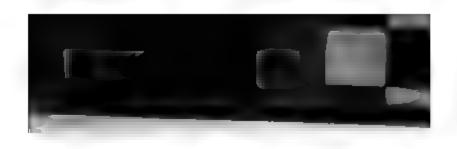

Grateful for the many bleflings derived to us from your Majefty's parental affection, and confcious that relieving the wants of your people fucceeds to the knowledge of them, we prefume to intrude our cares upon your Majefty's more weighty concerns; and humbly befeech your Majefty to take these our circumstances into your Royal consideration, and to grant us such relief as your Majesty in your Royal wisdom shall think sit.

In testimony whereof we have caused the common seal of the said city to be hereunto affixed, this twenty-uinth day of October, in the year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and seventy.

SUPPLIES granted by Parliament, so the Year 1770.

JANUARY 25, 1770. 1. HAT a number of land-forces, including one thousand five hundred and twenty-two invalids, amounting to seventeen thousand six hundred and sixty-six effective men, commission and non-commission officers included, be employed for the year 1770. 2. For defraying the charge of this number of effective men, for guards, garrisons, and other of his Majesty's land forces, in Great Britain, Jersey, and		•
Guernsey, for the year 1770 —— ——	024992	0
3. For maintaining his Majesty's forces and garri- sons in the plantations and Africa, including those in garrison at Minorca and Gibraltar, and for provisions for the forces in North America, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Gibraltar, the ceded islands, and 383248	11
4. For defraying the charge of the difference of	3-3-4-pay between the British and Irish establishment of five battalions and four companies of foot, serving in the Isle of Man, at Gibraltar, Minorca, and the ceded islands, for the year 1770 ——	4533	12
5. For the pay of the general and general staff-		• officers in Great Britain for the year 1773	12203	18
6. For defraying the charge of full pay, for 365 days, for the year 1770, to others reduced, with the tenth company of several battalions reduced from ten to nine companies, and who remained on half-pay	4570	.6
7. For the paying of pensions to the widows of	4513	10 such reduced officers of his Majesty's land-forces and marines, as died upon the establishment of half-pay in Great Britain, and were married to them before the 25th day of December, 1716, for the year 1770	664	0
8. Upon account of the reduced officers of his	τ τ majesty's land-forces and marines, for the year 1770	123233	2
9. For defraying the charge for allowances to the several officers and private gentlemen of the two troops of horse-guards reduced, and to the superan-001

DOI

. ~
	-
APPENDIX to the CHRONI	CLE.	[235
gentlemen of the four troop of horfe-guards, year 1770	1289	- 1	3 or the charge of the office of ordnance, for rice, for the year 1770	166984	11	5 or defraying the expences of fervices per-			- by the office of ordnance, for land-fervice,	40000 provided for by parliament in 1769	40933	10	*
_	1362555	15	10
PEBRUARY 2	.3393	·)	-
16,000 men be employed for the fea-fervice,			- ear 1770, including 4287 marines. And a fum, not exceeding 41. per man per month, ed for maintaining the faid 16,000 men, for	0	•
hs, including ordnance for fea-fervice — FEBRUARY 6.	832000	0	• r the ordinary of the navy, including half-a and marine officers, for the year 1770	406380	12
wards the buildings, and rebuildings, and	400300	• 3	•• of thips of war in his Majesty's yards, and tra works, over and above what are proposed se upon the heads of wear and tear and ordi-
· the year 1770	283687	0	0
FEBRUARY 15. wards defraying the extraordinary expences lajefty's land forces, and other fervices, in-the 26th day of December, 1769, and not for by parliament	235264	10	96
on Account, towards defraying the charge of	, oners of Chellea-hospital, for the year 1770	112423	4	7
	-06
PEBRUARY 22.	1869755	9	31
m account, for defraying the expences of	-		_ shablishment of his Majesty's colony of West-and other incidental expences attending the m the 24th of June, 1769, to the 24th of 70 ————————————————————————————————————	4800	0	٥ on account, for defraying the expences of establishment of his Majetty's colony of East-and other incidental expences attending the m the 24th of June, 1769, to the 24th of · O	4750	6	•
en account, for defraying the charges of the	7/ /-	_	~
slishment of his Majesty's colony of Georgia, · incidental expences attending the fame,
24th of June, 1769, to the 24th of June,	64	_	_
	3086 4	ÇT.	0 0
	4		VUE.

436] ANNUAL REGISTER,	1776.
4. Upon account, for maintaining and supporting the civil establishment of his Majesty's colony of Nova Scotia, for the year 1770 g. Upon account, for defraying the expenses attending general surveys of his Majesty's dominions in	4239 C
North America, for the year 1779	1885 4
	18760 4
f. That provision be made for the pay and cloathing of the militia, and for their subsistence during the time they shall be absent from home, on account of the annual exercise, for the year 1770 MARCH 12. i. On account, for defraying the charges of the civil government of Senegambia, for the year 1770	5550 C
2: For paying off and discharging the Exchequer- bills made out by virtue of an act, passed in the last session of parliament, intituled, 'An act for raising a tertain sum of money, by loans or Exchequer-bills, for the service of the year 1769,' and charged upon the first aids to be granted in this session of parlia-
MARCH 13.	18000CO (
To be employed in maintaining and supporting the British forts and settlements on the coast of Anica, under the direction of the committee of a company of merchants trading to Africa MARCH 19. To enable his Majesty to assist the inhabitants of the island of Barbadoes, in detraying the expence of	- 13000 C
cleanfing the channel, repairing the mole, and ren- dering the harbour there more lafe and commodious	50 00 _t 1823550 (
MARCH 29. 1. To make good to his Majesty, the like sum, which has been issued by his Majesty's orders, in pursuance of the addresses of this house 2. Towards enabling the trustees of the British Museum to carry on the execution of the trust reposed	13100 1
in them by parliament	2000 (
Old Palace-yard	2000

A

APRIL 10. account, to enable his Majesty to discharge to owing upon the forfeited estates in Scot- nd also for paying and discharging the prices of be paid to the Lords superiors, for the pur- the superiorities of, and likewise for their f property to certain specified estates which seited in that kingdom place to the sinking fund the like sum paid the same, to make good the desiciency on the of July, 1769, of the sund established for annuities, in respect of sive millions borrow- virtue of an act of the 31st George II. to- te supply granted for the service of the year	72 00 0	9
	46463	14	3
is ake good the deficiency of the grants for the	5581,1	7	5 -
•	190575	٥	14
discharge such unsatisfied claims and de- for expences incurred during the late war in y, as appear to be due to the Landgrave of lassel, by the reports of the commissioners are by his majesty, for examining and stating ms and demands be advanced to the governor and company merchants of England, trading to the Levant be applied in assisting the said company in on that trade	45$6 $ 5000	ļ2	9
tain and educate such children as were remote the said hospital on or before the 25th March, 1760, from the 31st of December, xelasive, to the 31st day of December 1770, 2; and that the said sum be issued and paid, 16e of the said hospital, without see or reward, leduction whatsoever renabling the said hospital to put out apthe said children, so as the said hospital do with one child more than 7 l.	96 5 0	9	ý
_	63715	12	- -
APRIL 26	-3/-)		7

nat the fum of one million five hundred thouunds capital flock of annuities, after the rate

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770, 238]

ofthree pounds ten shillings per centum, established by an act made in the 29th year of the reign of his late Majesty king George the second, intituled, An act for granting to his Majesty the sum of two millions, to be raised by way of annuities and a lottery, and charged on the finking fund, redeemable by parliament, and for extending to Ireland the laws made in this kingdom against private and unlawful lotteries, be redeemed and paid off on the 12th day of February next, after discharging the interest then payable in respect of the same.

2. To enable his Majesty to redeem and pay off the said capital stock of annuities

3. To pay the benefit prizes in the present lottery, charged upon the supplies of the current year MAY 3.

1. Upon account of the expences of the new roads of communication, and building bridges, in the highlands of North-Britain, in the year 1770

2. Towards paying off and discharging the debt of the navy

MAY 8.

1. To enable his Majesty to make compensation to Francis Dalby, of London, merchant, for the damages which the said Francis Dalby hath suffered, by the stoppage and loss of his ship, called the Britannia, at Mahon, by order of the late admiral Matthews, and by the use, employment, and detainer, of his ship called the Francis, by order of the commanders of his Majesty's sleets

2. To enable his Majesty to make good the like sum, which has been paid to several persons in the county of Southampton, as a compensation, and in full satisfaction of their losses and expences, incurred pursuant to several orders of council, for preventing the spreading of the infectious distemper among the horned cattle

MAY 11.

1. To be advanced to John Hatsell, Esq; clerk of this house, towards defraying the expence of printing the Journal of this house, from the end of the last session of parliament to the end of this prefent session, with a proper index thereto

2. To be advanced to such person or persons as the speaker of this house shall authorize to receive

--- I500000 o

500000 0

6998 10

100000 (

6195

796

2113990

600 (

a general index to the journals of this house MAY 16.

500 0 0

rds defraying the expense of printing one i two hundred and fifty copies of such parliaand other records, as his Majesty shall think

6000 o o

al of the supplies granted this session

7455042 1 8

nd Means for raifing the Supply granted to bis Maagreed to on the following with

ANUARY 29, 1770.
AT the duties open malt, num, cyder, and perry, be ed from the 23d of June of the 24th of June 1771, urged upon all malt which made, and all mum which made or imported, and a and perry which shall be a fale within the kingdom t Britain, 700,000l.

FEBRUARY 8.

the sum of 3 s. in the and no more, be raised, the space of one year, from th day of March, 1770, ands, tenements, hereditapentions, offices, and pertates, in that part of Great called England, Wales, and n of Berwick upon Tweed; t a proportionable cess, acto the ninth article of the of union, be laid upon that Great Britain, called Scot-,528,568 l. 11 114d.

MARCH 3.

the charge of the pay and g of the militia, so that Great Britain called Lngor one year, beginning the sy of March, 1770, be defrayed out of the monies arising by the land-tax granted for the fervice of the year 1770.

13. That towards raising the supply granted to his majesty, the sum of 1,800,000 l. be raised, by loans or exchequer-bills to be charged upon the first aids to be granted in the next session of parliament; and such exchequer-bills, if not discharged, with interest thereupon, on or before the 5th day of April, 1771, to be exchanged, and received in payment, in such manner as exchequer-bills have usually been exchanged and received in payment.

ag. That towards railing the supply granted to his Majesty, there be issued and applied the sum of 299 375 l. 6 s. 6 ld, remaining in the exchequer, on the 5th day of January, 1770, for the disposition of parliament, of the monies which had then arises of the surplusses, excesses, or overplus monies, and other revenues, amposing the sund, commonly called the sunking sund.

Arrit 9.

That the fum of 400,000 l, which, by an act made in the last fession of gardament, indicated, An act for carrying into execution certain proposals made by the hautinus company, for the pay, ment of the annual fum of 400,000 l.

for a limited time, in respect to the territorial acquisitions and revenues lately obtained in the East-Indies,' is directed to be paid, within the present year, into the receipt of his Majesty's exchequer, hy the faid company, be applied towards making good the supply granted to his Majesty.

APRIL 12.

1. That the bounties granted on the British and Irish linens exported, by an ast made in the 29th year of the reign of his late Majesty, be continued.

2. That the duties on the importation of foreign raw linen yarn made of flax, which are taken off by the said act, be further discontinued.

a. That a bounty be allowed on the exportation of British chequed and striped linens. And,

4. That the sum of fifteen thousand pounds, granted by an passed in the seventh year of his present Majesty's reign, intituled, 4 An act for granting to his Majesty additional duties on certain foreign linens imported into this kingdom, and for eltablishing a fund for the encouraging of the raising and dressing of hemp and flax,' be appropriated.—A bill or bills were ordered to be brought in upon the faid resolutions.

5. That, towards making good the supply granted to his Majesty, there be applied the fum of leven hundred and feverity-three thoufand two hundred and forry pounds, fixteen shillings and one half penny; being the turplus of the produce of the finking fund, for the quarter ended the 5th day of April, 1770, remaining in the Exchequer, for the disposition of parliament.

6. That, towards making good the supply granted to his Majesty, there be applied the sum of thirteen thousand five hundred and ninety-fix pounds, five shillings, and ten pence half-penny, remaining in the receipt of the exchequer, on the 5th day of April, 1770, for the disposition of Parliament, over and above the farplus of the finking fund then remaing for the same purpose.

20. That the fum of one million five hundred thousand pounds, capital stock of annuities, after the rate of three pounds ten shillings per centum, established by an act made in the 29th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the second, intituled, 'Au act for granting to his Majefty the fum of two millions, to be raited by way of annuities and a lottery, and charged on the finking fund, redeemable by parliament, and for extending to Ireland the laws made in this kingdom against private and unlawful lotteries,' will be redeemed and paid off on the 12th day of February next, after discharging the interest then payable in respect of the same, agreeable to the clauses and powers of redemption contained in the faid act.

That any person or persons, b5dies politic and corporate, who, being possessed of, or intitled to, annuities after the rate of four pourds per centum, which were confolidated by an act of the fecost of his present Majesty, chali, or or before the seventh day of May next, in books to be opened at the bank of England for that purpote, subscribe their names, or figuify their confert to accept, in lieu thereet, annuities after the

rate

ree pounds per centum, ce from the 5th day of 770, and to be added ake one joint flock with, musties confolidated by the 25th of George the d leveral subsequent acts ent, thall, for every one ounds of capital flock fo until the feveral fums fhall amount together sons five hundred thou-, be intitled to receive in a lottery, to confift cooland tickets, at the rteen pounds each; and fuch subscriber, in conof fuch subscription, a receipt from the the Bank of Lingland ounds, in part for the n pounds for each ticket ech subscriber shall be and fitall pay, for and of every such ticket, the pound, on or before may of June next; the of two pounds, on or soth day of July next; oum of three pounds, on said day of Augult next; oner fam of four pounds, the acth day of Sep-: that, upon fuch paye completed, tickets fivered, as foon as the o prepared, to the perand possessed of the reinbefore directed to y the cashiers of the aforefaid; the fum of thousand pounds shall d into prizes, for the he proprietors of the kets in the faid lottery; shall be paid at the agland, in money, to ors, upon demand, on the first day of March, 1771, or as foon after as certificates can be prepared, without any deduction whatsoever; and that every person possessed of, and holding, fuch receipts, as aforefaid, who shall pay in the whole of the money to be paid on each ticket, on or before the 17th day of August next, shall be allowed an interest, by way of discount, after the rate of three pounds per centum per annum on the fums to completing his payments, respectively, to be computed from the day of completting the fame to the 25th day of September next.

That in case the full and intire fum of two millions five bundred thousand pounds, in the said four pounds per centum annuities, shall not have been subscribed on, or before, the 7th day of May next; and that, in confequence thereof, any number of tickets, in the faid lottery, shall remain unsubscribed for; any person or persons shall be at liberty to contribute for the purchase of such remaining tickets, at the rate of fourteen pounds for each ticket, in the manner herein after mentioned; that is to fay, every such contributor or contributors to make a deposit of four pounds, for and in respect of such ticket, on or before the soth day of May next, as a fecurity for making good his or their future payments; the further fum of one pound on or before the 15th day of June next; the further fum of two pounds, on or before the 20th day of July next; the further fum. of three pounds, on or before the 21st day of August next; and the further fum of four pounds, on or before the 25th day of September next; tickets to be delivered, as foon as the fame can be prepared, upon his or their completing their payments; and that every contributor who shall pay in the whole of the money to be paid on each ticket, on or before the 17th day of August next, shall be allowed an interest, by way of discount, after the rate of three pounds per centum per annum, on the sums so completing his payments respectively, to be computed from the day of completing the same to the 20th day of September next. And,

[x]

That all the monies that shall be received by the cashiers of the Bank, for or on account of the whole of the faid fifty thousand tickets, shall be paid into the receipt of his Majesty's exchequer, to be applied, from time to time, to such services as shall then have been voted by this house, and not otherwise; and that the sum of five hundred thousand pounds, hereinbefore directed to be distributed into prizes, for the benefit of the proprietors of the fortunate tickets in the said lottery, shall be charged upon the aids and supplies granted in this session of parliament, for the service of the year 1770.

MAY 3.

1. That, towards raising the supply granted to his Majesty, there be issued and applied the sum of one million seven hundred thousand pounds, out of such monies as shall or may arise of the surplusses, excesses, or overplus monies, and other revenues composing the sinking sund.

2. That the sum of fifty-five thousand four hundred and ninetyfive pounds fifteen shillings eightpence farthing, remaining in the effice of the Paymaster-general of his Majesty's forces, subject to the disposition of parliament, be applied towards making good the supply granted to his Majesty, towards descraying the extraordinary expences of his Majesty's land forces, and other services incurred, to the 26th day of December, 1769, and not provided for by parliament.

3. That a fum not exceeding twenty thousand pounds, out of such monies as shall be paid into the receipt of the exchequer, after the 4th day of April, 1770, and on or before the 5th day of April, 1771, of the produce of all or any of the duties and revenues, which, by any act or acts of parliament, have been directed to be referred for the disposition of parliament, towards defraying the necessary expences of defending, protecting and securing the British colonies and plantations, in America, be applied towards making good sock part of the supply as hath bees granted to his Majesty, for maintaining his Majesty's forces and garrisons in the plantations, and for provisions for the forces is North - America, Nova Newfoundland, and the islands, for the year 1770. And, fhall be paid into the receipt of the exchequer, after the 4th day of April, 1770, and on or before the 5th day of April, 1771, of the produce of the duties charged by an act of parliament, made in the 5th year of his present Majesty's reign, upon the importation and exportation of gum-seneca and gum-arabic, be applied towards making good the supply granted to his Majesty.

5. That the duties now payable upon the importation into this kingdom iom of baft or firaw, chip, and horfe-hair hats and bonand upon certain materials aking the fame, do cease, deme, and be no longer paid.

at, in lieu of all former rates laties, all baft or firaw, chip, and horfe-hair hate and bonwhich from and after the day of June, 1770, shall be ted iceo this kingdom, shall ted to, and pay, the old fubgranted by the act of tonnage mendage, made in the twelfth of the reign of King Charles cond, according to the rates thes of twelve fhillings and nce for every dozen, each hat anet not exceeding twentysches in diameter; and one five faillings for every dozen h hats or bonnets as shall exwenty-two inches in diameter at, in lieu of all former rates luties, all platting, or other inchares of baft or firaw, cane, ar horfe-hair, to be a, or proper for making of, e hounets, which, from and the faid 24th day of Jane, shall be imported into this one, shall be rated to, and pay the faid old fublidy, according to the rate and value of fix shillings and eight-pence for every pound weight Avoirdupois.

That the full amount of the feveral duties, now payable for every twenty shillings of the value of the said goods respectively, be raised and collected, according to the said respective rates before-mentioned. And,

That a fum not exceeding three thousand nine hundred fortyeight pounds, three shillings and feven pence, being the final balance of the account of Thomas Barl of Kinnoull, formerly Paymaster-general of his Majesty's forces, subject to the disposition of parliament, be applied towards making good the supply granted to his Majeky, towards defraying the extraordinary expences of his Majesty's land forces, and other fervices, incurred to the 26th day of December, 1769, and not provided for by parliament.

These were the resolutions of the Committee or ways and means, which were agreed to by the house, and the sums thereby provided for, so far as they can at present be ascertained, stand as follows:

			6.	s.	d.
refolation of Janua	Ly 29		700000	0	0
it of February 8	· -		1528568	11	11
it of March 13	-		1800000	0	•
st of March 20	-		299375	6	61
nt of April 9			400000		0
fifth of April 12			773340	16	o l
i fixth of ditto			13596
t of April 26			500000	_	0
: first of May g	Tool Control	_	1700000	9
: fecoud of ditto		_	55495	15	81
third of ditto	-	-	20000	_	•
laft of May 8			3948	3	7
Mal of fuch provide	as as can be afor	ertained —	7794334
of the provisions	-	-	344182
7	[2]:		81	r A	TE

STATE PAPERS.

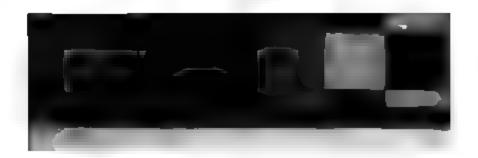

His Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, on Tuesday the 9th of January, 3770.

My Lords and Gentlemen, T is with much concern, that I find myself obliged to open this session of parliament with acquainting you, that the distemper among the horned cattle has lately broke out in this kingdom, notwithstanding every precaution that could be used for preventing the infection from foreign parts. Upon the first notice of its actual appearance, my next attention was to endeavour to stop, if possible, its further progress; and, as the success of those endeavours must, in all probability, have been entirely descated by any the least degree of delay in the application of them, I thought it absolutely necessary, with the advice of my privy council, to give immediate directions for every step to be taken that appeared most capable of checking the instant danger of the spreading of the infection, until I could have an opportunity of consulting my parliament upon some more permanent measures for securing us against so great a calamity: And to your immediate and serious confideration I earnestly recommend this very important subject.

I have given my parliament repeated assurances, that it has always been my fixed purpose to preferve the general tranquillity maintaining at the same time t dignity and honour of my crow together with the just rights a interests of my people. common burthens, which my fe jects have borne so chearfully, order to bring the late war to happy conclusion, must be an 1 ditional motive to make me vi lant to prevent the present diffi bances in Europe from extendi to any part, where the securi honour, or interest of this nati may make it necessary for a crown to become a party. assurances which I receive from t other great powers, afford me n fon to believe that my endeavor will continue to be success I shall still make the general i terest of Europe the object of s attention: And while I feed support my own rights, I shall equally careful not to acknowled the claims of any other post contrary to the limitations of late treaties of peace.

It is needless for me to recommend to the serious attention my parliament the state of government in America. I hendeavoured, on my part, by eveneans, to bring back my sabithere to their duty, and to a sense of lawful authority. It gime much concern to inform y that the success of my endeaver has not answered my expectation and that, in some of my colors persons have embarked in res highly unwarrantable, ticulated to destroy the comil connection between them se mother-country.

STATE PAPERS. [245

Gentlemen of the House of Commons, ave ordered the proper estifor the service of the currear to be laid before you, persuaded, that your affection may person and government, our zeal for the public good, aduce you to grant such supare necessary; and you may need, that, on my part, they be managed with the strictest my.

My Lords and Gentlemen, the welfare and prosperity of sopie have always been the of my withes, and the rule of flions; so I am persuaded, my experience of your conthat you will be governed in proceedings by the same lea. My ready concurrence ipport, in every measure that erve to promote those ends, may always depend upon. a it will be now, more than incumbent, most carefully to all beats and animofities 2 yourselves, and to cultihat spirit of harmony, which es those, who have but one and object in their view; and may be most likely to give ity and efficacy to the refult r deliberations. Such a conm your part will, above all , contribute to maintain, in proper luftre, the strength, petation, and the prosperity s country; to strengthen the ment of my subjects to that excellent constitution of government, from which they derive such distinguished advantages; and to cause the firm reliance and considence which I have in the wisdom of my parliament, as well as in their zeal for the true interest of my people, to be justified, and approved both at home and abroad.

The humble Address of the Right Honourable the Lords Sportinal and Temporal in Parliament ofsembled, January 9, 1770.

Most gracious Sovereigo.
W E, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lords spiritual and temporal, in parliament assembled, return your Majesty our humble thanks for your most gracious speech from the throne.

We beg leave to affure your Majesty, that it is with the greatest concern we have understood, that the distemper among the horned cattle has lately broke out in this kingdom. We defire to express our gratitude for your Majesty's paternal care and attention to the welfare of your people, in the steps which it has pleased your Majesty to take, with the advice of your privy council, to check the inflant danger of the fpreading of the diffemper, upon the first notice of its appearance; and to affure your Majetty, that we will immediately enter into the most terious consideration of this very important object, and will exert our utmost endeavours in taking fuch effectual measures, as may fecure us againft to great a calamity.

We return your Majesty our thanks for the repeated affurances your Majesty has been pleased to give us, of your fixed purpose to preserve the peace; maintaining, at the same time, the dignity of your crown, and the interests of your people. We have a dutiful sense of your Majesty's provident attention to prevent the necessity of involving your subjects in fresh difficulties, after the great burthens to which they so chearfully submitted, in order to bring the late war to a happy conclusion; and we have great fatisfaction in finding, that the assurances given to your Majesty by the other great powers of Europe afford reason to believe, that without prejudice either to the honour of your crown, the rights of your people, or the general interests of Europe, it may still be in your Majesty's power to continue to your subjects the farther enjoyment of the bleffings of peace.

We affure your Majesty, that we will take into our most serious confideration the state of your government in America. We beg leave to express our utmost concern, that the fuce is of your Majesty's endeavours to bring back your subjects there to a due sense of lawspl authority, have not answered your Majesty's expectations. We shall be ready to give every affiftance in our power, for rendering effectual thele your Majesty's gracious intentions, and for discountenancing those unwarrantable measures practised in some of your Majesty's colonies, which appear calculated to definoy the commercial connection between them and the mother country.

We think it our duty to affect your Majesty, that we are theroughly sensible, that the welfare of your people has ever been the object of your wishes, and the rele of all your actions; and that we will endeavour to deserve the 🕰 vourable opinion, which Majesty is graciously pleased to express, of our being governed by the fame principles. we have a perfect reliance on your Majesty's promised support is fuch measures, as may serve to promote those ends. That as it is peculiarly incumbent upon us at present, to avoid beats and animofities among ourselves, so we sall endeavour to cultivate that harmony which is so necessary to the common cause, and which also can render our deliberations respectable and effectual; being fully perfushed, that fuch a conduct, on our part must greatly contribute to the happiness and prosperity of this country, and to establish a dec fense of the very diffinguified atvantages of our happy confliction, as well as a firm attachment to k; and must justify, both at home set abroad, your Majesty's graciest confidence in the wisdom of your parliament, and in their zeal for the true interests of your people.

His Majesty's most gracious Answer.

My Lords,

I thank you for this affections and loyal address. Your resolution to enter immediately into the confideration of such measures as may best secure us against the spreading of the distemper among the horsed cattle, affords me great satisfaction.

I have

STATE PAPERS. [247

I have firmy reliance on your determination to give me every affifunce in you power to support my government in America.

Your afforances of duty and loyalty towards me, and your refoliation to cultivate harmony among yourselves, give me very facers pleasure.

The humble Address of the House of Commons to the King.

Mod gracious Sovereign,
W B your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled, beg leave to return your Majesty our mble thanks for your most gracious speech from the throne.

We cannot but look upon it as a very ferious misfortune, that notwithstanding every precaution which could be used for preventing the communication of the infections diforder among the horned cattle from foreign parts, that most alarming dittemper appears to have again broke out in some parts of the kingdom: At the fame time, we are truly fentible of your Majefly's paternal care and vigilance for the fecurity of your people, in having given the earliest directions for every measure to be parfaced, that might be most likely to give an immediate check to the ark spreading of the insection; and we will not fail to take this most important matter into our immediate confideration; and to make fach provisions as thall appear bett calculated to carry into effectual and complete execution your Maichy's falutary intentions; and thereby, as far as by human means can be accomplished, to goard against the danger of so great a calamity becoming general.

Your faithful Commons have too juil a fense of the bleffings of peace, and feel with your Majefly too tender a concern for the eafe of their fellow-fubjects, not to rejoice at the prospect which the affurances given by the other great powers of Europe afford to your Majesty, that the present disturbances will not extend to any part where the fecurity, honour, or interest of this nation may make it necessary for your Majesty to become a party. We have the fullest confidence that your Majesty will never be unmindful of those important objects; and we observe, with great fatisfaction, your Majesty's wife attention to the general interests of Europe, in your determination not to acknowledge any claims of any of the other powers of Europe, contrary to the limi-tations of the late treaties of peace.

We fincerely lament, that your Majefty's endeavours to bring back your subjects in America to a just sense of their duty have hitherto proved fo little fuccefsful. The flate of your Majetty's government there does undoobtedly well deferve the terious attention of parliament: and no endeavours thall be wanting on our part, to make effectual provisions against the unwarrar table meatures carried on in fome of your Majefty's colonies, which are to irreconcileable to every principle of commercial fubferviency to the interest of the mother-country that ought to prevail in the colonies, and which, by attempting to subject the highest legal authority to the controll of individuals, tend to subvert the foundation of all government.

[R]

Your Majesty may be assured, that we will, with the utmost chearfulness and dispatch, grant the necessary supplies for the service of the current year.

We acknowledge with the warmest gratitude, that the welfare of these kingdoms has been the constant object of your Majesty's wishes, and the unvaried rule of your actions. Permit us, Sir, at the same time, to offer to your Majesty our most dutiful thanks, for the favourable opinion which your Majesty is pleased to entertain of the conduct of your Parliament; and to assure your Majesty, that we will steadily persevere in such principles as are most agreeable to the true spirit of this free constitution, and invariably purfue fuch meafures as are most conducive to the real happiness of the people.

Earnestly desirous of justifying to all the world your Majesty's gracious declaration of your confidence in us, we will make it our study to avoid all heats and animosities, and to cultivate that harmony amongst ourselves, which, we are truly sensible, is at this time peculiarly necessary, to give weight to our deliberations, to establish the prosperity, and to maintain in its true lustre the reputation of this country.

And while we on our part are faithfully executing the trust reposed in us, by endeavouring to the utmost of our power to promote these good ends, we trust that all who live under this happy constitution will be convinced how indispensably it is their duty to pay that obedience to the laws, and just reverence to lawful authority, by which alone their one rights can be preserved, and the distinguished blessings which they enjoy above all other nations is rendered secure and permanent.

The Humble Address of the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in Parliament assembled, presented March 23, to his Majesty.

Most gracious Sovereign, W E, your Majesty's mot dutitul subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament | affembled, taken into confideration the Addrefs lately prefented to your Majesty, under the title of, The ' humble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery of the City of London, in Common-' hall assembled,' together with the answer which your Majesty was pleased to make to the same: think indifpensably obliged, ourselves upon this occasion, to express to your Majesty the extreme concern and indignation which we feel, at finding that an application has been made to your Majesty in terms so little corresponding with that grateful and affectionate respect which your Majesty is to justly intitled to from all your subjects; at the fame time aspering and calumniating one of the branches of the Legislature, and expressly denying the legality of the present Parliament, and the validity of its proceedings.

To present petitions to the throne has at all times been the undoubted right of the subjects of

this

this realm. The free enjoyment of that right was one of the many blefings restored by the Revolution, and continued to us, in its fallest extent, under the Princes of year Majesty's illustrious house: Asd, as we are duly sensible of its value and importance, it is with the deepest concern that we now fee the exercise of it so grosly perverted, by being applied to the purpole, not of preserving, but of overturning the Constitution: and of propagating doctrines, which, if generally adopted, must be fatal so the peace of the kingdom, and which tend to the subversion of all lawful authority.

Your Majesty, we acknowledge with gratitude, has ever shown the most tender regard to the rights of your people, not only in the exercise of your own power, but in your care to preserve from every degree of infringement or violation the powers intrusted to others. And we beg leave to return your Majesty our unseigned thanks, for the fresh proof you have given of your determination to persevere in your adherence to the principles of the Constitution.

Majesty, that it is with the highest satisfaction we see your Majesty expressing so just a considence in your people. In whatever unjustifiable excesses some sew missinguided persons may, in this instance, have been seduced to join, your Majesty's subjects in general, are too tensible of what they owe both to your Majesty and your illustrious family, ever to be capable of approaching your Majesty with any other sentiments than those of the most intire respect and assection; and they unspects are sentenced.

derstand too well their own true interests, to wish to loosen the bands of obedience to the laws, and of due subordination to lawful authority. We are therefore fully persuaded that your Majesty's people, as well as your parliament, will reject with disdain every infidious suggestion of those illdefigning men, who are in reality undermining the Public Liberty, under the specious pretence of zeal for its preservation; and that your Majesty's attention to maintain the liberties of your subjects inviolate, which you esteem your chief glory, will, upon every occation, prove the fure means of strength to your Majesty, and secure to you that zealous and effectual support, which none but a free people can beflow.

His Majesty's Answer.
My Lords and Gentlemen,

I return you my thanks for this very loyal and dutiful address. It is with great satisfaction that I receive from my parliament so grateful an acknowledgment of my tender regard for the rights of my subjects. Be assured that I shall continue to adhere to the true principles of our excellent constitution; from which I cannot deviate without justly forfeiting the affections of a free people.

By the KING.

APROCLAMATION,
For encouraging Seamen to enter themselves on board his Majesty's Ships of War.

GBORGE R.

W HEREAS it is our royal intention to give all due encouragement to all such seamen, who who shall voluntarily enter themselves in our tervice; we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, to publish this our Royal Proclamation: And we do hereby promite and declare, that all such able seamen, not above the age of fifty, nor under the age of twenty years, fit for our fervice, who shall, on or before the 21st day of October next, voluntarily enter themselves ferve in our Royal Navy, either with the captains or lieutenants of our ships, or the chief officers on board such tenders, as shall be employed for raising men for the service of our Navy, shall receive, as our royal bounty, the sum of thirty shillings each man: and all foch ordinary seamen fit for our service, who shall so enter themselves as aforesaid, shall receive the fum of twenty shillings each man, as our royal bounty; such respective sums to be paid them by the respective clerks of the cheque, residing at the ports or places where the ships, into which they shall be entered, shall be, immediately after the third muster of such seamen.—And we do declare, that the qualifications of the feamen, so entering themselves as aforesaid, shall be certified by the Captain, Mailer, and Boatswain of the ship or vessel where they shall enter. And for prevention of any abuses, by any persons leaving the vessels to which they shall belong, and entering themselves on board any other our ships or vessels, in order to obtain the said bountymoney; we do hereby declare and command, that such seamen, belonging to any of our ships, or vessels, as shall absent themselves from any of the faid thips or vessels to which they shall belong, and shall enter themselves on board any other of our faid thips or veffels, is order to obtain the faid bounty, shall not only lose the wages due to them in the ships or vessels they shall leave, but also be severely punished according to their demerits.

Given at our court at St. James's the 22d day of September, 1770, and in the tenth year of our reign.

GOD fave the KING.

His Majesty's most gracicus Speech to both Houses of Parliament, ca Saturday the 19th of May, 1770.

My Lords and Gentlemen, HE season of the year, and the dispatch you have given to the public bufiness, make it proper for me to put an end to this fession of parliament.

The temper with which you have conducted all your proceedings, has given me great satisfaction, and I promise myself the happiest esteds from the firmnels, as well as the moderation, which you have manifested in the very critical circumstances which have attended your late deliberations.

With respect to foreign affairs, I have nothing material to commenicate to you. I will continue my endeavours to appease, if possible, the troubles which still prevail in some parts of Europe, or at least to prevent them from spreading farther. In all events it shall be my first and constant care to watch over the interests, and to preserve undiminished the rights of my people.

Gentle-

STATE PAPERS.

[251 commons, arm you my thanks for the

you have so chearfully for the service of the curar, as well as for your atto make ale of every opty of reducing the national.
The provision you have ble to make in this session charging so considerable a ithout laying any turther on my subjects, cannot highly advantageous to credit.

y Lords and Gentlemen, of earneftly recommend to exert, in your respective s, the same zeal and pruhat you have thewn in Parts for promoting the peace :lfare of the kingdom: nocan be so favourable to the of those, who look with jeain the firength and profpethis country, as the prevaof animofities and diffentions A ourselves: let it therefore ur care to discountenance strempt to infuse groundless ans and discontent into the of your fellow subjects; make enable of my conftant attenpromote their happiness; and ce them, that nothing can fo ally fecure their liberties, as aintenance of every part of cellent constitution in its due ind authority.

 KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

umble Address of the Lord sor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, in Commoncouncil affembled, on Wednesday, May 30, 1770.

Most gracious Sovereigo,

What upon your Majesty with our fincere congratulations on the happy delivery of our most gracious Queen, and on the birth of another Princess: and to assure your Majesty, that there are not in all your dominions any subjects more faithful, more dutiful, and more assectionate to your Majesty's person and family, or more ready to sacrifice their lives and fortunes in the maintenance of the true honour and dignity of your crown.

Long may your Majely reign the true guardian of the liberties of this free country, and be the inframent, in the hands of Providence, of transmitting to our posterity these invaluable rights and privileges, which are the birth-right of the subjects of this kingdom.

To which the King gave the following gracious answer:

I receive with great fatisfaction your congratulations on the happy delivery of the Queen, and the birth of a Princess; and I return you my hearty thanks for the duty and affection to my person and family, and the zeal for the true honour and dignity of my crown, which you express upon this occasion.

'The city of London, entertaining these loyal sentiments, may be always affured of my protection.'—They all had the honour of kiffing his Majesty's hand,

His Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, on Tuesday the 13th Day of November, 1770.

My Lords and Gentlemen, WHEN I last met you in Parliament, I renewed to you the assurances which I had before given you, that it was my fixed purpose to preserve the geperal tranquillity; maintaining, at the same time, the honour of my crown, together with the just rights and interests of my people: and it was with much satisfaction that I indulged the hope of being still able to continue to my subjects the enjoyment of peace with honour and fecurity. Since that time, those very confiderations, which I then promised you that I would never sacrifice even to the desires of peace, have laid me under an indispensable necessity of preparing for a different fituation.

By an act of the Governor of Buenos Ayres, in seizing by force one of my possessions, the honour of my crown, and the security of my people's rights, were become deeply affected. Under these circumstances, I did not fail to make an immediate demand from the court of Spain, of such satisfaction as I had a right to expect for the injury I had received. I directed alto the necessary preparations to be made, without loss of time, for enabling me to do myself justice, in case my requisition to the court of Spain should fail of procuring it for me. And these preparations, you may be assured, I shall not think it expedient to discontinue, until I shall have received proper reparation for the injury, as well as fatisfactory proof, that other powers are equally fincere with myself in the resolution to preserve the general tranquillity of Europe. in the mean time, I have called you together thus early, in order that I may be able to receive from you such advice and assistance, as, in the farther progress of this very important business, may happen to become requifite.

With respect to the state of my colonies in North America, although I have the satissaction to acquaint you, that the people in most of them have begun to depart from those combinations, which were calculated to distress the commerce of this kingdom; yet, is some parts of the colony of the Massachuset's Bay, very unwarrantable practices are still carried os, and my good fubjects oppressed by the same lawless violence which has too long prevailed in that province.

I hope, and trust, that the precautions, which have already been uled for lecuring this country against the visitation of that fatal calamity, which has of late appeared in some of the distant parts of Europe, will, with the bleffing of God, proved successful. But if, from any alteration of circumstances, it should at any time be found, that farther provisions will be wanted, I cannot doubt of your ready concurrence for so falutary a purpole.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

I will order the proper estimates for the service of the ensuing year to be laid before you. They must unavoidably, in our present situation, exceed the ulual amount Every unnecessary expence, my concern for the eale of my good subjects

PAPERS. STATE 253

ili ever make me careful but I should neither conintereft, nor their incli-I were to decline any exsich the public fecurity, intenance of the national oes at any time require. Lords and Gentlemen. enfible how little I need , at this time, to prevail to unite in whatever may tote the true interest of stry. In all your delibepon points of a domestic t the extention of our e, the improvement of the and the maintenance of d good government, be 1 your view. With reforeign measures, there n perfuaded, be no other among you, than who ear most forward in the of the common cause, in the reputation, and the prosperity of the For the attainment of terests of your people. is, you shall ever find me exert myfelf to the utterhave no interest, I can ble Address of the Right able the Lords Spiritual in Parliament Temporal, led, November 13, 1770.

zracious Sovereign, piritual and Temporal, in int affembled, feturn your our humble thanks for

We beg leave to offer your Majefty our very fincere congratulations on the fafe and happy delivery of the Queen, and the birth of a princels; and to affure your Majesty of our unfeigned joy at the increase of your domestic happinels; and that we confider every addition to your illustrious bouse, from which these kingdoms have received the most important benefits, as a farther fecurity to our religious and civil liberties.

We are too fensible of the bleffing of peace, not to feel the greatest concern at any event which threatens to interrupt its continuance, and defeat your Majesty's wife and gracious purpose to maintain it. But, graveful as we are for this proof of your Majefty's paternal regard to the repole and happiness of your people, we owe your Majesty no less thanks for your anxious vigilance over the honour of your crown, and the in-

We return your Majesty our most thankful acknowledgments, as well for the immediate demand, se, diffinct from that of which your Majesty has been pleased to make from the court of Spain, of fatisfaction for the injury received, as for the inflant preparations that your Majefty made to do yourfelf justice, in case your requisition should fail of procuring it. And we are exceedingly happy to be affored, that your Majesty will think it expeyour Majesty's most duti- dient to continue prepared to all and loyal subjects, the affert the honour of your crown, and the fecurity of the rights of your people, upon an event for deeply affecting both, until the inft gracious speech from the jury shall be properly repaired, and fatisfactory proof be given of the grecers

254] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Some resolution of other powers to preserve the general tranquillity of Europe. We, on our part, beg leave to assure your Majesty, that we will not fail to make the utmost efforts in our power to maintain objects so justly dear to us, as the dignity of your Majesty's crown, and the security of the national rights.

rights.

We are very happy to be informed, that the people in most of your Majesty's colonies in North America are departing from those combinations which were calculated to distress the commerce of this kingdom; and we hope soon to see an entire end of those unwarrantable practices which have so long oppressed your Majesty's subjects in one of those provinces.

We are highly sensible of your Majesty's goodness and care, in taking such precautions to secure this country against the visitation of that satal calamity, which has of late appeared in some of the distant parts of Europe; and we shall always be ready to concur in any measures that shall be sound necessary to the support of your Majesty's endeavours for so salutary a purpole.

We have the most grateful sense of your Majesty's savourable opinion of our constant endeavours to promote the true interest of this country. We will, in all our deliberations upon points of a domestic nature, exert ourselves for the extension of our commerce, the improvement of the revenue, and the maintenance of order and government: and we statter ourselves, that your Majesty will not be disappointed in the gracious expectations you have formed of our zeal, in the support of your jesty's crown, and the reput and prosperity of your doms.

His Majesty's most gracious As

My Lords,

It gives me great satisfactifind, that you entertain so sense of the importance of while that desirable object committee object committee of maintained consistently with honour of my crown, and rights of my people. You may pend upon my best endeavous preserve that inestimable blasso long as it is compatible objects still more essential thappiness and prosperity okingdoms.

The affectionate part you ta the happy delivery of the Q and the increase of my fa gives me much pleasure.

The humble Address of the Bu Commons to the King.

Most gracious Sovereign,

White the pour Majesty's most tiful and loyal subjects

Commons of Great-Britain is liament assembled, return Majesty our humble thanks your most gracious speech from throne.

We beg leave to offer to Majesty our congratulations of happy delivery of her Majesty on the birth of another principle esteeming every increase of Majesty's royal family, an tional security for the continuous that happiness which we already experienced under i spicious government.

STATE PAPERS.

ing the many proofs we have id of your Majesty's contention to the welfare and ity of your people, your y's earnest defire to continue the bleffings of peace could I to inspire us with sentiof gratitude and affection:
a could have reaped little tissaction from the enjoyof those bleffings, had we not same time been able to place test considence in your Mathat you would never be in-by a mistaken tenderness prefent cale of your people, ifice their more effential and lating interests. These we but confider as having been oully ftruck at, by the vioately committed by a Spanish or upon one of your Mapolletions. Under these ciraces, your Majetty's deteron to make an immediate d from the court of Spain of tisfaction as you had a right the fame time to the necessary preparations to de, without delay, for enyour Majesty to do yourself in cale your requilition to ert of Spain Could fail to ; it, demands our most hearty viedgments; and we rejoice that your MajeRy will not imee thefe preparations until ill have received a proper rea for the injury, as well as lory proof that other powers sally fincere with your Maa the refolution to preferve neral tranquillity. In the tion of this your Majesty's , your Majetty will not be inted in your expectation of ag from your faithful Comvery degree of support which in the progress of this very important business will become requisite: with this view, we shall enter without delay into the consideration of the supplies for the ensuing year; and whatever extraordinary expences the public service shall require, we will chearfully provide for, in such manner as may be least burthensome to your Majesty's subjects.

[255

In confidering the state of your Majesty's colonies in North America, we will neglect no means of securing the commercial interests of this kingdom, or of providing for the protection of your Majesty's good subjects there from every degree of violence and oppression.

We return your Majefty our unfeigned thanks, for the timely precautions you have used, for guarding against the introduction of that fatal contagion which has of lase appeared in some of the distant parts of Europe. And while, with your Majefty, we place our ustimate reliance upon the Divine Providence for our preservation from so great a calamity, we shall consider it as our indispensable duty to make use of every reasonable precaution which human foresight can suggest to us.

We affure your Majesty, that we will apply ourselves with all doe diligence to the dispatch of the public business; in which we will not fail theadily to pursue those great ends recommended to us by your Majesty in your speech from the throne, as well as by your royal example. And if any hopes should have been conceived, or it may have been any where surmised, that among your Majesty's people there were any such differences substituting, as could in the least degree abate the ardour of their affectionate attachment for your Majefty, or prevent their joining. as one man, in seconding your Majefty's views, for maintaining unsallied the lustre of your crown, and preserving undiminished the rights of your people, we doubt not, by our proceedings, to convince the world how false and injurious are all such surmises; and to make it manifest, that, whenever we are called upon in the cause of our king and country, there will be but one heart and one voice among your faithful Commons.

256] ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

[: j

ARACTERS.

tans: from the account of into Siberia, made by King of France. By the Chappe D'Aute-ish Royal Academy of Paris.

more relations, and no claim any connection yal family. A foreign wing found that the Woronzof was related as Elizabeth, went immed complimented her we, which he thought any of political imporpers turned pale, he was miliaken.

arbidden, on pain of sep any coin stamped age of the young Iwan. dared not play with sch bear the impression Ign. One cannot pass calace, facing the emments, without pulsa hat, or letting down one is in a carriage; an exposed to insults there. Any person write the name of the mall characters upon a down to be liable to be sented for it.

dug circumstances are erely to give an idea of the extent of the absolute power of Russian monarchs.

The roberty dare not come near the throne werent fear and trembling. They are bunished into Siberia for the flightest political intrigue, and their possessions being confiferted, one whole family thus falls a victim to the artful infinuations of the courtier. was at St. Petersburgh, I was one day on a vifit at the house of a ftranger, who was in office; being defirous of information, I asked whether the prince Iwan was living or not: it was immediately whispered in my ear, that in Rusfia no one spoke of that princes We were, however, no more than three Frenchmen in the rooms which was upwards of thirty feet fquare. On the eve of the death of the empress Elizabeth, no one dated to enquire concerning her health; and when the was dead, though it was univertally known, ver every body was afraid to speak

The mutual diffrust, in which people live in Russia, and the total alence of the nation upon every thing which may have the least relation either to the government, or to the sovereign; arises chiefly from the privilege every Russian has, without distriction, of crying out in public, Struet Diese; that is to say, I declare you goilty of R high treason both in words and actions. All the bystanders are then obliged to assist in taking up the person accused. A father arrests his son, and the son his sather, and nature suffers in silence. The accused, and the accuser, are both conveyed immediately to prison, and afterwards to St. Petersburgh, where they are tried by the secret court of chancery.

This tribunal, composed of a few ministers chosen by the sovereign, leaves the lives and fortunes of all families at their mercy. This jurisdiction is of so odious a nature, that a subject, who shall even be indifferent to these agents of tyranny, is often found guilty, although the accuser should not be able to bring convincing proofs of the crime; and this happens chiefly when the impeacher answers for the guilt of the person accused, with his own shoulders; that is to fay, submits to receive the punishment of the knout. If he bears this without recanting, the person accused is found guilty, comdemned to death, and part of his estate forfeited to the accuser. If some · very extraordinary circumitances indicate the innocence of the perfon accused, the impeacher is then punished a second time. also punished, but only once, when, not having demanded the trial of the knowt, he is found incapable of proving the guilt of the man whom he impeaches.

This jurisdiction has been established, merely that tyranny might enjoy the privilege of facrificing all such persons as have become the object of despotic jealousy. It was therefore necessary that the crime of the false accuser should not be punished with death; and the punishment of the knout was al made milder in his favour.

The nobility, thus bowed the yoke of the most dressery, do not fail to retain on the people: the people saves to them, to the sover or to the waywodes who rephim.

Two kinds of saves are a guished in Russia among th ple; some belong to the sove others to the nobility. only pay tribute to the en the others both to the fove and to their lord. The nob timate their riches by the ni of farmers which belong to The flaves of the crown pay the royal treasury, the sum (hundred and ten copecs, or shillings and seven-pence of glish money, and the other two shillings and eleven-per The lords i the crown. what tax they please upon flaves, and sometimes seize the imall fortune they may acquired by their abilities. If flaves, by cultivating the lan by industry, do not get enou pay the lord, he allows the hire themselves to strangers, or other persons have no flaves. For this pr he gives them a paffport on a few years. The flave is o to remit his wages annually lord, who gives him up wi thinks proper out of them.

The lords sell their slav cattle is sold in other parts world. They chuse out si mong them the number of si they want; and treat ther great inhumanity. They sallowed a civil power of li death over their servants, an over their other flaves; but as have the privilege of punishthem with the padogi, they them chaffixed in such a manthat they may be faid, in to have acquired the right of ng them to death.

weighty offences, a lord, acmg to law, ought to bring his to be tried at the ordinary 3 of juftice. In 1761, the fepublished an edict, whereby re lords were allowed to fend flaves they were displeased to work in the mines; but mds prefer, and will ever do taffizing them at home, and mg them to themselves.

s sobility of Ruffa never into the priefihood; fo that is no intermediate flate in sociefiatical body, which is up entirely of the common e, or the children of the t, who are often the most dif-; so that the ignorance and vity of the Ruffian clergy are atural confequences of their tving received any principles ecation. Their power was rous only in the times of the tive church, as they were then ter conflituted body; and be whole nation was inflamed teal, which is no where to and at prefent, but among wer class of people.

s common people are bigoten to fanaticifm in favour of reck religion: this extravaincreases the farther we get he capital; but thefe very are fo little acquainted with eligion, that they are perthey fulfil all its duties, by ring with some external cees, and especially by keep-: Lent falls with the great-oft firidinefe. In other respecte, they give themselves up to debauchery and to every kind of vice. Morality is left to be met with among the Russians, than among the Pagans their neighbours. The opinions of the Russians, with regard to Christianity, are to extraordinary, that it thould feem as if that religion, fo well adapted in itself for the happiness and good order of fociety, had only ferved to make this people more wicked. A murderer being taken and condemned, and being afted in the course of his trial whether he had kept the Lent fasta; appeared as much furprized, as the most up-right man would have been, if his honesty had been called in queftion. He immediately answered with warmth, that he was incapable of neglecting the duties of his religion. Yet this very man. was at the head of a fet of suffans, and whenever they feized upon any travellers, he readily gave up all the booty to his companions, if they did but deliver him thefe unhappy victims alive. He first undreft them, and tied them naked to a tree, without any regard to their fex; he then opened their breast near the heart, and drank their blood. He declared, that he took great pleafure in feeing the dreadful contortions and convulfions of these wretched people. This fact, though it may feem fearce credible, was told me by some Russians.

Such examples are rarely to be met with in Russia; and I have mentioned this only to thew that, in this country, less attention has been given to form the manners of the people by religion, than to oblige them to observe certain ceremonies,

monies, which do not always improve the morals of mankind.

The men in Siberia are tall, stout, and well made, as they are almost all over Russia: they are excessively fond of women and drinking. As they are slaves to a despotic prince, they exert the same absolute authority over their slaves or inferiors, with still greater severity.

The women are in general handfome at Tobolsky: their skin is exceedingly fair, and their countenance agreeable: their eyes are black, languishing and down-cast; for they never dare look a man full in the face: they wear no caps, but use coloured handkerchiefs, which they interweave fo curiously among their hair, generally black and unpowdered, that this kind of head-dress gives them a very bewitching look. They all use paint, young girls as well as married women; and this custom prevails even among the scrvant maids, and some of the common people.

The women are commonly wellmade till the age of eighteen or twenty; but their legs as well as their feet are always large. Nature in this respect seems to have had in view the bulk they usually acquire; which seems to want very firm supporters.

The baths, they use twice a week, contribute chiefly to spoil their shapes: they cause such a relaxation in all the parts of the body, that the beauty of the women is quite gone before they are thirty years of age.

Their dress at present is very much like that which is in use throughout Europe. The mens' dress is exactly the same at Tobosiky, and all over Ruffia. Some merchants, the noblemens' flewards, and the common men are almost the only persons who have kept to the old drefs, as well as to the custom of wearing the beard. I saw only a few gentlemen at Tobolsky, who had been disgraced, still conforming to these old customs, which they certainly had lately taken up agzin. The dress of the women at Toboliky (I except the head-dress) differs from that used in Europe, only in our peculiar fashions, with which they are unacquainted; they generally wear a loose gown like a domisa On public days, their gowns are much like the robes formerly work in France. This dress came from St. Petersburgh to Tobolsky.

The men, as well as the women, are generally richly dreffed: they get their stuffs and filks from Mosco, and sometimes from China; but at Toboliky, as throughout Russia, both the sexes are very uncleanly, notwithstanding baths they use twice a week. The women change their lines but kldom; and are unacquainted with that variety of undress, to which the Europeans are accustomed; and which is often more bewitching than the richest ornaments; fo that there are few opportunities of being present at the toilet of the Russian women.

In the houses of people of the first rank at Tobolsky, as in mode other parts of Russia, there is but one bed for the husband and wife, and sometimes one for the children; all other persons in the house lie promiscuously upon benches or upon mats, which they spread on the

There are no curtains is; and instead of a bol bushand and wife have tem seven or eight pul less than the other, raisform of two pyramids.

is generally the princi of furniture. Sometimes at Tobolsky in bed ne wooden chairs, a large a small table.

whole city of Tobolky.

net a fingle house that carpeting in it; some ced one upon another, smoother than common,
thes and a few worden
de up all the furniture partments.

boiks men are very jeaheir wives, as they are at the greater part of beyond the city of Mosco, they are seldom in comthem; spending most of in drinking, and geneing home drunk. The eldem go out; they live questered from society, to is zinets and indolence, the causes of the detheir manners.

from feanbility, and aich the feverett virtue wave guard itself, is here known.

fering the confusion and fairs mistrefs, endeavourunable, to conceal her tendernefs. Such fituations see pever met with in Siberia, nor in the greatest part of Russia, where the polithed manners of the rest of Europe have not vet prevailed. In thele barbarous regions, men tyrannize over their wives, whom they confider and treat as their flaves, requiring of them the most fervile offices; in their matrimonial engagements they are obliged to bring them a handful of rods. in great ceremony, and to pull off their boots, as a token of the superiority of the husband, and the subjection of the wife. Availing themfelves more than any where elfe of their superior power, they have established the most unjust laws. which neither the beauty por delicacy of the fex have yet been able to abolifh or foften. We are not therefore to be furprised, that that delicacy of fentiment which characterizes the people of more civilized nations, is fo rarely to be met with here. If such women are worth the attempt, boldness is often fufficient to infure fucceis: but opportunities of this kind teldom occur, as wemen are fearce ever feen, but when their hufbands are pretent; and if the least attention is shewn them on these occations, it is very probable one may not ice them a fecond time.

I saw some foreigners at Toboliky, who had been there ever since the beginning of the last war; unacquainted with the customs of the country, they often experienced disagreeable consequences

Is, the people of quality tiful to be upon boards or benches, on a cather covering was special; there was no institute in the locates; less times were reverse with a croth at meals. M. de Voltaire, la Ruille, tem. 1. j 2/2-20.

from the idea that women were to be treated with the same politeneis and attention here, as in the rest of Europe. They atterwards became more cautious, being convinced of the necessity of taking no notice of the ladies before their husbands; and joining in with the convivial pleasures of the latter, foon found means of being admitted to greater familiarities with their wives in private. Thus the depravity of the fex in Rusha is owing to the tyranny of the men.

The women are captivated merely by sensual pleasures, often giving themselves up to their slaves; among which they take care to thuse such as are most healthy and tobust.

The manners of this people will never be improved, while the women are kept in a state of slavery, and do not partake of the pleafures of fociety. Although the men are remarkably severe to their wives, yet are they very indulgent to their daughters. think that married women should be entirely taken up with their husbands, but that greater liberty may be allowed to the unmarried, thereby to give them opportunities of getting husbands: they very soon avail themselves of this freedom, without the consent of their parents, or the fanction of the At twelve or thirteen years they are frequently no itrangire to the other tex; but fuch is the inconfidency of this people, that they expect their daughters should still be virtuous, while they all w them such liberty, as ought ever to be regulated by a good education; they also pretend to determine, with an ablolute certainty, whether their danger still virgins; this is done jury of skilful women, who mine this matter by tricked examination, win other countries, would be sidered as very indecent.

On the day appointed for marriage ceremony, after th ties have been joined by as in our church, the lady rents give an elegant supp which the husband's family fent, some friends, and a cian, who comes with an inte counteract the witchcraft might be practifed by other cians, to prevent the confu tion of the marriage. married couple, attended by a father and a godmother, are ducted with the greatest cere into the nuptial chamber l supper.

The magicianwalks first, the father follows conducting the t the bridegroom gives his to the godmother, and the b man his to the husband's B female relation, who is one jury, which is generally com of three or four women. this procession to the ni apartment every thing is go dy for the feast in the room the company stays; who wait the return of the married c to begin their mirth; being roughly persuaded, that the fion of the jury will be favor to the bride.

The marriage chamber colin general nothing but a which is usually very near without curtains; the image-by the godfather and godn to the married couple; a chairs, and a table, with t dy, and glaffes, near which matron is placed.

procession having reached ringe chamber, the matron to bride a waiter, on which sees filled with brandy and quors: the bride then present to the magician first, erwards to the whole comband; the magician press magic art; the bride is ndressed, and left with a stricoat and an under-waistly; both of them made on for this day, which is conto voluptuouineis. The com is also undressed, and own thrown over him: the en kiffes all the company offers them again a glass dy; and when every body nk a second time, they rean antichamber, leaving ried couple alone with the , who affiks at the ceremowhich the is the more in-, as the receives a reward ady is acknowledged to be ; whereas the is obliged, ontrary happens, to drink broken glats, in the midit company, which is confia mark of ignominy.

confummation, the jury in is called in, who strip e quite naked, in order to thether the was a virgin.

thall here pass by the hat are given to the comon this occasion, in conof the lady's chastity.]

all the company is pertisfied, the lady dances w minutes with her hufid every body fits quickly the table, where most of commonly get drunk.

were feveral marriages

while I stayed at Tobolsky; but I could never get any admission to any of the seasts; one lady in particular, otherwise a very amiable woman, was always against it; saying, she was assaid I should think their ceremony ridiculous, and give an account of it to the public. In my way from Tobolsky back again to St. Petersburgh, I was invited to a wedding, and appointed bridesman, so that I had then an opportunity of seeing the whole transaction.

European manners have gained very little ground in Russia; because they are not conformable to the despotism of the government; they have nevertheless introduced loxary, and brought on a communication between Russians and foreigners; which has only contributed to make the Russians more unhappy, by giving them an opportunity of comparing their state of slavery, with that of a free people.

As I have feen the Ruffians at the distance of eight hundred leagues from court, I have been enabled to acquire a competent knowledge of this people.

Upon the whole, there is very little fociety in Russia, especially beyond Mosco; neither is it posfible there should be much, under a government where no man enjoys that civil liberty, by which the fafety of the citizen, in other countries, is secured. A mutual fear prevails among individuals; from hence ariles miltruft, difguile, and deceit. Frendship, that fentiment which contributes to the happiness of our lives, has never been known in Ruffia; it fuppofes a fenfibility which makes an abfilute union of the two friends, and effusions of the heart, which divide their pleasures and pains reciprocally. As the men have but little respect for the women beyond Mosco, they are not attended to in company, although company is nothing without them. They are almost always confined to their houses; where they pass their tedious days among their slaves, without authority and without employment; they do not even enjoy the fatisfaction of reading, for most of them know not how to read. The men are as ignorant They visit now as the women. and then with great ceremony: the governors and chief magistrates give grand dinners several times in a year. Relations also meet now and then, to keep the feast of their family faint; but they feldom admit any person at these feasts, who is not one of the family. great entertainments, both men and women are invited together, but they neither fit at the same table, nor in the same room. mistress of the house does not appear in the mens' apartments, till they are just sitting down to dinner: she brings in with her a large waiter covered with glasses full of brandy; which she presents, in a very submissive manner, to all the guests, who do not even look at her; the glasses are returned to her, and the withdraws immediately.

B 4

There are always a great number of people at these seatis; to which persons of all stations are invited. Officers, clergy, magificates, and merchants, are all placed at the same table; but with this difference, that rank is more strictly attended to than in any German court. Military men are placed according to their & ranks: and persons of other fessions are disposed in the manner; no regard is pubirth.

All the dishes are served once. Their soup is made to ting the meat into small pithe broth. They have so gouts, which nobody who used to can eat of. The generally covered with severamids of roast meat; most composed of different key game, the rest of butcher Chinese sweatmeats are see at the same time, and son of the fruits of the country

Their manner of fitting ble, and their customs, be very similar to those who vail in some districts of Go but they have adopted only diculous parts of them, who have even rendered still more culous. A prosound silent served during dinner; the interrupted only at times healths that are drank.

As soon as they sit dow ble, each man pours into some of the made-wind mentioned before; and rise to drink each others Each guest is drank to christian and surname; an of wine is swallowed to e son's health.

I have bren at some of the ners, where there were make fixty people all drinking other at the same time. attitudes, and the consus ferent sounds had a very effect. Peter not being make James hear him, was ing himself over the tall bayling out as loud as he te inflant, he was inter-Francis, who was bowm, or by a knock of the i Philip, who was turnt from right to left withtiving the posture Peter Philip's torn came next: i lifting his glafs to his iis neighbour gave him a elbow, and spilling part e, interrupted him at the erefting moment. Such thefe, varied in different ere repeated almost at t of the table; and the y of them was enhanced, wing the impatience of he people. As to myfelf, ever had an opportunity ng any one's health; but head in constant motion, tht and left, and forwards. koned a qualification to e opportunity to feafono drink to every person's without descending from nity, or meeting with any rft health being over, every down, and is at liberty to few moments. Glass tuma cylindrical form, fix igh, and four wide, are a different parts of the taery guest within reach of ese tumblers, takes it up ks out of it: it would be very unpolite, if he was glass, in order to avoid out of the same tumbler ighbour. This cuftom is difagreeable, but at the ie very dangerous, on acthe fourvy, which is exfrequent in Russa the company has eat for minutes, the Emperor's oes round. This toast is given in a different manner. large glass bottle, to which there is alfo a glafs top, is placed on the table before the person of the highest rank. This person rises from his seat, as well as his right-hand neighbour, to whom he gives the head of the bottle, and pouring fome wine into the cup, gives out the Emperor's health, bowing to the whole company. As foon as he has drank, he gives the bottle te his neighbour, who passes the top to the person fitting next to him. All the company drink the Emperor's health in the (ame manner, while a band of mulicians is employed in finging fongs adapted to the ceremony.

The healths of the princes and princesses of the royal family are then drank in the fame order, and eating goes on for a little time longer.

The healths of all the gueffs are then carried round, with another glass bottle, which is not so beautiful as the first, and is covered with a cruft of bread.

This toult goes round nearly in the fame way as the former, except that when the lid of the bottle is given to one's neighbour, it is ufust at the fame time to tell him the christian and furname of the person whose health is going round; and this must be repeated, making a bow to him; this custom is very troublesome to firangers, as the Russians have generally three or four christian names. This ceremony is carried on with the utmost gravity, and one must be very exact in the whole detail, which extends all round the table. However defirous I was of being exact, yet I was always puzzled when the toalt came to me. I used to forget the number of faints named to me, most of which were never inrolled in our list. I was however verv much mortified at this. Besides, I had usually for my neighbour a Russian, who was a very strict observer of rules; he had acquired by his exactness a right of presiding over the police of the table, and was very much out of temper, whenever any one was deficient in This gentleman was this point. so obliging as to fet me right frequently; but on one occasion he was as much puzzled as myself, when two crusts of bread were presented to me from each side, one of which had fell several times, contrary to order, into the plates and into the bottle. Not knowing whom I was to answer, nor what I was to do with these two cruits, I referred the whole affair to him, and fat down. He was informed, that, the company confifing of fixty geefts, a second bottle had been called for, to hairen the ceremony; but he decided, that it was better to be detained two hours longer at table, than to neglect any of the usual forms.

the

At last, the company rose from table, and went into another room. I imagined at first, that the dinner was over, and that we were now to drink a fier; but was much furprized at the fight of a table covered with Chinese sweetments. Four urvants whited for the company, with bottles of mend, beer, and different lieuors made with brandy. Other, brought in wurters with giast s. The company then fet in for drinking gain; and from this time ceremony was at as cred. The Ruffland, though accullomed to this manuer of living, feldom bear the quantity of liquors drank after dinner, which are not only very firong, but the drinking is also incessantly continued till the evening. If the company chuses to take a walk, the bottles and glasses are carried along with them; and this is looked upon as doing the honours cempletely.

Some travellers affert, that the women as well as the men give themselves up to all the excelles of drinking; but I have always feen the contrary. The women, after dinner, remain in the same room, growing tired of one another; for it is impossible it should be otherwise, where thirty women meet together without one man.

There is no other kind of social amusement in use throughout the whole nation, from Mosco to Tobolsky; they dance sometimes, but that is very rare, except at weddings.

It is about fifty years fince the womenat Mosco and St. Petersburgh have thaken off the yoke of flavery. to which they were subjected by their hulbands. Before that time, they lived, and were treated in the fame way as in other parts of Rutia. If the manners have not been much bettered from this change, it is owing to their excessive depravity before it took place. Throughout Ruffia in general, a man has much to answer for, if he is but agreeabie.

Mosco appeared to me preferable, in many respects, to St. Petersburgh. The city of Mosco not leng more than two hundred thort le guesalflantiromSt.Petersburgh, the poverners are too near the foveleign, to be tyrannical; and the inhabitants far enough from the feat of government, not to be afraid

of a fcaffold for flight inone of fociety . Pleasure at after at Mosco, while the auts can hardly venture to f it at St. Peterfburgh.

common people in Ruffia, no ideas of liberty, are ess anhappy than the nobles. , they have but few withes, niconently their wants are hey are unacquainted with adustry or commerce, espeeyond Mofco. The Ruthan no property of his own, is indifferent to every thing might better his fortune. to nobles, who are conflantly r of banishment, and of their estates confiscated; so much employed in img them, as they are in expeto raise a speedy supply of noney, to gratify their preclinations.

Ruffian country people live ery indifferent kind of food; refore, readily giving way to s in their floves, they pals wes in the debaucheries of and brandy, which liquor it they are not always able cure. If we were to judge a merely from the languid ey lead, it might be imathat they have but few cunning, and greater rogues markably dextrous at thicyphers have afcribed to the northern nations; the Ruffian peafants are, on the contrary, pufillanimous and cowardly to an incredible degree.

There are no principles of morality among them; they are more afraid of neglecting the lent faits, than of murdering a fellow-creature, especially if he is a foreigner: for they do not reckon foreigners among the number of their brethren.

The Ruffian and the Polish slave feem to differ from each other in every respect : the Ruffian neglects agriculture; is generally immoral, crafty nd fubtle. On the contrary, the Polish slave takes a pleafare in cultivating the land : he is moral, and flupid. These contrarieties feem to me fufficiently accounted for from the different conflitution of the two nations, exclufive of other causes, which may possibly have contributed to establish chem.

The flave in Poland is in posfestion of lands which are his own property; it is natural, therefore, he should delight in improving them; fince by that he is enabled to fatisfy all his wants, and to enjoy the comforts of life, without having recourse to criminal actions. He is moreover subject to a set of on the contrary, they are free nobles, who may venture, in every instance, to be virtuous with ly other notion. They are impunity. If he is stupid, it is because he is enslaved. The Rus-They are not endowed with han flave not having one inch of surage which some philoso- ground at his own disposal, agriculture

de Montesquieu observes, in the 12th chapter of his 13th book, wherewate of indiffreet words, that in the manifests published by the late , againd the Olgoroutki family in 1740, one of those princes is feno death for having used some inderent expressions about the Czarina's another for having milinterpreted ner wife regulations for the good of ire, and for having offended her facred person by words not fufficiently rulture is indifferent to him; he is willing to enjoy himself, and is fond of drinking brandy; but as he can seldom get it without thest, or trespassing against the laws, the sear of punishment makes him cautious and subtle.

Slavery has fet aside all the rights of nature among the Russians; the human species is in Russia a commercial article, sometimes sold st a very low price; children are often forced from their mothers arms to be fold to perfons given up to debauchery. The joy which other people conceive on the birth of their legitimate children is here This event, on the contrary, is a forrowful one to a young woman, who knows that her child may be taken away from her, at the instant that he is playing on her knee; the fuckles him, and takes a great deal of trouble in bringing him up; he grows, and the time draws near when the is in continual apprehension of Ding him: the never can flatter berself that, in this beloved child, the thall find a support and a friend in herold age. If when fomewhat farther advanced in life, the child perceives the tears starting from his mother in consequence of these dreadful reflections, he asks her the reason, presses her cheeks between his little hande, foothes her with killer, and at length mixes his tears with hers.

The meanest animals enjoy the tappiness cansed by the birth of their young: Man, in Russia, is the only being who cannot partake of it. This depravity stifles all principles of humanity, and all kind of fentiment. Going, on my return from Tobolsky, to St. Petersburgh, into a house where I was to lodge, I found a father chained to a post in the middle of his family: by his cries, and the little regard his children paid to him, I imagined he was mad; but this was by no means the case. In Russ, people who are sent to raise recruits, go through all the villages; and pitch upon the men proper for the service, as butchers, in all other parts, go into the stables to mark the sheep. This man's soa had been selected for the service, and had made his escape without the father's knowledge; the father was made a prisoner in his own house; his children were his gaolers, and he was in daily expectation of receiving his fentence. I was fo much shocked with this account, and with the scene I beheld, that I was forced to feek another lodging immediately.

This practice has made the Ruffians cruel and inhuman: they are animals whom their masters think they must crush with a rod of iron, while they continue under the yoke.

The Russian nobility, having cruel and wicked slaves constantly before their eyes, have acquired a severity which is not natural to them; as they crouch before their sovereign, to their superiors, and to all those from whom they have any thing

The common people in Russia are at present so corrupt, that they must be kept in a three of rigid tervitude value they continue entlaved: but any man who allows himself to reflect, will easily conceive, that, with proper care, they might be removed to identy, without having any thing to fear from some seconveniencies which may be thought to follow at first. While they are slaves, key will ever be vicious.

tpect, they exercise the crover all persons subject thority, or who have not to resist them.

nmon people in Ruffia hing to contest with the one might reasonably find happinels among In all other parts of the country people get in holidays: the fathers public house, oftentimes m their labours under the tree, and indulging in a lafs; they discourse about their flock, and fome-· convertation turns upon thile a wretched fidler, a cask, makes their chilifitely happy.

salores are unknown in e common people dance hen, chiefly on certain e Carnival; when they r given up to debauchery ennels: fo that one can ture to travel at such a fear of being ill treated The peafants in Rufly flay in their floves on anding at the door withany exercise: laziness is t pleafure they have, next and drinking. If a Ruft has got a little money, the public house by hims it, and gets drunk in a es: he is then no longer his fortune being taken all conclude this article ecount our author gives, gress which the arts and we hitherto made in Rusafcended the throne of 1689; and immediately chiga of enlightening

his nation, funk in ignorance for more than feven hundred years paft. He undertook s journey into Europe, that he might become acquainted with the arts and fciences, and with every circumfance which could possibly tend to complete the defignabe had formed. In the ceurle of his journey, nothing escaped his notice; he vifited the learned; he fought out the artift in his manufactory; made himfelf mafter of the art, and being thereby enabled to judge of the abilities of the artists, engaged them in his fervice, whenever he found them to excel.

All the fovereign powers interefled themselves warmly in promoting the schemes of this great man; numbers of learned men and artists of all kinds, from the several parts of Europe, fet out for Ruffia. Peter I. on his return into his own dominions, raised public buildings confecrated to the Arts and Sciences. Eftablifhments, which in Europe were formed by degrees, arose in Russia all at once: the nobility laid aude their beards, as well as their ancient manner of drefs: the women, before confined wholly to their houses, now made their appearance in public meetings, unknown in Ruffia till this period. The court became brilliant. Peter J. seemed to have formed a new nation, though he had made no alteration in the political constitution of the government: the nation remained in a state of flavery, which he fill made He forced all the more fevere. nobility, without distinction, to serve in the army. A number of young flaves were chosen out from among the people, and fixed in the academies and schools: of these fome

some were destined to literature, others designed for the arts and sciences, without any regard to their particular talents or inclination. Peter himself visited the academies and the manufactories; and often took the plane and the chisel in his own hands; but snatched the pencil from the hands of a young artist, who was painting Armida in the arms of Rinaldo, and ordered him to be flogged. The successors of Peter I. purfued the same plan; the Academy of Sciences however gained a 1eputation; Bernouilli, Delisse, Herman and Euler kept up the credit they had acquired in other countries; the Arts shone forth with some kind of splendor; but the Academy lost its repute, and the Arts sensibly decreased, as the great men first invited into Russia, either died or left the country. The fovereigns still continued to supply their subjects with able masters, and to encourage and protect men of abilities; but not with Randing the lo advantages, not one Russan has appeared in the course of more than fixty years, whose name deserves to be recorded in the hillory of the Arts and Sciences.

Men of abilities, invited into Russia from sereign parts, appear mostly to be discouraged, and not to persevere in their studies with the same earnestness as they did in their own country. In the year 1761, several foreigners of the first rank in the republic of letters, belonged to the Academy of St. Petersburgh; among these may be mentioned M. Epiney, L. man, Braun, Tauber, Stelin, and Muler, formerly secretary to the Academy, and at present director of a school at Mosco, as I was informed at my return into strance. The late Mr. Loman sow, a Russian, was a man of genius; and would have made a considerable sigure in any other Academy. Mr. Rumouski, as yet too young a man to have acquired any great degree of reputation, is possessed of great natural abilities, and a thirst after knowledge, very uncommon among the Russians.

Notwithstanding this number of learned men, it should seem as if genius in most of them was weakened, as soon as they came into Russia, so that the academies and schools seem to derive their chief credit from the names only of the learned which are in Russia. The annals of the Sciences surnish incontestible proofs of this affertion, and any man who has not examined these, may be convinced of this truth, by consulting thousands of travellers, who have resided at St. Petersburgh, and at Mosco.

This state of the Arts and Sciences in Russia implies a defect, the cause of which must be fought for, either in a want of genius peculiar to the nation, or in the nature of the government, and the climate. A philosopher *, whose name will be held in veneration by the latest posterity, speaking of the difference of men with respect to climate, represents the people of the North as having coarfer organs, and being animated with fluids of a groffer kind, better adap ed to produce large robul hodies than men of genius; but this philosopher would have us confides

· Montesquieu, liv. xiv. chap. ii.

15

m, at the fame time, tve, fimple, unreferved, people, without po-It, having few vices, virtues, a great deal and honefty, and whole are not very amorous. ravelled in Russa, I e met with a people at from what I expected on the ideas of this ceilosopher. It must be vever, that, in what he i this fubject, he has he people of the North tly of their government; To far altered the nature tuffia, by fubduing even ies which are leaft unatroul of the authority sign, that it is extremely fcertain the distinguisher of the nation; and his reason that I have ifined myfelf to the relas upon this point.

it of invention is as unnong the Ruffians, as it they have a peculiar imitation. In Russia, , maions, carpenters, &c. as a foldier is in other Each regiment has, in irps, all the necessary l is not obliged to have manufactures, as is the y where elfe. They dethe stature, what employa is most fit for. They ier a lock for a pattern, t to make others like it, es it with the greatest but the original must be berwife he would copy ts defects, however ealy to correct them. The se observed with regard id workmen of all kinds.

This particular talent of the Russians is so remarkable, that one may see it prevail in the nation, immediately on coming into Russia. One may easily perceive, that the Russians possess it in so eminent a degree, that they might have been formed into a very different people from what they are at present.

I have observed that the Russians were naturally chearful; that they have the true spirit of society, and that they delight in it; these circumstances are evident in the Russians who travel into foreign countries. Why then is a Russian, at least in some respects, so different from what he might be? The nature of education, and of the government, will furnish the solution of this problem.

In a good government, the education of children should be directed to virtue, the love of our country, and the happiness of icciety. Such an education is intimately connected with the political system of a good government; but it supposes that the interest of the fovereign should be the same as that of the nation. The regularity and harmony of a good administration confills in the relations and exact combinations of thefe two interests; this constitutes the power of the fovereign, and the happinels of the people. Hence arifes that love of our country, which induces every citizen to confiler the good of the nation as his own; public gratitude infpires and keeps up the love of fame, brings forth great men, and infures them the veneration of posterity.

The love of fame and of our country is unknown in Ruffia; despotism debases the mind, damps the genius, and fistles every kind of fentiment. In Russia no person dares venture to think; the soul is so much debased, that its faculties are destroyed. Fear is almost the only passion by which the whole nation is actuated.

I have seen in their schools, a young mathematician studying Euclid with a piece of wood fastened to his neck; and masters commanding abilities, as an army is taught to exercise.

I was told by a famous foreign artist, who had the direction of one of these schools, that he once found among his pupils one of a superior genius. Delirous of pushing a young man forward, who might do him honour, he took great care in instructing him; he was well pleased to observe the daily improvements of his pupil; but in a little time the young man Hopt short. The artist, having tried to encourage him by all kinds of mild proceedings, asked him at last in a very friendly manner, why ne had taken a dialike to his business. I am, answered the young man, flave to M. when he hads that I am a proficient, he will oblige me to work in his own house, where I shall meet with such ill treatment, that I had much rather live in the same manner as my comp dians.

I have known several persons who were persuaded that the Russians were incapable of making any confiderable improvements in any thing. I think this opinion is entirely groundless; such factors I have been relating of this young slave, have given rise to this miltake. These facts, on the contrary, imply at least a great share of judgment.

The government has attempted niencies, by ordering that all perfons who should distinguish themselves at the schools, should no longer be slaves to their lords, but should belong to the state. In this case, the lords will either avoid sending their slaves to the schools, or will find some means of keeping them to themselves, so that they must still remain in a state of slavery.

I could mention a number of facts of the same kind as the former, of which I have been witnels; but I shall pass them over, to avoid giving offence to some persons at present in Russia. The fatal effects of despotism are extended over all the arts, all the manufactures, and are conveyed into all the work shops. The artist are chained down to their work. This I have feen frequently, especially at Mosco, and it is with such workmen that the Russians imagine they can imitate the manufactories of Lyons.

Some account of the Tartars of Kalan, under the government of Russ.

From the jume.

A length I came to Birna, a village inhabited by Tartars; many of whom came out to meet me, at the distance of a werst from the village, expressing, by signs, their great desire to serve me. It was evident from the candor and tranquillity observable in their countenances, that these professions were sincere; so that I followed them without any apprehensions. They placed themselves before my carriage, and conducted me to the house of the chief person in the village, e, who was held in great tion among them; his merit is virtues had entitled him le over them, without the of an election. They had red a kind of dinner for me, ting of honey, butter, and a Their bouses are egetables. at, as those of the Siberians irty. In other respects they early after the fame manner, 4 that they are Mahometans. eir drefs has some resemblance m of the Ruffians. The Tarrear a woollen jacket, which bind with their girdle; over they have a full long robe They ng loofe and flowing. is have boots on. Their heads ared, except on one fpot at ack part, which they cover a fmall piece of leather. They a cap edged with for, They all, firong, and well made; heir drefs is perfectly becom-Notwithstanding the mildness cir countenances, they have he appearance of a warlike edependent people; and have d preferved their former pries. In war-time, they fornish .affians with a certain number sops, which are kept in pay 6 latter.

a dress of the Tartar women a but little from that of the it is shorter, and they wear irdle above the robe. Their dress is a cap, sometimes in form of a sugar-loaf, and ed with copecs and glass; a large piece of cloth ed to the back part of the tad hanging down below the is ornamented in the same er. They wear boots, and the taken for men at first it. XIII.

fight, if not diftinguished by their head-dress. They share most of their kusbands labours, by whom they are very mildly treated, and there is not the leaft superiority on either fide. The married women feemed to enjoy a perfect freedom; the girls on the contrary are much confined; but notwith flanding the watchfulness of fathers and mothers, they contrive to flip away upon fome occasions, which they make the most of. In Siberia, the married women are confined, and the girls left more at liberty, which they also do not fail to take advagatage of, as we have before observed, fo that in all these countries the girls feem to be very troublefome.

The dress of the Russians differs from that of the Tartars, inafmuch as the first wear a kind of waistcoat inflead of a tunic, and that they often leave their thirts hanging out of their breeches. Over the waistcoat, they wear a kind of jacket with a girdle. They have no boots, but wrap up their legs in cloth, which they faften from the bottom. with a cord. Their thoes are commonly made of the bark of trees. All the common people of Ruffia have kept their beards, and they all wear caps. The drefs of the Tartara is in every respect preserable to that of the Ruffian men : the first is elegant, but the latter The same cannot be said feanty. of the drefs of the women. That of the Tartar women is generally more rich, but not always so please ing. The Ruffian women when at home, wear above their shifts a tunic, which reactes down to their heels, and is buttoned at the fore-part, When they go out of doors, they put on a gown or this, and sometimes a mantle. Their head-dress is more like a hat than any thing else, and is usually ornamented with copecs and glass beads. The girls dress in the same manner, excepting only that they have never any caps on, and that they only bind their heads with a kind of ribband.

When I left Birna, the Tartars doubled my number of horses, on account of the mountains we were to cross, without making any disference in the price; neither would they accept of any consideration for the entertainment they had given me.

[Those Tartars whom our author has described, live in a very remote and desolate country: he gives the following account of those that inhabit the capital city of Cazan, and the cultivated country in its neighbourhood.]

I arrived at Cazan the first of October; where a Tartar prince was the governor, who received me very graciously: he had ordered an apartment to be got ready for me; but M. Weroffchin, a Russian, whom I had the honour of seeing at St. Petersburgh, had been so kind as to give me a lodging at his house, to which I was conducted.

The next day I waited upon the governor; after a few compliments had passed which I did not understand, we seated ourselves round a table covered with a beautiful carpet; on which were placed four large pipes and a china bowl, sull of Chinese tobacco: I smoked for a sew minutes. After this some liqueurs of the country were served up with sweetmeats, fruits and a water melon: which last fruit is so exceedingly delicious here, that I ate nothing else. Mele great plenty at Cazan; do any hart, how much may eat of them. Is fruit so much better than ever met with of the where else, that I brow some of the seeds, but than answer in France.

A great many of the i of Cazan are Tartars; far from being persecut that, on the contrary, treated with the atmos ation; fo that they are tached to their sovereign have preserved the inne their manners, their pro their truth; and are mo! possessed of small fortunes dress is much richer tha the other Tartars I have spoken of: the dress of the is even different in some chiefly with regard to the for I never faw any caps form of a sugar-loaf. Th dress is very similar to the Russians, except that th jewels and pearls intermi their hair. They also ma ments of the same kind, which they put upon the I their gowns; others are round the neck, and has upon the breast.

An account of the following people, from the same Write doubt not, be agreed readers.

Of the WOTIARS.

Source of the World resolved to spend part of

With these people, on account of their fingular appearance and dreft. Some authors have reckoned them twong the Tartars, but I could not observe the least analogy between the two nations. The Wotiak men and women, in general, are no more than four feet, a few inches high, and are of a very weak and delicate conflitution. The dress of the men is the same as that of the Ruffang: but the dress of the women has not the leaft refemblance to thole I have seen in Scheria, They wear a thift of courle linen flit at the bosom like a man's firt; and hemmed at this opening with thread or worked of different colours. There is also a little orwheat of a triangular figure wrought on the right fide of the mift. Their.gown is woollen, and bests a great refemblance to the babit of the Jefaits in college; the Serves of the upper gown are flit in the middle, to give passage to the arms; and the lower part of the floeve generally hangs down. This gown, which reaches down the legs, is fastened at the forepart merely by a girdle, curioully They wear also coarse dioeght. deth fockings, and fandult, the time as the Roffians. Their headdets is very remarkable: they first wap up their heads with a towel, over which they falten, with two trings, a kind of helmet, made of the bark of a tree, and ornameated at the fore-part with a Piece of cloth and with copecs, This helmet is afterwards covered with a handkerchief, wrought with thread or worked of various colours, and edged with a fringe. This head-dreft is above one foot high. Their hair is divided into two treffes, which fall down upon the breatt with a necklace, fuch as the Tartara wear. One of my attendants, being defitous of examining this necklace, opened one of thete womens' shifts in such a manner as to uncover all her breaft, at which the was to far from being displeased, although it was done in public, that the laughed at his curiofity.

M. Strahlemberg thinks thefe people fome of the most ancient in They have professed Siberia. Christianity for several years past, but are so ignorant, that they have not the leaft idea of this religion. The Ruffians fent them pricks, and fome troops, to convert them. I found a Ruffiar millionary at Sowialoya, who was deputed to inftruct and haptize them. Although he was unacquainted with their language, he nevertheless made Christians of them; to that they Rill adhere to ail the superflitious parts of their religion.

As I was defirous of purchasing one of the womens' drelles, one was brought me, which they fold me for about a guinea. As foon as the people of the village were acquainted with this circumstance, they got together, and claimed the drefs back again: for they looked upon this as a facrilegious bargain, the punishment of which would fall on the village, because they are obliged, by the articles of their religion, to bury the women with their cloaths on. The woman from whom I had bought the drefs, was called upon to answer the charge brought against her: the owned, the had fold it; but alledged in her late mother, who lived at the

her defence, that it belonged to time they were made Christians, when the Empress had forbidden them to bury the dead with their cleaths on. The woman was acquitted; but the Wotiaks were still inclined to make me return the dress; which I should not have been able to keep, without the assistance of the soldiers, who were put in a posture of defence.

The Wotiak women are generally very ugly, and more flovenly than any other people of the north, except the Samoyedes, according to the account I received of them from Russians who have travelled in that province. The Samoyedes never wear any shift: their dress is made of the kin of the rein-deer, in form of a bag. Their stockings are of the same skin, and they fometimes wear fandals, according to the Russian fashion. A Russian, who has travelled among the Samoyedes, made me a present of one of these dresses.

Some account of the life, misfortunes, and character of the celebrated Faviurite, Prince Menzikoff; taken from General Mantlein's historical, pelitical, and military Memoirs of Rassa.

Atherine, whose ascent to the throne was owing to the affection of Peter I. died on the 16th of May 1727; and Peter II. as lawful heir of this vast empire, succeeded in course. This rince was born in 1715, from the marriage of the Cz rewitz with the princess of Wolsenbuttel. He was but eleven years and an half old at his accession to the crown: upon which consideration, Catherine had, in the second article of her v dered that he should be us tuition of a regency, confi the princesses her daughter and Elizabeth, of the I Holstein, husband of the Anne, of the prince of I bishop of Labeck, contri marry the princess Elizabe of the members of the costate, which at that time of of fix persons, until he complished the age of fixter council of state was comp the following members; th Menzikoff, the high-adm praxin, the high chancelle Golowskin, the vice-ch count Osterman, the actua councellors prince Demetri chelowitz Gallitzin, and Loukitz Dolgorucki.

This regency never as in a body but one single which was on the day that I press Catherine died, when was done but to ratify the which was broke into twaster: for it was therein expordered, that all affairs the decided by a plurality of This by no means suited Menzikoss, who meant to arbiter and master of affasomuch that the others we to obey his orders.

It was easy for him to su this design, no one daring pose whatever he resolved, risking his ruin. He had diately, on the death of l got the whole power into his and, in order to maintain in it, he had disposed the l Catherine to accept one daughters for spouse to the ror. She had made an a her will, and Meazikoff, mt any one's access to the r without his leave, made lodged in his own palace ie very day of the decease Empres; and this while e of Holstein and his miwere amusing themselver xultations on the noble ney thought they had firuck, ing the regency be given y the will of Catherine, as in this light they confithis arrangement. The s being at the head of afad having the prefidency in meil, they imagined they have all the votes of it at lisposal; but Menzikoff, ert and dexterous than they, cen early care to the con-

in Russia a custom, at every of reign or of ministry, to : some prisoners of state. L got to be wanting in fuch ; gave order for the enent of his grandmother, the a Eudoxia Feodorowaa Lai. whom Peter I. had diand confined to a convent : he ordered her a court ioned to her rank, and iner to Petersburgh. But this having too great an averainst this town, and not the ministry pluble enough her any there in the goat, refolved to remain at v, where the lived in retire-family of the Lapouchins, slations to that Empress, so recalled from the exile h they had been for several

e acts of grace had been carried against the inclination of Menzikoss, at the suggestion of some of the members of the high-council, who had found means to soften the young monarch in favour of his grandmother, and of her near relations, and had pursuaded him to insist on their release from imprisonment.

Though all this was not very pleasing to Menzikoff, he durit not however openly oppose it, but endeavoured to beset the Emperor, to the exclusion of every one that was not of his creatures; not enjoying a moment's rest, in the sear of having ill offices done him, being sensible that the whole nation detested him.

Some of the great had already, in the precedent reign, entered into a combination against him, and wanted the Empress to remove him from her councils. Those nobles who had projected this, had been employed by Peter 1. in the affair of the Czarewitz, and were afraid of the revenge of Peter II, in case of his coming to the throne, for the ill-treatment which his father had received. tried then to pursuade Catherine to fend the young prince to foreign countries to pursue his Rudies; having refolved, that if the Bmprefs should chance to demise while he was absent, to give him the exclution, and raife the dutches of Holdein to the throne.

For this they had taken their time, while Menzikoff was in Courland to fettle every thing; and for fear that he should disconcert their designs on his return, they had under aken to give the Empress than impressions of him, in which they had so far succeeded,

C 3

tbat

that her majesty had actually signed an order for putting him under an arrest, before he should re-enter Petersburgh.

By singular good-luck for Menzikoff, the count Bassevitz, first minister of the duke of Holstein, had taken it into his head to support this favourite, and easily perfuaded his master to it, who entreated of the empress her forgiveness of him, and obtained it. Menzikoff being returned to the court, was made acquainted with the finister defigns of his enemies against him. He caused a strict research to be made of them, and all the partizans of the house of Holstein were taken up, and severely punished. Menzikoff's own brother-in-law, a Portuguese, called de Vycira, and the general Pisarew, underwent the knout; their estates were confiscated, and themselves sent to Siberia. An actual privy-counsellor, Toistoy, as well as his scn, the general Butterlin, and some others, were also banished to Siberia: the count Alexander Nariskin, and the general Ouschakow, were respectively confined to their estates.

It was faid, that the count de Bassevitz, who, by an over-confidence in prince Menzikoff, had communicated to him the overtures made him by some of the great men of the court, touching their partial dispositions in favour of the duchess of Holsein, had furnished Menzikoff with the occasion, of which he instantly availed himself, of breaking all their mensures. The others, who still remained attached to the court of Holstein, were extremely intimidated at this; and conceived at the same time, not only a great diffruff, great contempt for Ballevitz.

But prince Menzikeff w fatisfied with their being p at that time, and was dete to preferve the memory of i Russia, so as to prevent any tation to hurt him for the Accordingly the council c issued a proclamation, by solemn warning was given any fuch dangerous confedi under the penalty of beir nished with great rigour.

The edict was figued the June, and on the fame da celebrated the espousals, s young Emperor with the da of prince Menzikoff. Her then imagined himself on the nacle of earthly felicity. remained for him the execut but one project more, to si above all danger. He wan marry his son to the Duchess, Natalia, fister 1 Emperor; in virtue of wh was to transmit the throne o sia to his posterity. The pl not ill imagined; but it fa execution. In the mean wh got himself declared genera by iea and land.

The duke and duchess o stein were now the only perl that gave umbrage to Men who was afraid left the c should form a new party might oppose his vast design. at the same time imagined after their quitting the him, no one would dare On a sudden then, he ce: keep any measures with the that, throwing in their wa kind of disticulty and disg constrained them, at leng

Their departure, er, did not leffen the numhis enemies; the truth is, e had drawn upon himfelf iverfal haired of the nation. had taken the precaution to in attendance about the Emsome but his own creatures, ich as owed their fortune to but as he had directly counnd and thocked all the ancimilies, and as, among those he could not well debar of to the Emperor, there were who faw with pain their relain exile, they ferfed an occaof making the young prince k, that Menzikoff was exera perfect despotism, which a hoping fill more to conby the confummation of mperor's marriage with his iter; that, in foor, to judge a by his ambition, he might it into his head to attempt They at ling the throne. time carnefly cotreated mperor to keep their fecret, t he promised; and actually Memble, till he found a fair on for venting his refent-: Menzikoff foon fornished " a froke of terrible giddiness redence.

e company of majons had, sot juftly now remember on occasion, made a free gift to Emperor of nine thousand This prince, having a to give his fifter the pleafure s present, fent her that sum ne of his gentlemen; who, met by Menzikoff, was asked m, where he was going with noney? The gentleman told

The other replied, " The specor is as yet too young to

C 4

" know how to dispose of money; " carry it to my apartments; I " will take an opportunity to " fpeak to him of it." The gentleman, who knew how dangerous it was to oppose the will of Menzikoff, did not fail of obeying him. The next day, the princess, fifter to the Emperor, came to pay bim a vifit, according to custom. She was no fooner in the room, than he afked her, if the present he had fent her was not worth a compliment of thanks. The princels naturally answering, that the had received nothing, ne Emperor flew into a great passion. gentleman was called, and being asked by him what he had done with the money given him to curry to the princess, was obliged, in his own defence, to fay that Menzikoff had taken it from him. But this only the more irritated the Emperor, who ordered Menzikoff to be lent for, and, when he came, demanded of him in a great rage, how he came to have the boldness to hinder his gentleman from executing his orders? The prince, who was not used to hear the Emperor freak to him in that tone, was perfectly thunderstruck. He answered, however, that it was very well known that the flate was in want of money; that the treafury was exhaufted; and that he had proposed that very day to prefent a project of the manner in which that fum might be more usefully employed. He added, 44 If, however, your majefts com- mands it, I will no only cause " to be returned the nine hostand " ducats, but advance you a " million of rubles out of my own " purle," The The Emperor was not pacified with this answer; but, stamping with his foot, said, "I will make "you know that I am Emperor, and that I will be obeyed." Then, turning his back upon him, left him. Menzikoff followed him, and, at length with much intreaty, appealed him for that time; but this calm did not last long.

A few days afterwards, Menzikoff fell dangerously ill. gave his enemies time to make fure of his ruin. The princes Dolgorucki, and especially the Knez Iwan, whose great favour was beginning at that time, prevailed so as entirely to alienate from him the mind of their matter. Menzikoff was not ignorant of these cabals against him, nor of the decline of his credit; but he hoped soon to recover his former degree of favour, and to over-awe the Emperor by that tone of authority, which he had used to take towards him.

As soon then as Menzikoff was recovered, he committed a fresh fault, in going to his countryhouse at Oranjenbaum, which was about two miles from Peterhoff, where the court had removed during his illness. He had built a chapel at Oranjenbaum, which he wanted to have confectated. Emperor and all his court were invited to affift at the ceremony. But his enemies, who had too much cause to dread his revenge, in case of his reconciliation with the Emperor, persuaded this prince to excuse himself on the day of the ceremony, under pretence of an indisposition. He followed their advice; and yet, for all that, Menzikoff did not apprehend that this betokened his entire disgrace. Ha had even the imprudence, daring the festival, to seat himself on a kind of throne, which had been placed for his majesty. His enemies did not fail of making the most of this circumstance, which convributed to determine his fail.

The fame evening, Meak to repaired to Peterhoff, where he did not find the Emperor, who had been carried a hunting. He addressed himself to the count Oserman, with whom he had a coaversation full of acrimony, and accompanied with words. He remained that day and the next at Peterhoff; but use Emperor not returning, and ail being frozes the countenances to him, he took the resolution of going to Peteriburgh: probably he thought he should be more furmidable in the midst of the court. In fact, being arrived at the capiul, far from acting the difgraced courtier, he employed the whole moreing in going the round of the colleges, and giving orders every He regulated particularly the reception intended for the Emperor in his palace, where he imagined he would continue to lodge; but towards noon, the general Soltikow came, with an order to remove from his palace the Emperor's furniture, and carry it to the imperial summer-palace. This was a thunder-stroke to him, at which he lost all presence of mind; but what shocked him mail was, the fending back the goods and furniture of his ton, who in quality of high-chamberlain, was to lodge officially near the Empe-In this confusion of head he fell into another fault, that of sending into quarters the regiment rermaniand, which, for his he had ordered to encamp a island of Wasili Othrows, nall distance from his palace, regiment, of which he had colonel from the first of its raised, was entirely devoted in and it is certain, that it is moressed his enemies with a two of him.

the evening, the Emperor re-I to Petersburgh, and the ge-Solukoff was once more em-I on a message to Menzikosf, tich he anounced to him an of a-reft. His wife and chilrepaired immediately to the er-palace, to throw themat the feet of the emperor, zerefused admittance. Mean Menzikoff was made to be. that he would be only deof his offices; that he nevertheless have all his e left him, and that he would mitted to pass the remainhis days at Oranjenburgh, ty town on the frontiers of krain, which he had built, en a little fortified. In fact, me disposal of his goods and s was left to him, while he sed at Petersburgh; and he went out of it, his train ot in the least the air of a trin difgrace. He was acnied by his whole family, a great number of domefand in the manner he was l on the first days of his y, it did not appear that was any intention to do him more hort. But, on his arrival, at Tweer, a town fituate on the road between Molkow and Peterfburgh, he there found an order for all his effects to be fealed up, and nothing more to be left him than . bare necessaries. His guard was doubled, and he was more parrowly watched during the reft of his journey. Scarce was he arrived at Oranjenburgh, when there were fent to him whole reams of complaints made against him for grievances. These were instantly followed by commissaries who proceeded to his trial. He was condemned to pais the rest of his life at Berolowa, fituate on the most diftant frontiers of Siberia. wife, grown blind with weeping, died by the way; the rest of his family followed him into exile. He bore his misfortunes with more firmness than one would have imagined in him; and from being full of gross humours, with a bad habit of body, he recovered health and plumpness. There were allowed him ten rubles a day; a fum which not only fufficed him for his wants, but he faved enough out of it to build a church, at which he himfelf worked hatchet in hand. He died in November 1729, of a repletion of blood; becaule, as it was faid, there was not one person to be found at Berofowa who knew how to open g vein.

The general opinion on the origin of Menzikoff is, that his father was a peafant, who had placed him.

efiti-Offrew is an island which makes part of the town of Petersburgh; see of Menzikoss stood there. Peter I, had made him a present of the sland, but returned it some time afterwards, in the intention that the town of Petersburgh should be built there; which however was not d.

him, at Moskow, with a pastry-cook, and that he carried about little pies, singing along the streets; that the Emperor Peter I. having stopped to speak to him, he had pleased him with the wit and liveliness of his repartees. Upon this he put him servant to Monsieur Le Fort; thence he took him about his own person, and by degrees made his fortune.

Others again say, that his father was an officer in the service of the Czar, Alexis Michaelowitz, and that as it is not extraordinary to fee gentlemen serve in the stables of the Czar, Menzikoff had also been employed in them, in quality of one of the head-grooms: that Peter having often spoke to him, had taken notice of the wit and threwdness of his answers, insomuch that he took him out of the stables, and placed him as a more immediate attendant on himfelf; when, observing great taleats in him, he had, in a few years, raised him to the first posts is the empire.

I have always thought the first of these opinions the nearest to the truth; for it is certain, that he was of an obscure birth, and that he began with being a common fervant; after which the Emperor placed him as a private soldier in the first company of regular troops, which he raised under the appellation Preprevojdenie . Peter I. having thence taken him about his person, gave him his entire confidence, in such a manmer, that, on many occasions, Menzikost governed Russia with the same despotism as his master. His credit had, however, been greatly diminimed during to years of the reign of Peter it is believed, that if the Enhad lived fome months there would have been changes at court, and in the niftry.

By the following characte one may decide which pres ated, the good or bad qual Prince Menzikoff.

He was firongly attacl his master, and to the max Peter I. for civilizing the. nation; affable and polite t ftrangers; that is to fay, wi as did not pretend to have wit than himself; neither milbehave to those of the R who shewed submission to He treated all who were hi riors with gentleness, neve getting a service done him. withal, he gave, on occasi the greatest dangers, inco ble proofs of the necessary p Wherever he ha courage. taken a friendship, he conti zealous friend.

On the other hand, he wa fessed with a boundless ami he could not endure a supe an equal, and less yet one could suspect of pretending pals him in understanding avarice was infatiable. an implacable enemy. not want for natural wi having had no education manners were rather coarfe. avarice had led him into disagreeable explanations Peter I. who had sometime demned him to pay arbitrar notwithstanding which, the found, on his imprisonme

[·] Preprovojdenie, for amusement.

te millions of rubles, plate, and ready mo-fon and two daugho had been betrothed eror died, before her xile; the other was der the reign of the ne, with the general iron, brother to the purland, and died in ig of the year 1737. major in the guards. s father was in favour ty, all the world ala great deal of wit, as but a child; fince and death of his fare few persons in the e of Ruffia, that have

, who, from the low, had been raised to stations of life, would his career with hohad not been so infaambition, as to seek softerity on the throne it is the same rock hall the savourites that n have struck, and n.

of Count Biron, late Courland; from the

who had fervd many quality of gentleman er, while the Empress of Courland, was de-;, and had the blue withal the place of riain, vacant by the ,e Iwan Dolgoroucki, this same Biron has long afted fo very great a part at the court of Petersburgh, it may not be improper to give the reader some knowledge of him.

His grandfather, whose proper name was Ricres, was head-groom of the stables to the duke James III. of Courland; and as he attended him every where, found means to acquire his favour, infomuch that, by way of gratuity, he gave him a farm in free gift. This Bieres had two sons, of which one entering into the service of Poland, where with carrying a musket, and get to be promoted to the rank of general,

The other, father of the Biron of whom I have been just speaking, remained in the fervice of Courland, and followed the duke Alexander, the youngest of the dake's fons, when he went to Hungary, in 1686. The Prince was wounded before Buda, and died of his wounds. Bieren, who had followed him, in quality of his groom of the horse, with the title besides of lieutenant, brought back his equipages to Courland, where they gave him the employ of a mafterhuntfman : fo that what with that, and the small inheritance of his father, he was in tolerably easy eircumftances.

He had three fons; the eldest of them. Charles, began by ferving in Russia, where he was advanced to the rank of an officer, and was taken prisoner by the Swedes, in an action with the Russians. Having found means to escape out of confinement, he went to Poland, took on the service, and had risen to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He afterwards returned to the service of Russia, where, in a very sew years, he got to be a general officer. He was the most brutal of all men; and was maimed and marked with the number of wounds which he had received in various scrapes, into which his drunkenness and quarrelsomeness had brought him. At length in Russia, every one was come to dread him, and to avoid having any thing to say to him, since his brother was become the favourite, and omnipotent in the government.

The second son was Ernestus
John, who rose to the dignity of Duke of Courland.

The third son, Gustavus, was also a general officer in the Russian service. He had begun with serving in Poland. The Empress Anne being seated on the throne, sent sor him, and appointed him major of a new-raised regiment of guards. As he was brother to the favourite, he could casily obtain promotion. He was a very honest man, but without education, and of no understanding.

I return to the second brother: He had been for fome time at the academy of Koningsberg in Prusfia, when he was obliged to leave it, to avoid being arrested for some bad affairs he had had in Courland. Finding that he could not fubfist without service, he went in 1714 to Petersburgh, and solicited a gentleman's place at the court of the princess, spoule to the Czarewitz. It was then thought an impertinent presumption, that one of to low a birth should pretend to such a post. He was not only rejected with contempt, but advised to make the best of his way instantly out of Petersburgh. At his return to Mittau, he made an acquaintance with Bestucheff, fawas then master of the household at the court of the duchess of Courland. Soon he got into her good graces, and had a place of gentleman of the chamber. He was scarce settled in it, before he sell to work at the ruin of his benefactor; in which he succeeded so well, that the duchess not only forbid him her court, but persecuted him as much as she could, and sent De Korf expressly to Moscow, to carry on a suit against him.

This Bieren, as to his person, was very handlome, and soon got deep into the favour of the duchels, who took such delight in his company, that she made him her confident.

The nobility of Courland conceived a great jealousy against this new favourite; some carried it fuch a length, that they laid out for occasions to pick quarrels with As then he stood in need of a support among the nobility, he fought the alliance of some antient family. He met with feveral refusals; at length he prevailed over mademoiselle de Treiden, maid of honour to the duchely and married her, even before be had got the consent of her friends. By this marriage he hoped to gam admission into the body of the nobility: he folicited it, and was harfhly refused.

The ministry of Russia did not more like him than the nobility of Courland. The scurvy trick he had played Bettuchess had set the whole world against him, so that he was detested and despised at Moscow. This went to such a pitch, that when, a little while of Peter II. De i augmentation of duchess, the miuncil of fate deankly, and withg of the matter, thould be done fs, but that they Bieren dispose of imperor's demife, Red Empress, one la made to ber i at Mittau was, d leave her faher there. She he presently folfter the had debfolute fovereign, ber chamberlain, of her coronation. he honours above-rdinand of Courthe house of Ketd, he managed so his arts and cavas elected duke, y became the sontry, of which the it a few years beadmit him into n to advance himer of fortune, he and arms of the in France. This during the whole press Anne, and r her death, reigndespotism over the tufia. He had no nor yet any eduwhat he took of d not that kind of power of pleasing ive:failon; but he er, dettitute of a of natural good feafe, though there are fome that aver the contrary. It is not without reason that the proverb might be applied to him, " that affairs " form men;" for, before his arrival in Ruffia, he had not, perhaps, so much as heard of the name of politics; whereas, after having relided there fome years, he knew perfectly well all that re-The two lated to that empire. first years, he made as if he meddled with nothing, but at length he took a talle for bulinels, and governed every thing.

petore

He loved to excels pomps and magnificence, and had especially a great sancy for horses. The minister of the Emperor, count Offein, who detested him, used to say, when the count Biron talks of horses he speaks like a man, but when he speaks of men, or to men, he speaks as a horse would do.

His temper was none of the best: he was haughty and ambitious beyond all bounds; abrupt, and even brutal; avaritious, an implacable enemy, and cruel in his punishments. He took a great deal of pains to learn to dissemble, but could never attain any degree of perfection in it, comparable to that of count Osterman, who was master of the art.

Of the Coffacks; and the fingular Cuffems of the Zaporavian Republic.

THERE are feveral kinds of the Cofficks; the most known are those of the Don, the Zaperavian Coffacks, and those of the Ukrain. They inhabit the the Ukrain, which is also called Mala Russia, or Little Russia, and is unquestionably one of the finest countries in Europe; one half of it belongs to the Emperor of Russia, the other to Poland. The Borysthenes or Dnieper divides this country into two parts, forming at the same time their respective frontiers.

These Cossacks were once a free nation, descending from the same race as the Polanders; but as to their religion, they follow the Greek church. When these people were united, they could bring a hundred and fifty thousand men into the field. They were long under the protection of the republic of Poland, and did it great fervice in its wars against the Turks; but the Polanders attempting to treat them like slaves, they revolted about an hundred years ago, under the conduct of the Hettman Chelmninski, who put himself under the protection of the Turks. years after the death of Chelmninski, the successor, Doroschonko, gave himself and country up to This brought on a war, Ruffia. which terminated in the destruction of the town of Czigrin, at that time the capital of the Ukrain. This happened in the year 1674.

For the fill years enfuing they preserved all their privileges, and were governed by a prince of their own chusing among themselves. But the Hettman Mazeppa having taken the part of Charles XII. King of Sweden, Peter I. reduced this restless people to a condition Roschowy Hettman.

of inability of firiting to their yoke.

At present they have any privileges, and ar upon in the light of a Their latt province. Apostel, dying in 1734, not left at liberty to chuse and are actually now gov a Russian Regency, which at Glouchows. They lutely bring two-and-twe fand men into the field ferved in the Ruffian armi the last wars against the without having been good thing but to augment the of their troops. It is no reason believed. that their valour is totally extinct. campaign they scarce did: fervice than that of bring gons of provision to the au

The Zaporavian Cossac bit the islands of the Ber and a small track of count fide of Crimea, beyond They are a colle all nations, mostly howevlanders, of Russians, and Ukrain Costicks. They w merly, sometimes under tection of the Turks or T Crimea, some:imes under Russia. If I am not miss was fince the year 1-34 t resumed their submission to having precedently been to the Turks fince the Charles XII's recourse to

Their general, or chief republic, has the appell

^{*} These Memoirs were already written, when the Empress Elizabet to the inhabitants of the Ukrain a great part of their ancient privile gave them at the same time, the liberty of chusing a new Hettman; t fell on Ririla Rasoumouski, brother of her Majesty's favourite; and he went to the Ukrain to take possession of that regency.

g themselves, and for so e as pleases them, they a blind obedience; but at they are discontented they depose him, withr ceremony, and chafe his place. owever, requifite, fince niffion to Ruffia, that election should be always by the regency of Gloucis it at all improbable, incipal motive for their o often their Roschowy t is castomary for the ake, on this occasion, a feven thousand subles * Roichowy, who comtres them among the Coffacks, to attach them int very often they do m keep his post above a s, when he is degraded, ies again only a private many of them have even cred, without any other it the having incurred ure of the multitude.

of war the court pays one, and furnishes them for the campaign.

we but one fecretary, or er, who dares fend or ters: if any other was ny the least corresponwould be put to death ercy, were it even the himself. But, in case er coming, it is carried etary, who reads it in the Elders.

nber of troops they can the field is not fixed. war against the Turks, and of their horse served affan armaies; bot, on a could raise twelve or fifteen thou-£nd.

Their customs are fingular. No Zaporavian Coffack is allowed to be married within the precincts of their territory. If he is married, his wife must live in some neighbouring country, where he reforts to her from time to time; and even this intercourse must be without the knowledge of the Elders; but every one may quit this fociety, when it no longer pleases him, and that without acquainting any one. Another may come and have his name inrolled, without any other ceremony than that of declaring that he will conform to their cultoms, and fubmit to their laws. It is for this reason that they never can precifely afcertain the number of their forces. They are divided into different chambers or comradefhips; and all who are prefent in their capital are obliged to dine and fup in their public halls or refectories.

They do not even fuffer women to remain at any firanger's that flouid come among them, and bring any of that fex with them. While the Ruffigns were at war against the Turks, the Zaporavians had received in their capital a garrifon of regular troops, which is nothing more than a retrenched village, called Setz. The lieutenant-colonel Glebow, who commanded those troops, being unapprifed of their cuttom, had fent for his wife to come to him. No feoner was the arrived, than that all the Coffacks, having affembled for the purpose, surrounded this commanding officer's house, and demanded what women there were h their best efforts, they in it to be delivered to them, that they might each have their share. Mons. Glebow had a good deal of distinctly to appeale them, nor could effect it without sacrificing to them some casks of brandy. He was, however, obliged to send away his lady, for sear of a tresh revolt.

Their manner of punishing is as fingular as their manner of living. They are great thieves and robbers; but if any one should offer to sleal any the least thing from his comrade, he is tied to a post in the openest public place of the town: a bottle of brandy, a loaf of bread, and a number of flout sticks, are fet by his side, when every one that passes has a right to give him as many blows as he pleases, after which he may give the wretch the refreshment of a drop of brandy, and a morfel of bread. fufferer, at the discretion of the judges, remains thus tied to the post a whole night and day, and often five times twenty-four hours. After which, if he has the goodlack to furvive the blows, he is received anew into the fociery.

The whole republic is merely made up of thickes and vagabonds, who subsite on nothing but rapine, both in peace and war. The Holdanacks, who infest Poland, are no other than these Zaporavian Cossicks. The court of Russia Cannot hinder their continual excursions; nay, is even obliged to keep measures with them, for fear of their changing sides.

The Cossacks of the Don inhabit that tract which is between the river Don, the same as the ancient Tanus, and the Donwitz, or Little Don. They have a very good country, several pratty towns, and large villages. Their capital is called Czerkaskoi. They are onginally, by descent, all Russia pealants, to whom the yoke of their mailers having proved unfufserable, they, little by little, took refuge in this country, where they formed a commonwealth. In procels of time they voluntarily put themselves under the protestion of the Russian empire, by which they are treated with great gentleneh They are exand moderation. cellent foldiers, and can bring as far as fifteen thousand men into the field. The Ruffians draw great from them against the Turks, and Tartars of Cuban. Their general, or chief of their republic is stiled Voiskowoy Attaman; he is chosen by themselves from among the principal officers of their nation, but he must be confirmed by the court.

Of the ancient Scandinavians; from M. Mailet's Northern Antiquities.

I liave already hinted, that the ancient Scandinavians breathed nothing but war, which was at once with them the fource of henour, riches and safety. education, laws, prejudices, morality and religion, all concurred to make that their ruling passes and only object. From their mon tender age they applied themselves to learn the military art; they sardened their bodies, and accustomed themselves to cold, fatigoe, and hunger. They exercised themfelves in running, in the chafe, in swimming across the greates rivers, and in handling their arms. The very sports of childhood itfelf, and of early youth, were direcled all towards this end: danvere always intermingled teir play. For it confilted og frightful leaps, in climbthe steepest rock, in fightked with offensive weapons, kling with the utmost fury:

therefore common to fee at the age of filteen years ? grown robust men, and make themselves seared in t. It was also at this age seir young men became their nafters, which they did by ing a fword, a buckler and This ceremony was perd in some public meeting. of the principal persons of Tembly armed the youth in :. " This," we are told by as, " was his Toga Virilis, entrance upon dignities; ore this he made only part of family, now he became a mber of the state," After e was obliged to provide for in fubfistence, and was either to live by hunting, or by g in fome incurtion against Particular care was to prevent these young folfrom enjoying too early an intance with the opposite fex, seir limbs had acquired all igour of which they were le. Indeed they could have pe to be acceptable to the a, but in proportion to the ge and address they had shown r and in their military exer-

Accordingly we see in an it song, preserved by Bartho-king of Norway extremely sed, that, as he could pereight different exercises, his is should presume to reject his I shall frequently have occamo produce new instances of L. XIII.

this manner of thinking among their women: it is fufficient at prefent to observe, that they were not likely to fosten their children by too much delicacy or indulgence. Thefe tender creatures were generally born in the midft of camps and armies. Their eyes, from the moment they were first opened, faw nothing but military spectacles, arms, effusion of blood, and combats either real or in sport : thus as they grew up from their infaucy, their fouls were early disposed to imbibe the cruel prejudices of their fathers.

Their laws for the most part (like those of the ancient Lacedemonians) feemed to know no other virtues than those of a military nature, and no other crimes but cowardice. They inflicted the greatest penalties on such as fled, the first in battle. The laws of the ancient Danes, according to Saxo, excluded them from fociety, and declared them infamous. Among the Germans this was fometimes carried to far as to suffocate cowards in mud; after which they covered them over with hurdles: to fhew, fays Tacitus, that though the punishment of crimes should be public, there are certain degrees of cowardice and infamy which ought to be buried in eternal filence. The most flattering distinctions were referred for such as had performed fome figual exploit; and the laws themselves distributed men into different ranks according to their different degrees of courage. Frotho, king of Denmark, had ordained, according to Saxo, that whoever folicited an eminent post in the army, ought upon all occations to attack one enemy; to FACO face two; to retire only one step back from three; and not to make an actual retreat till assaulted by four. Hence was formed that prejudice so deeply rooted among these people, that there was no other way to acquire glory, but by the profession of arms, and a fanatic valour: a prejudice the force of which displayed itself without obstruction, at a time when luxury was unknown; when that defire, fo natural, and so active among men, of drawing upon themselves the attention of their equals, had but one fingle object and support; and when their country and their fellow-citizens had no other treasure but the fame of their exploits, and the terror thereby exited in their neighbours.

The rules of justice, far from checking these prejudices, had been themselves warped and adapted to their bias. It is no exaggeration to fay, that all the 'Gothic and' Celtic nations entertained opinions on this subject, quite opposite to the They looked theory of our times. upon war as a real act of justice, and esteemed force an incontestible title over the weak, a visible mark that God had intended to subject them to the strong. They had no doubt but the intentions of this divinity had been to establish the fame dependance among men which there is among animals, and fetting out from the principle of the inequality of men, as our modern civilians do from that of their equality, they inferred thence that the weak had no right to what they could not defend. This maxim, which formed the basis of the law of nations among the ancient inhabitants of Europe, being dictated by most darling passion, we wonder that they should so f act up to it in practice. which, after all, is worft; and think as they did, or lil moderns, with better princip act as ill? As to the ancier tions, weattribute nothing to here but what is justified by a fand facts. They adopted the maxim in all its rigour, and the name of Divine Judgme only to the Judiciary Con but to conflicts and battles forts: victory being in their nion the only certain ma which Providence enables us stinguish those, whom it has pointed to command others. ' lour," says a German war Tacitus, " is the only "goods of men, The Gods " themselves on the side : " ftrongest "."

Lastly, Religion, by an eternal happiness to the m virtues, had given the last of activity to the ardour an pensity these people had so There were no fatigues, no gers nor torments capable of ing a passion so well counten and the defire of meriting fi We have seen a reward. motives this religion offered votaries; and we cannot recall them in reading for stances of that courage whi stinguished the ancient Sca vians, and of their conter death itself, which I shall p from the most authentic cha of Iceland.

History informs us, that ROLD, surnamed BLAATA

Tacit. hist. lib. IV. c. 27. Pelloutier hist. des Celtes, tom. I. p. 41

эотн, (a king of Denso reigned in the middle ath century) had founded alls of Pomerania, which ibdued, a city named Juenthurg; where he fent a f young Danes, and bee government on a celearrior named Palnatoko. Lycurgus bad made of a fecond Sparts, and every us directed to this fingle form complete foldiers. or who has left us the hifhis colony affures us, that forbidden there so much sention the name of Fear, o the most imminent dan-No citizen of Jomfto yield to any number, great, but to fight intrethout flying, even from a rior force. The fight of ad inevitable death would 1 no excuse with them for By the least complaint, or ng the flightest apprehennd this legislator really to have eradicated from s of most of the youths under him, all traces of iment to natural and to , which makes men think destruction with horror. can shew this better than ध in their biftory, which to have place here for its y. Some of them having irruption into the terria powerful Narwegian sed Haquin, were overspite of the obstinacy of Rance; and the most did among them being foners, were, according Rom of those times, condemned to death. The news of this, far from afflicting them, was, on the contrary, received with joy. The first who was led to punishment was content to fay, without changing countenance, and without exprelling the leaft fign of fear, " Why should not the same hap-" pen to me, as did to my father? " He died, and so must I." A warrior, named Thorchill, who was to cut off the head of the fecond, having asked him what he felt at the fight of death, he anfwered, " that he remembered too " well the laws of Jomfburg to " utter any words that denoted fear." The third, in reply to the same question, said, " he re-" joiced to die with glory, and " that he preferred such a death " to an infamous life like that of " Thorchill's." The fourth made an answer much longer and more extraordinary. " I fuffer with a good heart; and the prefent hour is to me very agreeable. [" only beg of you," added he, addressing himself to Thorchill, " to be very quick in cutting off " my head; for it is a question " often debated by us at Jomfburg, er whether one retains any fenfe " after being beheaded. I will therefore grasp this knife in my " hand: if after my head is cut " off I strike it towards you, it " will shew I have not lost all se sense: if I let it drop, it will 44 be a proof of the contrary. " Make hafte therefore, and de-" cide the dispute." ' Thorchill,' adds the historian, cct off his head in a most expeditious * manner, but the knife, as might · be expected, dropt from his

The fifth shewed the fame tranquillity, and died rallying and jeering his enemies. fixth begged of Thorchill, that he might not be led to punishment like a sheep *; " strike the blow " in my face," said he, " I will " fit still without shrinking; and take notice whether lonce wink es my eyes, or berray one fign of " fear in my countenance. For " we inhabitants of Jomiburg are se used to exercise ourselves in 💶 trials of this fort, so as to meet " the stroke of death, without " once moving." He kept his promise before all the spectators, and received the blow without betraying the least sign of sear, or fo much as winking his eyes +. The seventh, says the historian, " was a very beautiful young man, " in the flower of his age. "long fair hair, as fine as filk, " floated in curls and ringlets on " his shoulder. Thorchill asked in him what he thought of death? * I receive it willingly, faid he, " fince I have fulfilled the greatest 🥙 dutý of life, and have seen all " their put to death whem I would 44 not furvive. I only beg of you one favour, not to let my hair •• be touched by a flave, or flained " with my blood 1."

This constancy in the last moments was not, however, the peculiar essect of the laws and education of the Jomsburgians. The other Danes have often given the same proofs of intrepidity; o ther this was the general char of all the inhabitants of Scan via. It was with them an inf of shameful pusillanimity to upon luch occations the leaft g or to change countenance, be pecially to shed tears. The D lays Adam of Bremen 🐧, "a " markable for this, that if " have committed any crime, " had rather fuffer death, " blows. There is no other nishment for them but (" the ax, or fervitude. " groans, complaints, and " bemoanings of that kind " which we find relief, the " so detested by the Danes, " they think it mean to we " their fins, or for the dea " their dearest relations." a private foldier looked upon as peculiar to weakness or si their great warriors, the c all who aspired to fame and carried the contempt of death further. King Regner, who finging the pleasure of rec death in the field of battle, out at the end of a stanza, "hours of my life are 🕶 away, I sha!l die laughin and many passages in ancier tory plainly thow that this w a poetical hyperbole. Saxo,: ing of a fingle combat, fays one of the champions LAUGHED, AND DYED, & taph as short as energetic ¶

Barthol, lib. i. c. 5, p. 51. † Barthol, ibid.

In Bartholin it is, ld unicuna a te peto, ne moncipia me ad riortem neu quis te inferior copillum meum tencat, &c. M. Mailet has omitted to cumitance of the hair in his 2d edit.

Bartholin gives the speech of the EIGHTH person, which, though sbeing not so striking as the former, our author has omitted.

§ Adam Bremen de situ Dance, c. 213. 3 Barthol, p. 4. ¶ Saxo Gram. lib. ii. et vide. Bodyar's Biarka Saga apud Barthol. 6. 1. p. 5.

37 belonging to a king of Norslebrating in verse the death master, concludes his eulowith these words, " It shall after be recorded in histories, king Halfer died laugh"." A warrior having been upon his back, in wrestling his enemy, and the latter himself without his arms, nquithed person premised to without changing his posture he setched a sword to kill and he saithfully kept his

To die with his arms in ed was the vow of every free and the pleasing idea they this kind of death, would By lead them to dread fuch ceeded from difeate and old In the joy therefore which thified at the approach of a : death, they might frey express no more than their entiments, though doubtlefs a fometimes intermixt with The general tenor of ition, onduct proves that they were tommonly fincere in this; ch as know the power which ion, example, and prejudice wer men, will had no diffin receiving the multitude of mies, which antiquity hath of their extraordinary valour. t philosophy of the Cimbri," alerius Maximos, 4 is gay

" and courageous: they leap for o joy in a battle, that they are " going to quit life in fo glorious " a manner: in fickness they la-" ment for fear of a shameful and " milerable end +-" Cicero remarks, that in proportion as men are intrepid in war, they are weak and impatient under bodily pains. " Happy in their mistake," says Lucan, " are the people who live er beneath the Pole! perfuaded " that death is only a passage to " a long life, they are undiffurbed " by the most grievoes of all fears, e that or dying. Hence they " eagerly run to arms, and their " minds are capable of meeting " death: hence they efteem it 44 cowardice to spare a life which " they shall so soon recover 1." The hillory of ancient Scandinsvia is full of passages expressive of this manner of thinking. The fullous warriors, who tound themielies walting by fome lingering illn fe, were not always conten, barely to actufe their fate. They often availed themfelves of the few moments that were yet remaining, to fliake off life by a way mor- glorious. Some of them would be carried into a field of bartle, that they might die in the engagement: others flew themielves; many procuted this incluncholy fervice to be performed them by their friends.

erthol. p. 6. † Val. Max. lib. ii. cap. 6. p. 11. Cicero pureft, lib. ii. cap. ult. 1 only a loofe paraphrase of Lucan's words is given in the text, the will be glad to see the original here.

Orbe alio longa, canitis fi cognita, wita Mors media eft. Certe populi quos despicit Ardios Filices ervore suo! quos ille timorum Maximus band urget lethi metus; unde ruendi In serrumanens prona viris, animaque capaces Martis i et ignavum reditura parcere vita.

Lib. i.

who considered this as a most sacred duty. "There is on a mounstain in Iceland," says the author of an old Icelandic romance +, a rock so high that no animal can fall from the top and live. Here men betake themselves when they are afflicted and unshappy. From this place all our ancestors, even without waiting for sickness, have departed unto so Odin. It is useless therefore to complaints, or to put our relations to needless expences, suce we can easily follow the example of our fathers who have all gone by the way of this rock. There was such another in Sweden, appropriated to the same use, which was figuratively called the Hall of Odin, because it was a kind of vestibule or entry to the palace of that God 1. Lastly, if none of

† The old SAGA, or history here quoted, contains a mixture of truth and fiction, but shews us plainly what opinion was held of SUICIDE, and here

commonly it was practifed heretofore in the North.

Procopius attributes the same thing to the Heruli, a Gothic people. Apid Herulos, says he, nec senibus, nec ægrotis sas erat vitam producere: et si que senium occupasset, aut morbus, regare is cogebatur propinquos, ut quamprimes bominum numero eum tellerent. Procop. Goth. lib. ii. c. 14.

Silius says of the ancient inhabitants of Spain,

Prodiga gens anime, & properare facillima mortem; Namque ubi transcendit florentes viribus annos, Impatiens evi spernit novisse senectam. Et fati modus in dextra est.

All these authorities, which it would be easy to multiply, prove that I attribute nothing to the northern nations, which is not positively confirmed by historians, as well strangers as their own countrymen; and that one cause reproach the ancient Scandinavians with these barbarous prejudices, without condemning at the same time the ancestors of half the nations of Europe. Vid. Pelloutier, tom. ii. lib. 3. ch. 18.

I We have a particular description of this place by Sir William Tempie; which it will be worth while to produce at large.

"I will not," he fays, " trouble mytelf with more passages out of the "Runic poems concerning this superstitious principle [of preferring a violent " death, &c.] but will add a tellimony of it, which was given me at Nume-" guen, by count Oxenstern, the first of the Swedish embassadors in that as-" sembly. In discourse upon this subject, and in confirmation of this opinion " having been general an ang the Goths of those countries; he told me there " was still in Sweden a place which was a memorial of it, and was called "ODIN's-HALL. That it was a great bay in the fea, encompassed on three " fides with freep and ragged rocks; and that in the time of the Gothic pe-" ganism, men that were either sick of diseases they esteemed mortal or newer able, or the grown invalid with age, and thereby past all military actions " and fearing to die meanly and baiely (as they effectived it) in their beds es they usually caused themselves to be brought to the nearest part of the " rock", and from thence threw themselves down into the sea, hoping by the " boldness of such a violent death, to renew the pretence of admittion into the " hall of Odin, which they had loft, by failing to die in combat, and min " their arms." Mucellanea, Part II. Effcy 3. part 4. Li.t.s

39

reliefs were afforded, and efly when Christianity had bathese cruel practices, the i confoled themfelves at leaft tting on complete armour as as they found their end apnings thus making (as it a folema protest against the of death to which they were i involuntarily to fabmit. this it will not be thought rful that the clients of a lord, and all those who inander a chief for some expe-, Sould make a vow not to their commander; or that w thould always be performed its rigour . Neither will it prixing that private foldiers fometimes form among elves a kind of fociety or connity, in which the feveral ers engaged, at the expence of own lives, to avenge the death ir affociates, provided it were rable and violent. All thefe rs were, in their opinson, so favourable and precious ocs of meriting glory and eterappinels, Accordingly, we and any among these people of cowardice, and the bare ion of that vice was always led with univerfal contempt. a who had lost his buckler, to had received a wound bedurth never more appear in . In the history of England +, e a famous Danish captain I Siward, who had fent his attack a province in Scotalk with great coolness those whether he had received his wounds behind or before? The meffengers telling him he was wounded before, the father cries out, " then I have " only cause to rejoice: for any " other death would have been " unworthy of me and my foe." A conquerer could not exercise a more terrible vengeauce upon his cuptives, than to condemn them to Cavery. " There is," fays Saxo, " in the heart of the Danes, an " infurmountable aversion to fervitude, which makes them efteem. it the most dreadful of all con-" dicions I." The fame historian describes to us a king of Denmark, named Frotho, taken in battle by a king his enemy, and obfinately refuting all offers of life which that prince could make bim. " To " what end," fays he, " should I " referve myfelf for fo great a " disgrace? What good can the " remainder of my life afford me, " that can counterbalance the " remembrance of my misfortunes, " and the regret which my mifery " would cause me? And even if " you should restore me my king-" dom, if you fhould bring me " back my fifter, if you thould " repair all the loss of my treasure, " would all this recover my ho-" noor? All thefe benefits would " never replace me in my former et flate, but future ages would ai- ways fay, FROTHO нати веви " TARBE BY HIS ENBMY." all combats, and the number of them is prodigious in the ancient histories of the North, we always tought the news of his death, find both parties continually re-he same thing prevailed among diverse Celtic nations: they called those Engaged themselves to their chiefs, filaborii. irompton. Ubb. Jom. Chronic. p. 946. axo Gramm, lib. xii.

peating the words glory, honour, and contempt of death, and by this means raising one another to that pitch of enthusiasm, which produces extraordinary actions. A general never forgot to remind his troops of these motives when he was going to give battle; and not infrequently they prevented him, and slew to the engagement of themselves, chanting songs of war, marching in cadence, and raising shouts of joy.

Of Rollo, the Conqueror of Normandy; from the Jame.

HAROLD Harfagre having completed the conquest of Norway about the year 870, and being defirous of procuring that repofe for such of his subjects as dwelt along the coasts, which they themfelves would not grant to their neighbours, prohibited all pirates of Norway, under the severest penalties, from exercising any hostilities against their own country. But notwithstanding this prohibition, a Norwegian duke +, named Rolf or Rollo, sprung, as it is said, from the ancient kings of Norway, made a descent on the province of Viken, nor retired thence till laden with a great booty of cattle. Harold, who was in the neighbourhood, was enraged at Rollo to the last degree, for thus daring to disobey him almost in his very presence, and instantly condemned him to perpetual banishment from Norway. In vain the mother of this unfortunate youth threw herself at the king's feet, imploring pardon for her fon, and chanting, according to the custom of those times, these verses, which the chronicles have preserved to us: " Is the very " name of our race become batter " ful to you? You drive from his " country one of the greatest men " it has ever produced, the ho-" nour of the Norwegian nobi-" lity. Ah! why will you pro-" voke the wolf to devour the " flocks, who wander defenceless " through the woods? Fear, lek " becoming outrageous, he should " one day occasion great missor-"tunes." The king remained inflexible, and Rollo perceiving that he was for ever cut off from all hopes of return to his own country, revired with his fleet among the ifinads of the Hebrides w the north-west of Scotland, whither the flower of the Norwegian nobility had fled for refuge ever fince Harold had become matter of the whole kingdom. He was there received with open arms by those warriors, who, eager for conquet and revenge, waited only for a chief to undertake some glorious enterprize. Rollo setting himkis at their head, and seeing his power formidable, sailed towards England, which had been long as it were a field open on all fides to the violences of the northern nations. But the great Alfred bad some years before established sock

Torsei hist. Norveg. tom. 11. lib. 11. Ejusd. Dissertat. de Gaungo Rolfo, p. 80.

† Called in their own language JARL, a title of the same original and import, as our Anglo-Saxon EARL.

T. order

C H A R A C T E R S.

part of the island, fter feveral fruitless espared of forming fettlement as should tends for the lofs of He pretended have had a supernawhich promised him tune in France, and at leaft to support his followers. The the government in i, and the confusion as involved, were full ve reasons to assure efs. Having therethe Seine to Rouen, :ly took that capital ce, then called NEUnaking it his maga-, he advanced up to ich he laid fiege in events of this war ng to the History of all the world knows. gth ended in the enof Neustria, which limple was obliged to Rollo and his Norr to purchase a peace. d it in perpetuity to is posterity, as a feusendant on the crown A description of the ween Charles and this ves us a curious picanners of these Nonthey were called by for the latter would fovereign lord, any other way than by placing his hands within those of the king; and absolutely refused to kils his feet, as custom then required. It was with great difficulty he was prevailed on to let one of his warriors perform this ceremony in his flead; but the officer to whom Rollo deputed this fervice, fuddenly raifed the king's foot to high, that he overturned him on his back : a piece of rudenels which was only laughed at; to such a degree were the Normans feared and Charles defpifed +.

Soon after, Rollo was perfuaded to embrace Christianity, and he was baptized with much ceremony by the archbishop of Rouen in the cathedral of that city. A: foon as he law himfelf in full possession of Normandy, he exhibited fuch virtues as rendered the province happy, and deferred to make his former outrages forgotten. Religious, wife, and liberal, this captain of pirates became, after Alfred, the greatest and most bumane prince of his time. Par from treating Normandy as a conqured province, his whole attention was employed to re-establish it. This country was, by the frequent devaltations of the Scandinavians, rendered fo defert and uncultivated, that Rollo could not at first refide in it; but Charles was obliged to yield up Britanny to oath of fealty to his him for a while, till Normandy ous treaty was concluded at S. Clair, A. D. 912, by which reed to give his daughter Gifeie in marriage to Rollo, together of Neuftria since cailed Normandy, upon condition that he age for it, and would embrace the Christian Religion. (Vid. ologique de l'inft. de France, par M. Henault.

was in a condition to furnish subfistence to its new masters. Nevertheless, the fertility of the soil, feconding the industry of the people, it became, in a few years, one of the fine & provinces of Eu-Thus it was that this prince, afterwards known the name of Rollo or Raoul ... fecured to his children this noble pessession, which they, two hundred years afterwards, augmented by the conquest of England: As if it were destined that this is and thould at all times receive its fovereigns from among the northern As to the French histonations. sians, they agree with the Icelandie chronicles, in describing Rollo as a man of uncommon wisdom and capacity; generous, eloquent, indefatigable, intrepid, of a noble figure and majestic fize. Many other Scandinavian princes and captains are drawn in the same colours. Such were Harold Harfagre, Olave Tryggueson, Magind king of Norway, Canute the Great, &c. men born with truly heroic qualities, which they, alas! degraded by injustice and inhumanity: but who wanted only another age and another education to render them most accomplished persons.

[To illustrate the character of this Norman conqueror, we shall subjoin the following extract from Valy's account of him in his histury of France.

Such was the state of France when attacked by Rollo, one of the most illustrious chiefs of the Normans, and whom a thousand the qualities both of mind and name, with the graces lack of his perion, raised shove the epithet of Having been obliged barbarian. to leave Denmark, he got together a numerous corps of adventurers, with whom he croffed over into England, where he gained two fignal victories; then putting to sea again, makes a desern: in Friesland, which he compelled to pay a tribute. Afterwards, failing towards France, he seized on Rouen, and repaired its walls and towers, to ferve him as a place of arms; from whence he used to fally out, sometimes into England, sometimes into France. Here, irritated by his miscarriage at the siege of Chartres, his ravages and cruelties were such, that deputies came from all parts, petitioning the king to purchase peace at any Rollo infisted on all that sea coast which he had so often 12. vaged, and there was no denying Thus that part of Neuking which soon came to be called Normandy from the name of its usarpers, became a separate state dependant on the crown only by an empty form of homage; and Britany, once a kingdom, funk into an arrierefief.

The new duke, after some infruction in our holy mysteries, was baptized in the cathedral of Roses, now the capital of his dominions. It is observed on this occasion, that the Normans, though such enemies to the Christian name, never offered at compelling any Christianity. to renounce The only blots in duke Rollo or Robert's character were, that his consort Gisela, daughter to Charks IV. pined to death for his ill treatment of her; and his beheading two persons of note, whom the king had fent with a remonstrance

againi

C H A R A C T E R S.

h ungenerous behavior his fobjects, them with the most exemm and goodness; and ly fuppressed all rapine e, that, under his goa pair of gold bracelets oak during three years, one offering to touch s well known, that for e after his death, the out his name implied or the magistrates to quell fome diftorbance. rife to the cry Hare in , a word derived from cal, as calling out for 's affiltance. Such was tion of that renowned colony, whose blood, th that of the Franks, 1 to England and Si-

ut of the Albigenses; :lly's new Hiftery church had enjoyed a ect tranquillity for near ties, when Aimery de a doctor of the univeraris, disseminated some This stive dogmas, who had more learning utual in his time, adt paradife and hell were that the pleasure of 'as all our heaven, and ll, guilt and ignorance; we of the Holy Spirit sed that of Jesus Christ: oul of it was charity: a flame gave a function itfelf. I he herefiarch I to Rome, was obliged thame thortened his life, the evil ended not with him. A council meeting at Paris, condemned to the ftake all persons convicted of holding fuch maxims, fparing only the women and fome mean people, whose ignorance had been the more cally imposed on. Aimery's corpie was digged up, his bones burnt, and his after hurled about in the air. A book was likewife committed to the flames, as the fource from whence the doctor had drawn bis impious fubtilties: this was Ariftotle's Metaphysics, which the French at Conttantinople had lately transmitted to their own country, and the reading or copying and even the keeping of it in one's house was prohibited, under penalty of excommunication. Aimery's followers, terrified at fuch rigorous procedures, forfook house and relations, and went and incorporated themselves with the Albigenfes. That was the name given to all fectaries agreeing among themfelves to contemp the authority of the church, to appose the use of the facraments, and fet afide the antient discipline. Under this general appellation were comprehended the Arians, who denied the divinity of Christ; the Manichees, who held two principles, one good the other evil; the Vandois, or the poor of Lion. whole only error at first was a veneration for inactive poverty, and a contempt of the clergy; the Petrobusians and Henricians, who rejected the facraments, and all outward worthip; the Apoftolics. who boasted that they alone were Christ's true mystical body; the Politicians, who would not allow and through grief and of any temporal dominion or jerildictics risdiction in ecclesiastics; the Poplicans, or Publicans, who execrated baptism, the eucharist, and marriage; the Patarins, whose characteristic doctrine was infamous: and the Catharians, who made profession of a singular puzity. These were all called Aibigenies, either from the council of Albi's anathematifing their errors, or from that city and its environs being particularly infected with them.

The fketch of their doctrines and manners, as drawn by cotemporary authors, carries in it something to ablard and horrid, as almost to leave a suspicion of exag-The Albigenies, fay geration. they, believed two Gods; one benevelent, the author of the New Testament, who had two wives, Collant and Collibant, and was the father of feveral children, among others of Christ and the devil; the other malevolent, fanguinary, and deceitful, the inflitutor of the old law, and who bo h profecuted the patriarchs whilst living, and had ramned them all after their death. They likewise held two Christs: one all wickedness, born at Bethlehem, and crucified at Jerusalem, and who bad a concubine called Maer Magdilen, noted for baving been eaught in adultery: the other all goodness, invitible, and who never dwelled in this world out spiritually, and then in the body of They said that the St. Paul. church of Rome was the great where spoken of in the Revelations; they accounted the factaments futilities, called marriage profitation, the eucharitt a chimera, the referrection a ridioulous tale, and the worth p of imeges detestable idulatry. They had several orders, as the Perfed, the Believers, all professing the highest purity, yet all immersed in the vilett sensualities, on this detestable principle, That there is ab fix below the girale.

The vehemence of the sectaries in propagating such tenets rouzed the church's zeal. Pope Innocent appointed two Bernardine monks to try these miscreants, with a power of excommunicating them, and, by the censures of the church, of compelling the lors and others to conficute their substance of any kind, to drive them out of their lands, and, when refractory, to put them to death. This was the first foundation of the inquintion.

The croiles soon increased to five hundred thousand men, and the Count de Toulouse being then chief of the Albigenses, this multitude first fell on Beziers, his capital, which was carried at the firit affiult, and near feventy thoufant fouls murdered in cold blood, without regard to age or fex. It is said that the croises, previously to the affault, confulted the abbit de Citeaux what they should do, as there was no distinguishing the catholics from the heretics. Kill all, answered the monk, knows his own. So true it is, that no fire burns fo fierce as that kindled at God's altar.

The Chiracter of Constantine the Great; from the first welume of Mr. Le Beau's Hiftery of tot Lower Empire, lately publified.

W HFN Constantius Chlorus was made Colorus was made Cæfar in 292, and was sent into Gaul for the delence

: of the West, Constantine itering upon his nineteenth Dioclegan kept him near rion as a hollage, to affore f of the fidelity of his faad caused him to be treated court with the most flatter. mours and diffinctions. He rim into Egypt with him, the war against Achilles, intine, equally qualified to ind to command, gained the of the Emperor, and the f the troops by his bravery, iderstanding, his generofity, thrength of body, that reevery fatigut. It was proin this expedition that he nade Tribune of the First rifing glory drew upon him At his return from eve. the people ran out to meet and pressed with eagerness tain a fight of him; Every announced a Prince born e Empire. He marched at the hand of Dioclesian: His mels diftinguished him from oft. A noble haughtiness, rair of firength and vigour, d throughout his whole perxcited at the first glance a ent of fear. But this warpect was inferred by an ade ferensty spread over his es. He had a heart great, , and inclined to magnifi-; fail of courage, probity, love of judice, which mod his natural ambition, est this counterpolie, there othing he would not have expable of undertaking and ing. His temper was quick rdent, without being prete; penetrating without nifand without jealoufy; prudent, and at the same time ready in determining: In thort, to finith here his portrait, his vifage was broad and of a fresh colour, with but little hair and beard, his eyes large, his look piercing but conciliating, his neck rather thick, and his note aquiline, his confitution delicate and rather pp. healthy, but which he contrived to fave by leading a fober and abstemious life, and by moderation in his pleasures.

He was chafte in his manners. His youth, ent rely occupied with great and noble deligns, was free from the follies incident to that age. He married young, and as it should feem about the time of his going into Egypt. The birth of Minerving, his first wife, is as unknown as that of Helena, and authors are not less divided above her rank. The issue of this alliance was a Prince called Crifpus, emiaent for his good qualities and his misfortunes. He was born about the year 300, and it was confequently in the East, where his father resided at that time, and not at Arles, as some authors have supposed,

Historians are not agreed in refpeck to Constantine's knowledge and tafte for letters: Some allow him only a flight tincture, others make him entirely ignorant, a few represent him as thoroughly versed in them. His panegyrith Eufeblus, very highly exto's his know-Indge and his elequence, and gives ration an unfortunate proof of th fe great elogiums by a very ling and very titeforce speech, which he pass into the mouth of Confiantine. It is true, that after he was Emperor, he did even more for the triences and literature than they require of a great Prince: Not fatisfied with protecting them, with looking upon them as one of the greatest ornaments of his Empire, and encouraging them by his bounty, he was fond of composing, and even of pronouncing orations. besides that the taste for letters was not that of the court, in which he had been brought up, and that none of the Princes of that-time, except Maximin, piqued themselves upon their knowledge, we fee by the little that remains of his writings, that he had scarce more learning and eloquence than was necessary to gain the applauses of his courtiers, and to persuade himself, that he was not destitute of those qualities.

I cannot believe what some historians say, that Dioclessan, jealous of Constantine's merit, wished to destroy him. So black a design agrees better with the character of Galerius, to whom others attribute it. It appears, that after the expedition into Egypt, Constantine attended the latter in several wars: His fingular valour gave umbrage to this base and arrogant man: Galerius, determined to ruin him, immediately removed from the rank of Casfar, which was due to him by his merit, by his quality, as son of Constantius, by the esteem of the Emperors, and by the love of the people. He retained him however at his court, where the life of this young Prince was in greater danger, than in the midst of battles.

Under the pretence of procuring him glory, Galerius exposed him to the greatest perils. In a war against the Sarmatians, when the two armies were in fight of each other, he commanded him to attack a chief, who, from his predigious fize, appeared the mot formidable of all the Barbarians. Constantine ruibes strait upon the enemy, strikes him down, and dragging him by the hair, brings him trembling to the feet of his Another time, he received orders to fling himself a horseback into a morals, behind which were posted the Sarmatians, and of which the depth was not known: He passes it, shows the way to the Roman troops; overthrows the enemy, and returns after having gained a glorious victory. It is even faid, that the tyrant having obliged him to combat a furious lion, Constantine came off from this combat alle, triumphing over that terrible animal, and the wicked deligns of Galerius.

Constantius had several times demanded the return of his for without being able to get him out of the hands of his colleague. last, being upon the point of going into Great Britain to make war against the Picts, the bad state of his health made him fear the leaving him at his death to the mercy of an ambitious and bloody tyrant. He spoke in a firmer tone; the son, on his side, warmly solicited permission to rejoin his sather; and Galerius, who dared not break openly with Constantius, consented at last to the departure of Constantine. He gave him is the evening the necessary warrant for post-horses, with express isjunctions not to set off the next morning, till he had received freh orders from him. It was with regret that he suffered his prey to cscape, and he only made use of

did

y, that he still might find tence to stop him, or that t have time to give notice as to detain him, when he as through Italy. The

Galerius affected to rebed till noon, and having Constantine to be called, ished to hear that he had a the beginning of the Trembling with rage, he im to be purfued and back : but the purfuit was impofible: Conftantine th the utmost expedition, the precaution to cause all horses that he left on his e bam-firinged; and the rage of the tyrant only the regret of not havd to perpetrate the last ntine like lightning tralyria, and the Alps, berus could have any news and arrived at the port of . as the fleet was fetting e joy of Confantius at iped for encounter is not reffed. He receives into this fon whom fo many had rendered still dearer and mixing together their devery mark of their afhey arrived in Great Briiere Constantius having d the Picts, fell fick, and agth of July, in the year ave beheld our hero, with ays of the rifing fun reion him; let us now trawith our author, and bepicture in that fober light, refled of all glare, the parts their true colours; when ind are the judges, and power can neither prevent cenfare, nor riches gain a plaudit.]

Constantine died the 22d of May, being Whitsunday, at noon, in the Consulate of Felicianus and Titian; having reigned thirty years, nine months, and twenty-seven days, and lived fixty-three years, two months, and twenty-five days.

As foon as he was dead; his guards showed signs of the most poignant grief: they tore their clothes, they threw themselves upon the ground and beat their heads. In the midft of their fobs and lamentable cries, they called him their mafter, their emperor. their father. The Tribunes, the Centurions, and the foldiers, who had to often been witnesses of his valour in the field, feemed defirous of following him even to the grave. This lofs was more grievous to them than the most bloody defeat. The inhabitants of Nicomedia ran confusedly through the streets; mixing their groams and tears. It was a particular mourning in every family; every one, in weeping for his Prince, wept for his own private lofs.

The body was carried to Conflantinople in a golden coffin covered with purple. The foldiers in pensive silence preceded and followed the corpse. It was deposited adorned with the purple and diadem in the principal apartment of the palace, upon an elevated estrade in the midst of a great number of slambeaux in golden candlesticks. The guards surrounded it night and day. The generals, counts and great officers came every day, as it he had been still living, to pay their duty at stated times, and saluted him with the bended knee. The senators and magistrates entered asterwards in their turn; and after them a crowd of people of every age and sex.

The whole Empire lamented this great Prince. His conquests, his laws, the superb edifices, with which he had adorned all the provinces, Constantinople itself, the whole of which was one magnificent monument erecled to his glory, had gained him the general admi-. ration: his liberality and love for his people had acquired him their affection. He was fond of the city of Rheims, and it is undoubtedly to him, and not to his son, that we ought to attribute the building of hot-baths there at his own expence: the pompous elogium, which the inscription of these baths bears, can only be applicable to the father; he had ditcharged Tripoli in Africe, and Nice in Bithynia, from certain burthensome contributions, to which the preceding Emperors had subjected these cities for more than a century. He had accepted the title of Strategus or Prætor of Athens, a dignity which fince Gal-I canus was become superior to that rf Archon: he caused a large quantity of corn to be distributed there annually: and this donation v. is established for ever. Rome Finilized i felf beyond the other cities by the excess of her grief. and reproached herfelf with having c cafeer d this Prince many bitter : Mictions, and with having forced him to prefer Byzantium; penetrated with regret the accused herfelf as the guilty cause of the elevation of her modern rival. tribs and markets were flut up; the spectacles and all other public amusements were forbid; the general convertation was upon the loss which they had sustained. The people declared aloud that they would have no other emperors than the children of Constantine, They demanded with importunity, that the corps of their Emperor should be sent to them; and their grief augmented when they learned, that it remained at Constantinople. They paid honours to the picture of him, in which he was represented as seated in heaven. Idolatry, ever extravagant, placed hia amongst the number of those gods which he had overthrown, and by a ridiculous confusion, several of his medals bear the title of God with the monogram of Christ. Is the cabinets of antiquarians are preferred others, such as Eusebius describes: Constantine is there seen seated in a car drawn by foor horses: he appears to be drawn up to heaven by a hand, which comes out of the clouds.

The church has paid him more real honours. Whilft the Pagass were making him a god, the Christians made him a saint. His festivals were celebrated in the Eak with that of Helena, and the fervice for him, which is very ancient among the Greeks, attributes to him miracles and cures. stantinople a monastery was built under the name of Saint Couffantine. Extraordinary honours were paid to his tomb and to his fiator, which were placed upon a column of porphyry. The fathers of the council of Chalcedon thought they did honour to Marcian, the most religious of princes, by faluting him with the name of the New Constantine. In the ninth century, at Rome, they fill recited his

D2426

. Mass with that of Theobe first, and of the rest of # respected princes. In I there were feveral churches ars dedicated to him. In a there is the town of Saint tine, four miles from Mount to. At Prague in Bohes memory was for a long moured, and fome of his vere preferved there. The on of Constantine and of have extended even into y: and the modern Greeks ily give him the title of the Apofiles.

antine's failings will not s to fubicribe to fo hyperan eulogium. The sighttacles of fo many captives d by wild beafts, the death in who was innocent, that vife whose too precipitate ent bore the appearance ice, fufficiently evince that od of the barbarians Rill in his veins; and that if good and merciful in his r, he became cruel and ful through passion. Perhad fufficient cause to put the two Licinii; but pofsa right to condemn prino have not taken the trouuftify themfelves at their He loved the church; its liberty and splender to ut eafy to be feduced, he ed it when he thought to , relying too much upon understanding, and rewith too much credulity a good faith of wicked ho furrounded him; he 1 up to perfecution pretho, with greater reason to be compared to the

The exile and deposition XIII.

of the defenders of the faith of Nice, balance at least the glory of having affembled that famous council. Incapable himself of diffimulation, he too easily became the dupe of heretics and courtiers. Imitator of Titus Antoninus, and Marcus Aurelius, he loved his people, and wished to be beloved by them; but this very fund of goodness, which made him cherift them, rendered them miferable; he spared even those who pillaged them; quick and ardent in prohibiting abuses, flow and backward in punishing them; coverous of glory, and perhaps rather too much in trifles. He is reproached with having been more addicted to raillery than becomes a great prince. As for the rest, he was chafte, pious, laborious, and indefatigable; a great general, fuccetsful in war, and deferving his faccess by his shining valour, and by the brightness of his genius; a protector of arts, and an encourager of them by his bereficence. If we compare him with Augustor, we shall find that he ruined idolatry by the same precautions, and the same address, which the other employed to deftroy liberty. Like A iguitus, he laid the foundation. of a new empire; but lefs fkilful, and less politic, he could not give it the fame stability; he weakened the body of the flate by adding to it, in some measure, a second head in the foundation of Constantinople; and transporting the center of motion and frength too near the eattern extremity, he left without heat, and almost without life, the western parts, which seen became a prey to the barbarians.

The Pagans were too much his cormies to do him justice. Eutropius, tropius says, that in the former part of his reign, he was equal to the most accomplished princes, and in the latter to the meanest. The younger Victor, who makes him to have reigned more than one-and-thirty years, pretends that in the first ten years he was a hero, In the twelve fucceeding ones a robber, and in the ten last a spendthrift. It is easy to perceive, with respect to these two reproaches of Victor's, that the one relates to the riches which Constantine took from idolatry, and the other to those with which he loaded the church.

Au Account of the Circoncelliones, in Africa; from the same.

OUR author, after giving an account of the Donatills, proceeds as follows:

A haughty, extravagant, fiery fect was a subject thoroughly prepared for fanaticism; accordingly there crose among them, in what year is not precifely known, but during the life of Constantine, a species of madmen, who were called Circoncellienes, because they were continually rambling round the houses in the country. It is incredible what ravages and cruelties these vagabonds conmitted in Africa through a long feries of years. They were illiterate, fav. ge pealants, who understood only the Punic language. Intoxicated with a barbarous zeal, they renounced agriculture, professed contitence, and allumed the title of Vindicators of Jullice, and Proted us of the Oppress. To accomglish their million, they enfronchied ilaves, icoured the roads, forced masters to alight from their chariots, and run before their flaves, whom they obliged to mount in their place; and discharged debtors, killing the creditors, if they refused to cancel their bonds. But the chief object of their creeky was the Catholics, and especially those who had renounced Dopatism. At first they used no sweets, because God had forbid the use of one to St. Peter; but they were armed with clubs, which they called the clubs of Israel; and which they handled in fuch a manner, as to break all the boses of a man without killing him co the spot; so that he languished a long time, and then died. they took away a man's life st once, they looked upon it as a favour. They became less scrupslous afterwards, and made use of all forts of arms. Their shout was Praise be to God; these works in their mouths were a figual of flaughter, more terrible than the roaring of a lion. They had isvenced an unheard-of punishment; which was to cover with lime, dilated with vinegar, the eyes of unhappy wretches, when the, had cruthed with blows, and covered with wounds, and to abanden them in that condition. Next was a ftronger proof, what horror fuperflitten can beget in mist deflirate of knowledge and ha-Thefe brutes, who had made a vow of chaffing, gave themfelies up to wine, and all forts of impurities, running about with women and vourg girls as drunk as themfelves, whom they called facred virgins, and who often carried proofs of their incontinence. Their chiefs took the name of Chief: of the Saints. After having glutted themselves with blood, ned their rage upon themad fought death with the y with which they gave it s. Some ferambled up to of rocks, and cast themown headlong in multithere barned themselves, themselves into the sea. who proposed to acquire of martyrs, published it ste; upon which they were and faitened like oxen for after these preparations, out to be defiroyed. Someey gave money to those ney met, and threatened er them if they did not em martyrs. Theodoret account of a flout, bold an, who, meeting with a thefe fanatics, confented hem, provided he might m first; and having by is put it out of their power themfelves, whipped them as he was able, and left d in that manner. Their retended to blame them, , made use of them to insuch as might be tempted · their fect; they even hoem as faints. They were ver able to govern thefe positers; and more than id themfelves under a neabandoning them, and mploring the affiftance of ar power against them. ts Urfacius and Taurinus loyed to quell them: they a great number of them, the Donatitts made for rtyrs. Urfacius, who was latholic, and a religious ing loft his life in an enwith the Barbarians, the did not fail to triumph in his death, as an effect of the vengeance of Heaven. Africa was the theatre of these bloody scenes, during the remainder of Constantine's life.

Character of Lewis XIII. of France; from Lord Herbert of Cherbury's Memoirs.

" HIS being done, I prefented to the king a letter of Credence from the king my mafter; the king affored me of a reciprocal affection to the king my mafter, and of my particular welcome to his court: his words were never many, as being to extreme a ftutterer, that he would fometimes hold his tongue out of his mouth a good while before he could speak fo much as one word; he had befides a double row of teeth, and was observed seldom or never to fpit or blow his nofe, or to fweat much, tho' he were very laborious. and almost indefatigable in his exercifes of hunting and hawking, to which he was much addicted a neither did it hinder him, tho' he was burft in his body, as we call it, or Herniofus; for he was noted in those sports, though oftentimes on foot, to tire not only his courtiers, but even his lackies, being equally infentible, as was thought, either of heat or cold; his underftanding and natural parts were as good as could be expected, in one that was brought up in fo much . ignorance, which was on purpofe fo done that he might be the longer governed; howbeit he acquired in time a great knowledge in affairs, as converting for the most part with wife and active persons. He was noted to have two qualities

F. 2

incident

incident to all who were ignorantly brought up, suspicion and dissimulation; for as ignorant persons walk so much in the dark, they cannot be exempt from fear of stumbling; and as they are likewise deprived of, or desicient in those true principles, by which they should govern both public and private actions in a wife, folid, and demonstrative way, they strive commonly to supply these imperfections with covert arts, which though it may be sometimes excusable in necessitous persons, and be indeed frequent among those who negociate in small matters, yet is condemnable in princes, who proceeding upon foundations of reason and strength, ought not to submit themselves to such poor helps: howbeit I must observe, that neither his fears did take away his courage, when there was occasion to use it, nor his distimulation extend itself to the doing of private mischiefs to his subjects, either of one or the other religion: his favourite was one Monsieur De Luynes, who in his non-age gained much upon the king, by making hawkes fly at all little birds in his gardens, and by making some of those little birds again catch butterslies; and had the king used him for no other purpose, he might have been tolerated; but as, when the king came to a riper age, the government of public affairs was drawn chiefly from his counsels, not a few errors were committed.

The queen-mother, princes, and nobles of that kingdom repined that his advices to the king should be so prevalent, which also at last caused a civil war in that kingdom. How unsit this man was for the credit he had with the king may be argued by this: that when there was question made about some basiness in Bohemia, he demanded whether it was an inland country, or lay upon the sea?

A short Character of the late Sir Joseph Yates.

HE late Sir Joseph Yates was one of those who, very early in life, attached himself w the study of the laws, not as the generality of students do, either from the appointment of parents, or the mere motives of drawing pecuniary resources from the profession, but from the more liberal principle of informing himself in science, which only appeared important to him from being capable of defending the lives and properties of individuals. this open and enlarged turn of mind, he pursued his enquiries with a perseverance and precision almost peculiar to himself, till the profession repaid him, by storing his mind with an universal knowledge of its laws, which very rarely falls to the lot of the greatest ulents, or most diligent researches. His invincible modelty, however, repelled him the notice of the publie for many years, till at last the repeated justacis of his opinions. and forcibility of his pleadings, procured him a coif, from where he was some time afterwards promoted to one of the judges of the King's-Bench.

In this character he always conducted himself with a dignity and impartiality that reflected honour even on that respectable situation. The right of the subject, and the dignity of the crown, were never in, but by the established of the law; and a steady poblervance of it, formed able rule of his conduct. arges to Juries, were not es of an Affatte Cadi dehis own will, but the of a British judge in the serty, and will be rememmany years with pleafure wers of freedom and orais there he appeared more dian of the people, than of the crown; and hit med um, as a distributor fo ilmitly, that the ofparty, whill they felt the met, could not refrain apthe chadifer.

CCC3-

the laws, his force conty in common pleadings, ich he was the most miquainted of any man of Sensible that his talents more Arongly this way, elate resignation of judge licited to change from the tench to the Common lich he succeeded in, but did not long live to enthy depriving the world the greatest judges, of the greatest judges, of racter as a lawyer, thoralarly marked for knowcandour, was by no minished as a gentleman.

ate knowledge of the artices, a fine taste of the me, joined to an uncomanthropy of temper, ennot only the esteem, but it admiration of his aces; and when he died, dm in their friendships,

By explained by will or which can only be filled up by a m, but by the established recollection of what he was.

Genuine Anecdotes of the Life of the late Peter Collinson, F. R. S.

HE ingenious author of this little piece justly observes, that to place before the public an example worthy of imitation, is no inconsiderable service. The great and good Author of Nature, has implanted a principle in every breast which necessarily approves of a conduct directed to the advantage of mankind. Of what we approve we are naturally emulous, and the tribute that is publicly paid to the memory of a worthy man, may well be confidered as a kind of reward offered for the encouragement of merit.

Mr. Peter Collinson was of an ancient family in the North, and the great grandson of Peter Collinson, who lived on his paternal estate called Hugal-Hall, or Height of Hugal, near Windermere-lake, in the parish of Stavely, about ten miles from Kendal in Westmore-land. What was his father's profession, or where he lived, does not appear.

He was born in the year 1693, and bred to trade as a wholefale dealer, in what is called Man's Mercery; a brother whose name was James, seems also to have been bred to the same business, probably by their father.

Peter and James became partners, which was a fortunate circumfiance for them both, because living in great harmony, and their business not requiring their presence together, they had both leisure to attend their particular studies and pursuits, whether of pleasure or improvement.

E 3 purluitt,

Peter, while a youth, had discovered a strong attachment to natural history; insects and their several metamorphoses, employed many of those hours, which, at his time of life, are generally spent upon other objects. Plants also engaged his attention, and he very early began to make dried specimens.

While he was yet a young man his diligent curiosity, with respect to these objects, procured him the acquaintance of the most eminent naturalitis of that time, particularly of Derham, Woodward, Dale, Lloyd, and Six-Hans Sloane. contracted a friendship also with the late Sir Charles Wager, who enriched Sir Han's collection, now constituting the British Museum, with many curiofities, which, being excited by Mr. Collinson, he picked up in the course of his many voyages, encouraging also the commanders under him, who were stationed in different parts of the globe, to procure whatever was rare and valuable in every branch of natural history, for the fame kind and liberal purpose.

Among the vast variety of articles in that immense treasury of nature, there were very sew with the history of which Mr. Collinson was not yet acquainted, his familiarity with Sir Hans being such that he visited him at all times, and continued to do so till his death.

Besides his acquaintance with natural history, his knowledge of the antiquities of his own country was very considerable. In December 1728, when he was about five-and-thirty years old, he was elected a Member of the Royal Society, and was a Member of the Society of Antiquarians from its first institution.

To the Royal Society he was one of the most diligent and useful Members it had; he not only supplied many curious observations himself, but he promoted and preserved a most extensive correspondence with the learned and ingenious of all countries. The Autiquarians he also surnished with many curious articles of intelligence and observation, with respect to the particular objects of their enquiry, as well at home as abroad.

Wherever he was, or however feemingly engaged, nothing that deserved his notice at any time escaped him, and he minuted down every striking hint that occurred either in reading or conversation. With such hints, conversation perhaps furnished him still more than books; for there was scarce a ma of learning and ingenuity, whatever was his profession, in England, that was not of his acquaintance: and of the foreigners who came hither, either for improvement or pleasure, those who were eminent for their knowledge of natural history, or proficiency in any art or science, were constantly recoumended to his notice and friendthip; among these was the cekbrated Linnæus, with whom, duing his residence in England, Mr. Collinson contracted an intimate friendship, which was reciprocally, increased by a multitude of good offices, and continued without any diminution to the last.

These recommendations were the natural consequences of his extensive foreign correspondence, which he maintained with the greatest punctuality. Heacquainted and ingenious in diis of the globe with the s and improvements that s here in various branches age; and there is fearce of the world from which at receive informations of kind in return.

9

this correspondence of linfon, his native country many instances, derived antage and honour.

year 1730, a subscription as fet on foot at Philadelmerica, to which Mr. Colide several valuable pred procured others from a.

hom was Dr. Franklin, infon transmitted the earunt of every new Euprovement in agriculture arts, and every philososcovery. In 1745 he sent ecount of some new expen electricity, which had made in Germany, with she, and some directions ight be used so as to repeat was the first notice that iklin had of that curious which, encouraged by the eception that Mr. Collinto his letters concerning rosecuted with a success made him eminent in intry in Europe, and pro-his own the honour of rft reduced phenomena to with respect to this great gent, powerfully and persperating, though hitherto own to exist.

is in some future period, ant which Mr. Collinson of the management of there in Spain, with respect to their migrations from the mountains to the plains, and back from the plains to the mountains, which he published in the year 1764, may not be considered among the least of the benefits that have accrued from his extensive and inquisitive correspondence.

When America is better peopled, the mountainous parts more habitable, the plains unloaded of their vast forests, and cultivated, the finest sheep in the world may possibly cover the plains of Carolina, Georgia, and East and West Florida, in the winter months, and retreat to the mountains as the fummer heats increase and dry up the herbage. We are at present utter ftrangers to this exconomy, which might, perhaps, be practifed with advantage even in Eng. land; with this difference, that the hills should be chosen for the refidence of thefe animals in winter, proper thelter being made for them, and the wetter low-lands referred for their pasture in fummer,

So long ago, as theyear 1740, he was confiderable among those who were best acquainted with botany and natural history in England. His collection was very large; his specimens were well chosen; he had a botanical garden at Mill-hill near Enfield, which at that time contained may curious plants not to be found in any other, the number of which was continually increasing till his death.

This collection and garden brought him acquainted with many persons of rank and distinction in this kingdom, who were distinguished by their taste in planting and horticulture, or desirous to make rural improvements. some of these he frequently spent a few days at their feats, commending and censuring what he approved and disapproved in the defigns they were carrying on, with an integrity and taste that didequal honour to the simplicity of his manners, and the rectitude of his judgment. Frequent opportunities, during a long life, had furnished him with an extensive experience of the effects of different methods of cultivation, and of the particular foil and aspect which were best adapted to different plants and trees; how beauties might be best improved, and incurable defects by this knowledge he hidden: often prevented young planters from committing capital mittakes, rectified others, into which they had been missed, either by the ignorant or the designing, and prevailed upon many of his friends to adopt this rational amusement, and perievere in it, to the mutual advantage of themselves and their country. I never knew an instance, faid Mr. Collinson, in which the pursuit of such pleasures did not either find temperance and virtue, or make them.

E 4 make

He was the first that introduced the great variety of seeds and shrubs which are now the principal ornaments of every garden; and it is owing to his inquisitive industry the to many persons of the first distinction are now able to see, in their own domains, groves that have been transplanted from the Western continent, slourish with the same luxuriance as those which are indigenous to Britain.

As his mercantile business was transacted chiefly with North-America, he interested himself in whaever might contribute to its advatage. He used to observe to the Virginians, that their present staple is tobacco; a plant of which the confumption depends wholly upon the caprice of custom and fashion, and he therefore frequently arged them to think of something more permanent, fomething necessary w the natural subliftence or enjoyment of life. He observed that vines would thrive as well in their country as tobacco; but, said he, do not keep them close to the ground, as we are forced to do for want of a little more fun and heat: your fummer-heats exceed, as much as ours fall short; allow your vines therefore longer stems; kt them be trained to and supported by trees, and hide their fruit among the foliage, as they do in the warmer parts of Europe. occasion our author observes, that in most of our northern and southern colonies there is a great variety of native grapes growing wild in the woods, and twining among the trees and bushes for support: that feveral of these are capable of producing a rich good wine, as appears by experiment; and that where the attempt has failed, the fault has been not in the fruit, but in the want either of skill or careis making the wine. I have myk!, says he, tasted some very good wine from the wild uncultivated grape of America, which has been hallily made without experience, and sent over to England. It is reasonable therefore to conclude, that if proper care was taken to improve the grape by cultivation, and the wine by a diligent and skilful process in the making its Amo

ca might become one of the slebrated wine countries upon

Collinson was also of opithat flax, hemp, and filk, be cultivated in our Amecolonies with equal advanthem and to us.

was a remarkable inflance, e who is never idle, need be in a horry! He was alloing fomething, and theretransacted all his domestic sercantile affairs, and prehis extensive and multifarirrespondence with a quiet rity and filent dispatch, that prevented embarrafiment lay. The blameless simplihis manners, and the careonomy of his time, kept his perpetually ferene, and feis always eafily improved tearfulneis.

flature was below the mide, and his body was rather ent; his habit was plain, ; been bred a quaker; his kind and liberal, and his r open and communicative. as an exconomist, but his my was by no means fevere. d a heart that sympathised liftrefs, and a hand that was s open to relieve it. As his nd rational pleasures saved rom the fashionable follies generally encroach far upon ght, he role very early in the ng. When he was in Lone applied to the bufinels of unting-house; when in the y, he was almost continumployed in his garden, obg and affilling the progress etation, which equally coned to his pleafure and his

He was in the highest degree fond both of flowers and freit. Of fruit he always made the principal part of his meal; and his house was never without flowers, from the early snowdrop to the autumnal cyclamen.

Notwithstanding his temperance he was sometimes attacked by the gout; but in other respects he enjoyed persect health, and great equality of spirits.

In the autumn of the year 1768, he went to visit Lord Petre, for whom he had a singular regard, at his house in Essex; and while he was there, he was seized with a total suppression of urine, which, bassing all the efforts of medicine, put an end to his life on the 11th day of August, just as he had arrived at the 75th year of his age.

Inclosed in his will was found a paper importing, "That he hoped "he should leave behind him a "good name, which he valued "more than riches; that he had "endeavoured not to live uselesly; and that his constant aim through life had been to be a "friend to mankind."

Without any pretentions to what is generally called learning, he knew more both of nature and of art, than nine in ten of those who pride themselves in having it. His time had been spent not in learning the names of things in different languages, but in acquiring the knowledge of their nature and properties, their productions and use. Without public station, he was the means of national advantages; he had an influence that wealth cannot give, and will be honoured when titles are forgotten.

Memoirs of the Rev. Mr. George Whitefield.

THE considerable figure which the late Mr. Whitesfield for many years made in his ecclesiastical capacity, ranking his death in the catalogue of memorable events, a cursory memoir of his life cannot fail of giving general satisfaction; we have therefore from his own journal selected what we judge necessary for the principal execution of the task, and shall regulate our opinion of his general character by the best accounts we can obtain from his cotemporaries.

" I was born in Gloucester, fays Mr. Whitefield, in the month of December 1714, at the Bell Inn, and can truly fay I was froward from my mother's womb.-I was so brutish as to hate instruction, and used purposely to shun all opportunities of receiving it. can date some very early acts of uncleanness. Lying, filthy talking, and foolish jesting I was much addicted to.—Sometimes I used to curse, if not swear.—Stealing from my mother I thought no theft at all, and used to make no scruple of taking money out of her pocket before the was up. — I have frequently betraved my trutt, and have more than once spent money I took in the houf, in buying fruits, tarts, &c. to fatisfy my fenfual appetite. -- Numbers of fabbaths have I broken, and generally used to behave myself very irreverently in God's functuary. Much money have I ipent in plays, and in the common enterminations of the age. — Cards, and reading romances, were my heart's delight. Often have I joined with others in playing roguish tricks, but was generally, if not always kepping detected.—For this I have often since, and do now, bless and praise Goo.

It would be endless to recount the fins and offences of my younger days - they are more in number than the hairs of my head. — My heart would fail me at the remembrance of them, was I not affured that my redcemer liveth, ever to make intercession for me.—However the young man in the gospel might boalt how he had kept the commandments from his youth, with shame and confusion of face I confess, that I have broken them all from my youth. ---- Whatever foreseen fitness for salvation others may talk of, and glory in, I disclaim-any such thing-if I trace myself from my cradle to my manhood, I can see nothing in me but a fitness to be damned; and if the Almighty had not prevented me by his grace, and wrought most powerfully upon my foul, quickening me by his free spirit when dead in trespasses and fins, I had now either been fitting in darknels, and in the shadow of death, or condemned, as the due reward of my crimes, to be for ever litting up my eyes in torments.

But such was the free grace of God to me, that though corruption worked so strongly in my soul, and produced such early and bitter fruits, yet I can recolled very early movings of the Blessed Spirit upon my heart, sufficient to satisfy me that God loved me with an everlasting love, and separated n from my mother's womb, work for which he afterras pleased to call me.

early fome convictions of d once I remember, when e: loos (as they frequently ade it their bufin-fe to teame immediately retired to my and, kneeling down, with ers, prayed over that pfalm a David to often repeats thefe But in the name of the Lord defirey them. I was always f being a clergyman, nied itly to imitate the ministers prayers, &c. Part of the I lied to Real from my pagave to the poor, and fome privately took from others, high I have fince reflored ld) I remember were books rtion.

mother was very careful of ocation, and always kept my tender years from interng in the least with the pubnels, ut the tenth year of my age, fed Gov to permit my momarry a fecond time. It what the world woold call appy match, but God overt for good.-

m I was about twelve, I was at a school called St. Mary spt in Gloucester, the last ar-school I ever went to, g a good elocution and me-I was remarked for making is before the corporation at nnual vifitation. But I can- I felt any drawings of Gop. my foul for a year or two, that I laid out tome of the that was given me on one aforementioned occasions, ing Ken's Manual for Wirfcholars, a book that had much affected me when my brother used to read it in my mother's troubles, and which, for some time after I bought it, was of great benefit to my foul.

During the time of my being at school, I was very fond of reading plays, and have kept from fchool for days together, to prepare myfelf for acting them. My master freing how mine and my schoolfellows vein run, composed something of this kind for us himself, and cauled me to dreft myfelf in girl's cloaths (which I had often done) to act a part before the corpocation. The remembrance of this has often covered me with confusion of face, and I hope will do fo, even to the end of my life.

Before I was fifteen, having, as I though, made a fufficient progress in the classics, and, at the bottom, longing to be fet at liberty from the confinement of a school, I one day told my mother, " fince her circumstances would not permit her to give me an univerfity education, more learning I thought would spoil me for a tradefman, and therefore I judged it best not to learn Latin any longer." She at first refused to confent; but my corruptions foon got the better of her good-nature, Hereupon, for fome time, I went to learn to write only. But my mother's circumstances being much on the decline, and being tractable that way. I from time to time began to affiit her occationally in the public house, till at length I put on my blue apron and my fouffers, washed mops, cleaned rooms, and, in one word, became a protested and common drawer.

Notwithilanding I was thus employed in a large inn, and had lometimes. sometimes the care of the whole house upon my hands, yet I composed two or three sermons, and dedicated one of them in particular to my elder brother. One time I remember I was very much preffed to felf-examination, and found myself very unwilling to look into my heart.—Frequently I read the Bible when fitting up at night. Seeing the boys go by to school has often cut me to the heart. And a dear youth (now with God) would often come intreating me, when ferving at the bar, to go to Oxford. My general answer was, I wish I could.

After I had continued about a year in this servile employment, my mother was obliged to leave the inn. My brother, who had been bred up for the business, married, whereupon all was made over to him; and I being accustomed to the house, it was judged belt that I should continue there as an affistant. But it happened that my fifter-in-law and I could by no means agree; and therefore, after continuing a long while under a great burden of mind, I at length (thinking my absence refolved would make all things easy) to go away. Accordingly, by the advice of my brother, and consent of my mother, I went to see my elder brother, then settled Briftol.

Here God was pleased to give me great sensible devotion, and fill me with such unspeakable raptures, particularly once in John's church, that I was carried out beyond myself .- I felt great hungerings and thirdings after the bleffed facrament, and wrote many letters to my niother, telling her I would never go into the pub- conversation, he told her how he had lic employment again. à Kempis was my great delight, and I was always impatient till the bell rung to call me to tread the courts of the Lord's house. the midst of these illuminations. fomething secretly whispered, The would not last.

And indeed it so happened. For (oh that I could write in tears of blood!) when I left Bristol (as I did in about two months) and returned to Gloucester, I changed my devotion with my place. Alas! all my fervour went off, and I had no inclination to go to church, or draw nigh unto God.-However, I had so much religion lest, as to perfift in my resolution not to live in the inn; and therefore my mother gave me leave, though she had but a little income, to have a bed upon the ground, and live at her house, till Providence should point out a place for me.

Having now, as I thought, sothing to do, it was a proper season for Satan to tempt me. Much of my time I spent in reading plays, and in fauntering from place to place. I was careful to adorn my body, but took little pains to deck and beautify my foul.—Evil communications with my old schoolfellows foon corrupted my good manners. By feeing their evil practices, all sense of religion gradually wore off my mind, and I at length fell into a secret fin, the dismal effects of which I have felt, and groaned under ever fince.

Having lived thus for fome considerable time, a young student, who was once my school-fellow, and then a servitor of Pembroke college, Oxford, came to pay my mother a visit. Amongst other discharged

irged all college expences that r, and received a penny. that my mother immediately out, " This will do for my Then turning to me, id, " Will you go to Ox-George ?" I replied, With beart. - Whereupon, havhe fame friends that this thudent had, my mother, ut delay waited on them. promifed their interest to se a ferwitor's place in the college. She then applied old mafter, who much apd of my coming to school sbout a week I went and enmyfelf, and spared no pains forward in my book. God leased to give me his bleshing, learned much faster than J efore. But all this while I wed in fin: and at length quainted with fuch a fet of ched, abandoned, atheistical s, that if God, by his free, rited, and especial grace, had elivered me out of their . I should long fince have the (corner's chair. --- By ig company with them, my hts of religion grew more and ike theirs. I went to pubrice only to make fport, and about. I took pleafure in ewd converfation. I began on as they did, and was in way of being as infamous worlt of them.

(oh Rupendous love!) Gon here Rupped me, when runn in a full career to hell. For I was upon the brink of he gave me such a distaste of rinciples and practices, that wered them to my master, who at a flop to their proceedings.

Being thus delivered out of the fearer of the devil, I began to be more and more ferious, and felt the spirit of Gop at different times working powerfully and convinceingly upon my foul. One day in particular, as I was coming down thairs, and overheard my friends speaking wellof me, Gop to deeply convicted me of hypocrify, that though I had formed frequent but ineffectual refolutions before, yet I had then power given me over my fecret and darling fin. Notwithstanding, some time after being overtaken in liquor (as I have been twice or thrice in my lifetime) Satan gained his usual advantage over me again.—An experimental proof to my poor foul, how that wicked one makes use of intemperate men as machines to work them up to just what he pleafes."

Thus far we have proceeded in Mr. Whitefield's own words, but the narrowness of our limits obliging us to practife brevity, we fliail only add, that Mr. Whitefield being admitted a fervitor at Oxford. very foon diffinguished himself by the aufterities of his devotion, and acquired confiderable emmence in fome religious affemblies of that city; " lying whole days and weeks profitate on the ground in filent or vocal prayer, leaving of the earing of fruits; chufing the worlt fort of food, though his place fornished him with variety; thinking it unbecoming a penitent to have his hair powdered; wearing woollen gloves, a patched gown and dirty shoes," to contract a habit of humility.

At the age of twenty-one the fame of Mr. Whiteheld's piety recommended him to much to Dr. 2 Benton.

Benson, the then bishop of Gloucester, that he made him a voluntary offer of ordination, which Mr. Whitefield at last thought proper to accept, and immediately after this regular admission into the ministry, applied himself to the most extraordinary, the most indefatigable duties of his character, preaching daily in prilens, fields, and open streets, wherever he thought there would be a likelihood of making profelytes; till having at length made himfelf univerfally known in England, he embarked for America, where the tenets of Methodism began spread very fast under his triends, the Mr. Wesleys, and first determined upon the infliration of the orphan-house at Georgia, which he afterwords effected. —— At what sime Mr. Whitefield married, or with whom, we are not able, nor is it perhaps material to inform our readers .- Suffice it, that after a long courte of peregrination, his fortune encreased as his fame extended among his followers, and he erected two very extensive buildings for public worthip, under the name of tabernacles, one in Tottenham-court Road, other in Moerfields; here, with the help of some assistants, he centinued for feveral vears, attended by very crouded congregations, and quitting the kingdom only occasionally .-- America, however, which always engaged much of his attontion, was dettined to close his eyes; and he died at Newbery, about forty miles from Botton in New England, on the 30th of last September. His ditoruer was a vinlent ashma, which in a few lours put a period to his life, in the 55th year of his age.

Besides the two tabern: ready mentioned, Mr. Wilby being chaplain to the dowager of Huntingdon, nected with two other meetings, one at Bath, other at Tunbridge, chiefly under that lady's patronag influence among his follow extensive: and so univershe esteemed the principal of the Methodists, that maracters have been given in this prints to this effect.

"As the worth of this tru and extraordinary person deeply imprest upon the h every friend to true, genuit vital christianity, who ha fited by his unwearied labor tle need be faid to convinc that their loss is irreparable, his public ministrations thre different parts of Europe. fundry vifits to British A he hath, for above 30 year nished the world as a proeloquence; by which he v abled to melt the hearts of t Obdurate and fiubborn finne

In spite of a constitution : originally delicate and ten continued to the last day of to preach with a frequen fervour that seemed to exc natural strength of the most Being call d to the public of of his function at an age wh you try men are only begin qualify themselves for it, not time to make any co able progress in the learn guages; but this defect w ply supplied by a lively, and practrating genius, nost universed zeul, and b ci ile and most persualive d which never failed of the m his ever crowded and audiences. And though pit he often found it nethe terrors of the Lord to wa, he had nothing gloonature, being angularly , and tender hearted; ils private convertation communicative, and ea-. To the very meanest ways eafy of accels, and eady to listen to and rer bodily as their spiritual , thewing bimfelf in every faithful fleward of the exparities he drew from his . and compaffionate hearsught also to be observed, instantly and most pathetiorced upon his audience oral duty; particularly, n their different callings, ience to their superiors; most especial manner loyir amiable fovereign, neadeavouring in these dismes to make a factious use at influence he held among rous adherents. He was if those (fince known by of Method. ft.) who endeay the most extraordinary preaching in different ed even in the open fields, he lower class of the peothe last degree of inattenignorance, to a fense of among whom he hath moreffion, which cannot ffaced.—For this, and for labours, the name of Whitefield will long be

ed with efteem and vene-

ration, not only by his personal acquaintance, by those who were awaked by his ministry, but by all true christians of every denomination, whilst vital and practical religion hath a place in the British dominions."

Such is the portrait drawn of Mr. Whitefield by the Methodifis; the enemies of that feet however, particularly the very learned author of The Enthusiasia of Methodiffs and Papifts compared, are to fur from admitting his pretentions to an extraordinary portion of fanctity, that they politively pronounce him a most prosligate hypocrite; his piety they attribute to avarice; his zeal to pride; and his very homility to oftentation.-They tell us, that during life he was continually boasting of his poverty, yet at his death they talk of his being immenfely rich .- This is not all, his late progress to America is set down to the groffest account; an attachment to a woman, by whom he had a child while his wife was living; and it is even added that this child was the first infant ever entered into his orphan-house of Georgia. How far the character on either fide may be just, we do not by any means precend to affirm; the chief particulars of his history we have extracted from his own writings, and as we have given the most flattering ealogium that has been published by his friends, we cannot be deemed partial in mentioning the opinion of his enemies.

NATURAL HISTOR

An extraordinary Case of three Pins swallowed by a Girl, and discharged at her shoulder. In a Letter to Frank Nicholls, M. D. F. R. S. from Dr. Lysons, of Gloucester.

To Charles Morton, M.D. Sec. R.S.

[Read January 25, 1769.]

Epfom, Nov. 25, 1768.

DEAR SIR,

INCLOSED I send you a most extraordinary case, which is transmitted to me by Dr. Lysons, a gentleman of great learning and credit, and physician to the Gloucester hospital. It seems to be exactly drawn, and the doctor's veracity may be depended on. I think it well worth preserving in the Memoirs of the Society; and believe that the Council will have the same opinion of it as,

Your very humble fervant, Fran. Nicholls.

PON my mentioning the case of a girl who swallowed three pins, which were asterwards discharged at her shoulder, you thought it might be proper for the Philosophical Transaction desired me to send it yo drawn it from notes tal my attendance upon he much accuracy as possible as follows.

Eleanor Kaylock, a ro girl, aged twenty-two mitted a patient in the infirmary, May 29, 1; pain in her side proces pins swallowed three qu year before. The occas accident was thus. Bein ed in the business of a k she was scumming the mouth being open and in it) she received a q the vapours, which obli fwallow, and the pins s time passed into the where they remained weeks, notwithstanding methods were used for moval; but they were ced down by the whaleb ment used by surgeons purpofe.

Whilst the pins we throat, the parts became and swoln, which occumonateness, attended where and difficulty of libering also capable of but very little nourished that only liquids, the was to so weak a state as not to get out of her bed.

tre removed the could fwalids, and recovered firength at to go out again to feri her former employment.
I hired as an under-fervant atleman's kitchen, but was bliged to quit her place, iply for relief, any extray motion aggravating her ints, and occasioning vioinvulsions, from which the t recover for eight or nine

When she came to the in-, she appeared full of sless, ruddy complexion, and in health, excepting the sol-complaints.

had a pain in her right fide, the false ribs, which she first mediately upon the removal pins from the assophagus, continued to the time of miffion at the hospital, but of violent when the moved ink of her body forwards towards the left, or lifted right arm. At her admised from the time of the reof the pins, the hourseness s troubled with foon after is first ituck in her throat, sed; the often fpit up blood, La violent cough, by which, i as by labour, or any exmotion, the pain in her fide greatly aggravated, the was I to fit or fall down immeand could not recover so as to be able to fland. than an hour. In these fine the had always a paid head, was fick at flomach, quently brought up blood. if the was in the infirmary, lence of the pain three times med convultion-fits, by which femlus rectus superior of the ye was to violently affected, . XIII.

that, notwithflanding the eye was open, yet the pupil was entirely covered by the eye-lid; and, after one of these fits, continued so for a fortnight. The left eye was also inverted in the fame menner, but the confiriction was removed in # week. When these spasmodic affections left her, the did not recover her eye-fight for fome days; the optic nerve being probably oppreffed; but the left eye always recovered fooner than the right, being never to strongly convulsed. None of the other mufcles appeared to be affected, except in the paroxylms. While the pins were in the arfophagus, the furgeon was utterly at a loss where to direct his inftruments, as there was no certain indication where the pins were lodged. And the physician's practice could be only palliative, uflubricating medicines, according as the various symptoms occasionally required. In this manner things went on to the beginning of August, when a imali painful tumour, the fize of a man's shumb, appeared upon the right shoulder, which disappeared in the compass of a week without coming to suppuration. Afterwards fuch another small tomour appeared upon the left shoulder, which increased; and, by the care of Mr. Cramp. the attending furgeon, was brought to suppuration, and opened by him, August 20, when a large table spoonful of matter was difcharged. Upon removing the dreffings, the next day, a larger quantity of matter flowed out, and with it iffued one of the pins. Mr. Crump then examined with his probe if he could find either of the others, but could not: however, the day following, the other two pins were also discharged at the These pins were all iame wound. of the same length, each measuring five quarters of an inch. wound at which these pins were discharged was upon the superior part of the scapula. After the girl had received her cure, and was discharged from the infirmary (which happened September the fourth), I compared her shoulder with Cowper's Anatomical Tables on the Muscles; and, as near as I can guels, the wound was upon the fleshy belly of the trapefius. And yet the pain in the patient's fide attended her as long as the pins remained in the wound, but left her foon after they were difcharged, as did also her cough, and spitting of blood. obliged to lead a sedentary life, in the infirmary, and to keep herfelf as quiet as possible, her catamenia left her; but her spitting of blood could not be attributed to that defeet, because she was very regular before her admission, and yet she had fpit blood from the time the pins were removed from the colophagus, which was some months before the came to the infirmary.

able satisfaction, could the exact course be ascertained which was taken by these pins, in their passinge from the coopliagus to their exitat the lest shoulder. From the cough art spitting of blood one should suppose that the lungs were injured by them. From the pain under the salfe ribe, it may be imagined that the disphagen was affected. And yet from their being discharged at the shoulder it may be presumed, that neither of these parts were ever wounded; I the pins, being forced through the colophage the muscles of the new shoulder, passed thence to whence they were discharge

The first symptom ob upon the removal of the from the passage of the cel was, that the patient imm felt a pain in her right fide the false ribs, which was m lent when the turned the t her body forwards round the left, or lifted up her mig Now if the pins, being for of the cosophagus, penetri serrati, rhomboides, and muscles on the right fit symptom must necessarily For the ferrati being muscl spiration, and the serratus politicus, attached to the third, fourth, fifth, and fi and the ferratus inferior being attached to the ter venth, and the extremity twelfth ribs, a pain in the be produced by the confla of respiration. And the these muscles being to ele ribs, and draw down the pain in the fide will be m bly felt whenever the righ lifted up; because then t mities of these muscles, to the ribs, will be mon ten although a wound may be a muscle in its most fleshy the irritation occasioned b exert itself most forcibly part where there is the tenfion.

The rhomboides must upon the serratus superior trapelius being incumbent and all closely connected cellular membrane, they ae degree affected by re-

But the office of the les and trapefius mufcles draw the arm downwards, wards, the pain in the ld be increased whenever arm and trunk of the eturned forwards towards de.

thus, as we may suppose, it the true cause of the he fide, the cough comes ler confideration, And I be found to proceed fame cause that the cough aretic person does, only s difference, that in one a and intercoftal mulcles ted by an internal inflamby which respiration is ; in the other, the malady to irritation capied by an 18 body. The effects are is both; respiration being elf by a cough, which inbe irritation and inflamof the parts obstructed; in increase the violence of h; and thus, each being ed by the other, the lungs so violently agitated, that vessel bursts, and thence thrown up from the lungs, to case in the present in-between the third pair of he intercostal, the cardiac, recurrents, together with r nerves dependent upon the salily perceive the cause stent spasm upon the eyes, sets at stomach, and the convoltion, as being all dependent upon the irgiven to the intercostal the right side. And it may be observed, that although both the motores oculorum were affected, yet the right eye was convulsed most violently.

From the symptoms attending this uncommon case, it is neafonable to conclude, that the three pins were all of them at the same time forced from the cefophagus into the ferrati mufcles on the right fide, which immediately communicated an irritation or impulfe, to the intercoftal nerve, from whence arole the pain in the fide, and thence the fickness at Romach, and convultions of the eyes and other parts. But whatever caused the pain in the right fide, upon the removal of the pins from the cefophagus, that caufe continued to act until all the three pins were discharged at the left shoulder, for so long did the pain in the right fide continue.

The thickness of the two serration the rhomboides, and trapelius mafcles may be thought too great for pins five quarters of an inch long to penerate all of them at the fame time. But if it be observed, that one of the pins was discharged at a time when neither of the two others could be felt with the probe, it may be supposed, that one of the three palled into the rhomboider, and trapefius, whilk the two others remained in the ferrati, and there continued until the first was discharged at the trapelius; after which they took the fame courfe, and were discharged at the same outlet.

Thus might we give a very probable account of this extraordinary case, had the pins been discharged at the right shoulder, but they were discharged at the lest. By those who think that, the nerves the cause and effect produced may be on opposite sides of the body, it may be said, that the pins might be forced from the wsophagus into the muscles of the lest side, notwithstanding the pain was selt in the right. This will not be generally allowed. Neither can I perceive any reason why a tumour exactly resembling that from whence the pins were asterwards discharged at the lest shoulder, should arise upon the right, and disperse without coming to suppuration. Since I drew out the above account, I have seen a case nearly fimilar to it, recorded in the Philosophical Transactions, No. 461. A small needle being lodged in a woman's left arm, about fix inches below the shoulder, passed thence to her right breast, whence it was extracted many months after it first entered the body. About a month after the accident, she felt a pain above the place where the needle run in, which extended up her shoulder. It lasted there three or four days, and then returned by About seventeen weeks before the needle was extracted, she felt a pain at her stomach, was fick, and had reachings to vomit. These symptoms continued to afflict her (especially in the morning), until within two days of the needle being extracted, at which time the thought a pin had got into her This directed the right breast. furgeon to make an opening there, and he extracted the same needle that had entered at her arm from the part where the pricking pain was; after wnich the had never any return of pain in her bleaft, flomach, flood or, or arm.

P 2

If, upon peruful or this cafe, you think it merits the a of the curious, as corrothe other, your recommon of it to the Royal Society effected an honour to,

SIR,.
Your most oblis
humblese

Gloucester, Sept. 1, 1768. D. L

A Letter from the Honoura liam Hamilton, bis Envoy Extraordinary at to Matthew Maty, M. D. containing some farther P. on Mount Vesuvius, and a canos in the Neighbourhoo

[Read, Feb. 2, 1769.]

Villa Angelica, ne Vetuvius, Oct. 4

SIR.

Have but very lately your last obliging lette 5th of July, with the ve Philosophical Transaction

I must beg of you to ex fatisfiction at the notice t Society have been pleased of my accounts of the of Mount eruptions Since I have been at my v I have enquired of the in of the mountain after w had feen during the last In my letter to Lord M mentioned nothing but w immediately under my or vation: but as all the peaf agree in their account of bl. thunder and limining laded almost in a sile til creption, non the mount a circumflance worth at-Befides the lightning, fectly resembled the comed lightning, there were mors, like what are vuled falling flars. A peany neighbourhood, loft I by the afties falling into h with their food; they' dy, and died in a few 'he laft day of the erapather, which fell abunon the mountain, were as of as fnow; and the old e affure me, that is a fure of the eruption being at These circumstances, beattefied, I thought worth

ald require many years ication, to give a proper philosophical account of tos in the neighbourhood 1; but I am fure fuch a ight be given, supported Aration, as would destroy em hitherto given upon 3. We have here an opof feeing volcanos in all s. I have been this fumhe island of Ischia; it is teen miles round, and bafis is lava. The great in it, near as high as formerly called Epo-I now San Nicolo, I am was thrown up by ded I have no doubt in my l, but that the illand infelf of the fea in the fame * fame of the Azores. I : fame opinion with re-Mount Vesuvius, and all grounds near Naples; as ot yet feen, in any one nat can be called virgin had the pleasure of seeing ik, a few day ago, near my villa, which is, as you know, at the foot of Veluvius, and close by the sea-side. At 25 feet below the level of the fea they came to a firstum of lava, and God knows how much deeper they might have fill found other lavas. The foil all round the mountain, which is fo fertile, consists of ftratas of lavas, ashes, pamice, and nowand-then a thin firatum of good earth, which good earth is produced by the farface mouldering, and the rotting of roots and plants, vince, &c. This is plainly to be feen at Pompeii, where they are now digging into the roins of that ancient city; the houses are covered, about ten or fifteen feet, with pumice and fragments of lave, fome of which weigh three pounds (which last circumstance I mention to thew, that, in a great eruption. Veluvius has thrown stones of this weight fix miles, which is its distance from Pompeil, in a direct line); upon this firstum of pumice or rapilli, as they call them here, is a stratum of excellent mould, about two feet thick, on which grow large trees, and excellent grapes. We have then the Solfaterra, which was certainly a volcano, and has ceased emptying, for want of metallic particles, and over-abounding with fulphur. You may trace its lavas into the fea. We have the Lago d' Averno and the Lago d'Agnano, both of which were formerly volcanos; and Astroni, which still retains its form more than any of thefe. Its crater is walled round, and his Sicilian Majety takes the diversion of boarhunting in this volcano; and neither his Majesty, or any one of his court, ever dreamed of its former fate. We have feen that curious Fβ mountain, called Montagno Nuovo, near Puzzole, which rose, in one night, out of the Lucrine Lake; it is about 150 feet high and three miles round. I do not think it more extraordinary, that Mount Vesuvius, in many ages, should rise above 2000 feet; when this mountain, as is well attested, rose in one night, no longer ago than the year 1538. I have a project, next spring, of passing some days at Puzzole, and of dissecting this mountain, taking its measures, and making drawings of its stratas; for, I perceive, it is composed of stratas, like Mount Vesuvius, but without lavas. As this mountain is so undoubtedly formed entirely from a plain, I should think my project may give light into the formation of many other mountains, that are at present thought to have been original, and are certainly not so, if their strata correfound with those of the Montagno I should be glad to know Nuovo. whether you think this project of mine will be useful; and, if you do, the result of my observations may be the subject of another letter.

70 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770,

I cannot have a greater pleasure than to employ my leisure hours in what may be of some little use to mankind; and my lot has carried me into a country, which affords an ample field for observation. Upon the whole, if I was to establish a system, it would be, that mountains are produced by wolcanos, and not wolcanos by mountains.

I fear I have tired you: but the subject of volcanos is so sayourite a one with me, that it has led me on I know not how: I shall only add, that Vesuvius is quiet at prefent, tho very hot at top, where there is a deposition of boiling phur. The lava that run is Fossa Grande during the last tion, and is at least 200 feet t is not yet cool; a stick, pat its crevices, takes fire immedi On the sides of the crevice fine chrystalline salts; as the the pure salts, which exhale the lava that has no commit tion with the interior of the r tain, they may perhaps indica composition of the lava. done. Let me only thank ye the kind offers and expresso your letter, and for the car have had in fetting off my p to the Museum to the belt a tage; of which I have been from many quarters.

I am,
SIR,
Your most obedient humble servan
W. Hamii

Extract of a Letter from A Gooch, Surgeon, of Shott near Norwich, to Mr. Warner, F. R. S. and S to Guy's Hospital. Commutothe Royal Society by Mr. W November 16, 1709.

[Read Nov. 16, 1769]

Shottif Sept. 9,

DEAR SIR,

A CCORDING to yo fire, and my promise, sent you the wonderful cu glove, which I shewed you I had the pleasure of your co here. The history of the which, I believe, has no presistaken from the gentleman of it to me in writing, varying his fenfe; and d by Mr. Swallow, a furcharacter at Watton, whose 20w, was under your tui-Ar. Swallow attended the many times in the fevers roduced these firange pha-, with whom I took an opy of having a particular zion relative to this matter, ight be able to speak with e authenticity. Mr. Swalnow one of these gloves in effice, the gentleman himanother, and several he a to the curious: yet fome en so sceptical as to doubt ter of fact upon fuch evied authority. I wish you get an accurate drawing of re; and I shall be glad to at your leifure, the fentiof the learned, not forgeter own, upon this extrar cafe.

m, Dear Sir, Your Ancere friend, as well as obliged humble fervant. B. Good M.

of the Casz relating to CUTICULAR GLOVE.

Villiam Wright, of Saham my in the county of Norttorney at law, about fifty age, rather of a weak and efficution from his youth, : feized about ten years ago te following fingular kind The physical gentlemen different times confulted, a lofs to know what name neter to distinguish it by. eturned many times fince: tes twice in a year, attended with the fame fymptoms and circumilances; but not to fo great a degree fince the year 1764 as before; and it has been generally observed to come on upon obstructed peripiration, in confequence of catching cold, to which he is very fubiect.

71

Befides the common febrile fymptoms upon the invation of this difcase, his skin itches universally, more especially at the joints; and the itching is followed by many little red fpots, with a fmall d-gree of (welling: foon after his fingers become very fiff, hard, and painful at their ends, and at the roots of his nails. In 24 hours, or thereabouts, the cuticle begins to feparate from the cutie, and, in ten or twelve days, this feparation is general from head to foot; when he has many times turned the cuticle off from the wrifts to the fingers ends, completely like gloves; and in the same manner also to the ends of his toes: after which his nails shoot gradually from their roots, at first attended with exquifite pain, which abates as the feparation of the cuticle advances; and the nails are generally thrown off by new ones in about fix months.

The caticle rifes in the palms of his hands, and foles of his fect, refembling blifters, but has no fluid under it; and when it comes off, it leaves the subjecent skin very fentible for a few days. Sometimes, upon catching cold, before he has been quite free from feverish (ymptoms, he has had a tecond feparation of the cuticle from the cutis, but then it is to thin as to appear only like fourf, which demonstrates the quick renewal of this part.

Of the different Quantities of Rain, which appear to fall, at different Heights, over the same Spot of Ground. By William Heberden, M.D.F.R.S.

[Read December 7, 1769.]

A Comparison having been made between the quantity of rain, which fell in two places in London, about a mile distant from one another, it was found, that the rain in one of them constantly exceeded that in the other, not only every month, but almost every time that it rained. The apparatus used in each of them was very exact, both being made by the same artist; and upon examining every probable cause, this unexpected variation did not appear to be owing to any mistake, but to the constant effect of some circumstance, which not being supposed to be of any moment, had never been attended to. The raingaze in one of these places was fixed so high as to rise above all the neighbouring chimnies; the other was confiderably below them; and there appeared reason to believe, that the difference of the quantity of rain in thefe two places was owing to this difference in the placing of the vessel in which it was received. A funnel was therefore placed above the highest chir nies, and another upon the ground of the garden belonging to the same house, and there was found the same difference between these two, though placed so near one another, which there had been between them, when placed at umilar heights in different parts of the town. After this fact was fulficiently ascertained, it was thought proper to try, whether the difference would be greater at a much greater height; and a rain-gage was therefore placed upon the square part of the roof of Wekminster Abbey, being at such a distance from the western towers, as probably to be very little affected by them, and being much higher than any other neighbouring buildings. Here the quantity of rain was observed for a twelvemonth, the rain being measured at the end of every month, and care being taken that none should evaporate, by passing a very long tube of the funnel into a bottle through a cork, to which it was exactly fitted. The tube went down very near to the bottom of the bottle, and therefore the rain, which fell into it, would foon rife above the end of the tube, so that the water was so where open to the air except for the small space of the zerea of the tube: and by trial it was found, that there was no sensible evaporation through the tube thus fitted up.

The following table will show the result of these observations.

July the 7th, 1766, to July the 7th, 1767, there fell into a rain-gage fixed

		Upon the top of a house.	of a house.	-dA reftoien
	71.		bey.
	inch.	inch.	inch.
from the 7th of July to the end	3.591	3,210	2,311
August	0,558	0,479	1000
September	0,421	0,344	0,508
Ottober	2,364	2,061	1,416
November	1,079	0,842	0,632
December	1,612	1,258	0,994
January	2,071	1,455	1,035
February	2,864	2,494	1,335
March	1,807	1,303	0,587
April	1,437	1,213	0,994
May	2,432	1,745	1,148
Jone	1,977	1,426	2
om the aft of July to the 7th	0,395	0,309	} 1,145
· ·			-
	22,608	18,139	12,099

de table it appears, that iell below the top of a house a fifth part more rain, than fell in the fame space above p of the fame house, and here fell upon Westminster not much above one-half at was found to fall in the space below the tops of the This experiment has been ed in other places with the event. What may be the of this extraordinary differus not yet been discovered; may be afeful to give notice n order to prevent that erhich would frequently be tted in comparing the rain places without attending to reumftance.

probable, that some hitherto unknown property of electricity is concerned in this phænomenon. This power has undoubtedly a great share in the descent of rain, which hardly ever happens, if the air and clectrical apparatus be fufficiently dry, without manifest figns of electricity in the sir. Hence it is, that in Lima, where there is no rain, they never have any lightning or thunder and that, as M. Cournefort was affured, it never rains in the Levant but in winter, and that this is the only fegfon in which any thunder is heard ... If this appearance therefore could be accounted for, it would probably help us to fome more fatisfactory caules of the suspention of the clouds, and of the descent of rain.

the English translation of the voyage of Don George Juan and Don to Uliou to South America, vol. II. book i. chap. 6. p. 69 and 79. syage du Levant, let. X. p. 429.

73

Experiments to prove that the Luminoujness of the Sca arises from the Putrefaction of its animal Substances. By John Canton, M. A. and F. R. S.

[Read Dec. 21, 1769.]

deration of the several opinions of philosophers concerning the luminous appearance of the sea, as not one of them, that I know of, has been well supported; but I shall immediately relate a sew experiments, which any person may very easily make, and which, I think, will be allowed to point out the true cause of that appearance, when compared with the descriptions given of it, by those who have accurately observed it.

EXPERIMENT I.

Into a gailon of sea-water in a pan about 14 inches in diameter, I put a small fresh whiting, June 14, 1768, in the evening; and took notice that neither the whiting, nor the water when agitated, gave any light. A Fahrenheit's thermometer in the cellar, where the pan was placed, itood at 54 degrees. The 15th, at night, that part of the filh which was even with the furface of the water was luminous, but the water itself was dark. I drew the end of a stick through the water, from one fide of the pan to the other, and the water appeared luminous behind the flick all the way, but gave light only where it was disturbed. When all the water was stirred, the whole became luminous, and appeared like milk; giving a confiderable degree of light to the tides of the pan that contained it; and continued to do fo for some time after it was at reft. The water was most luminous when the fish had been in it about 28 hours, but would not give any light by being stirred, after it had been in it three days.

EXPERIMENT II.

I put a gallon of fresh water into one pan, and a gallon of sea-water into another, and also into each pan a fresh herring of about three ounces. The next night the whole surface of the sea-water was luminous without being firred, but much more fo when put in motion; and the upper part of the herring, which lay confiderably below the surface of the water was very bright. The fresh water was quite dark, as was also the fifth that was in it. There were several very bright luminous fpots on different parts of the surface of the sea-water; and the whole, when viewed by the light of a candle, feemed covered with a greafy fcum. The third night, the light of the fea-water while at rest was very little, if at all, less than before; and when stirred, its light was so great, as to discover the time by a watch; and the fish in it appeared as a dark substance. After this, its light was evidently decreating, hut was not quite gone before the seventh night. The fresh water, and fish in it, were perfectly dark during the whole time. The thermometer was generally above 60.

EXPERIMENT III.

Into a gallon of fresh water I put common or sea-salt, till I sound by an hydrometer it was of the same specific gravity with the seawater. In another gallon of fresh water I dissolved two pounds of salt, and into each of these waters I put a small fresh herring, The next ming the whole furface of beial fea-water was lomithout being flirred, but ich more light when it was d. It appeared exactly like fea-water in the preceding ent, and its light lasted he fame time, and went off ame manners. The other which was almost as fult as be made, never gave any The herring, which was at of it the seventh night, hed from its falt, was found I fweet ; but the other heras very foft and putrid; sore fo than that which had pt as long in the fresh wathe laft experiment. If a , is warm weather, be put a gallons of artificial feanstead of one, the water I become luminous, but its ill not be fo firong.

The artificial fea-water made without the use of ometer, by the proportion onners avoirdupois of salt, i pints of water, wine mea-the second and third exits it is evident, that the y of salt contained in seainstens putrefaction; as the thad been kept in water of igree of saltness was found such more putrid than that had been kept the same time water. This unexpected

y of sea-salt was discovered John Pringle, in the year and published in the 46th of the Philosophical Trans, with many very curious and useful experiments on subflances refifting putrefaction, but the greatest quantity of fait there mentioned, is less than what is found in fea-water: it is proba-, ble, therefore, that if the fea were less falt, it would be more luminous. And here it may be worth remarking, that, though the greatest fummer heat is well known to promore putrefaction, yet 20 degrees more than that of the human blood feem to hinder it: for, putting a very small piece of a luminous fife. into a thin glass ball, I found that water of the heat of 118 degrees would defirey its luminousness in less than half a minute; which, on taking it out of the water, it would begin to recover in about ten feconds, but was never after fo bright as before.

I shall now only add to these experiments the most circumstantial accounts I can find of the fea's luminous appearance. The Honourable Robert Boyle, in the third volume and 91st page, of Doctor Birch's edition of his works, fays, " When I remember how many " questions I have asked naviga-" tors about the luminoulness of " the fea; and how in fome places the fea is wont to thine in the " night as far as the eye can " reach; at other times and places. 🌃 0: 🐧 when the waves dash against " the vessel, or the oars strike and " cleave the water; how fome feas " thine of en, and others have not " been observed to shine; how in " fome places the fea has been " taken notice of to shine when " fuch and fuch winds blow, eral river-fifth, as the block, the dace, the carp, the tench, and the e kept in artificial fea-water to putrefy, without producing any light sald perceive t but a piece of a carp made the water very luminous, be outfide, or fealy part of it, did not final at all.

whereas in other leas the obser-" vation holds not; and in the " same tract of sea, within a nar-" row compais, one part of the •• water will be luminous, whilst •• the other shines not at all: when " I say, I remember how many of these old phænomena, belong-" ing to those great masses of lie quor, I have been told of by •• very credible eye-witnesses, I am stempted to suspect, that some « cosmical law or custom of the of terrestrial globe, or, at least, of • the planetary vortex, may have a confiderable agency in the proof duction of these effects?"

Father Bourzes has given a still more particular account of the luminous appearance of the fea; part of which I have extracted from the third edition of Jones's Abridgment of the Philosophical Transactions, Vol. V. Part ii. p. 213. • When the ship ran apace, we 64 often observed a great light in of the wake of the ship, or the water that is broken and divided 44 by the ship in its passage. This light was not always equal; " fome days it was very little, " others not at all; sometimes " brighter, others fainter; somest times it was very vivid, and at other times nothing was to be " seen. As to its brightne,, I could eastly read by it, though I was nine or ten feet above it from the furface of the water: " as I did particularly on the 12th " of June, and the toth of July, 44 1704. But I could read only the title of my book, which was 44 in large letters. As to the extent of this light, sometimes 44 all the wake appeared luminous se to thirty or forty feet distant se from the ship; but the light

" was very faint at any confider-" able distance. Some days one " might canly distinguish in the " wake such particles as were lu-" minous from those that were not: " at other times there was no dif-" ference. The wake seemed then " like a river of milk, and was " very pleasant to look on. " fuch times as we could distin-" guith the bright parts from the " others, we observed that they " were not all of the lame figure. " Some of them appeared like " points of light; others almost " " " large as itars, as they ap-" peared to the naked eye. We " faw some that looked like glo-" bules of a line or two in dia-" meter; and others like globs " as big as one's head. It is not " always that this light appears, " though the scape in great mo-🕶 tion; nor does it always happen " when the ships sails failest: nei-" ther is it the simple beating of " the waves against one another, " that produces this brightness, so " far as I could perceive. But I " have observed, that the beating " of the waves against the shore " has sometimes produced it is " great plenty; and on the cost " of Brazil the shore was one " night so very bright, that it ap-" peared as it it had been all on

"The production of this light depends very much on the quality of the water: and, if I am not deceived, generally speaking, I may affert, other circumstances being equal, that the light is largest when the water is fattest, and fullest of foam; for, in the main sea the water is not every where equally pure; and sometimes if one dips linea.

into the sea, it is clammy when * it is drawn up again.  have often observed, that when  the wake of the ship was brighteft, the water was more fat and e glutinous; and linen moiltened with it, produced a great deal of light, if it were stirred or s moved brifkly. Besides, in sailsing over some places of the sea, we find a matter or substance of " different colours, sometimes red, " fometimes yellow. In looking " at it, one would think it was " faw-duft: our failors fay it is " the spawn, or seed of whales. What it is, is not certain; but when we draw up water, in or passing over these places, it is  always vilcous and glutinous. "Our mariners also say, that there are a great many heaps or banks of this spawn in the north; and that sometimes in the night 44 they appear all over of a bright " light, without being put in mo-* tion by any vessel or fish passing s by them.

But, to confirm farther what "I fay, videlicet, that the waer ter, the more glutinous it is, the more it is disposed to become luminous; I shall add one par- ticular which I saw myself. One 🕶 day we took in our ship a fish, which some thought was a boor neta. The infide of the mouth of the fish appeared in the night  like a burning coal; so that, without any other light, I could ee read by it the same characters es that I read by the light in the wake of the thip. Its mouth being full of a viscous humour, we rubbed a piece of wood with es it, which immediately became - all over luminous; but, as foon es as the moisture was dried up, the light was extinguished.

"I leave it to be examined whether all these particulars can be explained by the system of fuch as affert, that the principle of this light consists in the motion of a subtle matter, or globules, caused by a violent agitation of different kinds of falts."

Of a fingular Diferse, with which two Butchers of the Royal Hospital of the Invalids were seized. From the History (just published) of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris, for the Year 1766.

A VERY fingular event has given room to a differtation which M. Morand read to the Academy on that subject: The 7th of Octover, 1765, two butchers, of the Royal Academy of Invalids. killed each an ox for the provision of the house, and the meat was employed as usual for the officers and soldiers, without the least ailment attending on those who had eaten of it, roast or boiled.

The next morning, however, one of the two butchers, aged 27 years, had his eye-lids swelled and a head-ach; the fwelling got to his cheek; the head-ach increased, and a fever succeeded. In this state he was carried to the infirmary of the hospital; the disorder came to a considerable height, and bleeding procured him no other relief than a slight lessening of his head-ach. An emetic, which had been given him the fourth day, seemed to case him a little. There arose on his eye-lids, and different parts of his face, blifters which threatened to be gangrenous. These accidents, notwithstanding, diminished; yet there was an eichar under the blifters that came with difficulty to a Inppuration, and the patient was again vomited and purged. 15th the eschar fell, and lest open a confiderable wound which had the usual dressings; but, the 20th the left thigh was attacked with a sharp pain; and the next day the like accident happened to the right leg, the bath having only increased the pain and swelling a Then recourse was had to ordinary cataplasms; the ailing parts came to a suppuration; both were opened, and yielded only a purulent matter like that of a simple phlegmon; the patient went out of the infirmary the 3d of January, having been there near three months.

Theother butcher was not taken Ill of the disease till two days after he had killed the ox; but he met with a worse treatment from it than his companion; for, besides the accidents that were common to both, the swelling of the face got to the neck, and afterwards to the bosom, and there formed a thining emphysema, which distended the fkin in all parts like a drum, and threatened him with an entire suffocation. M. de Morand, having opened one of the blifters of the face, applied an actual cautery to it, in order to bring on a suppuration, and, having perceived a iwelling in the thighs and legs, he applied blifters to them. These remedies, together with bleeding and vomiting, which were at first administered without much success, effected a cure. causing a great quantity of humours to flow. This man left the infirmary the 8th of December, upwards of three weeks be comrade, who was not, in the so grievously affected.

So fingular a disease, as its effects as caule, enga Morand to make all possible ries, in regard to it. oxen had been visited, at to the conflant cuftom of th and no diferfe, pothing had been observed in the that they appeared fomer tigued. They were knock and bled as usual; the seemed nothing different for of others, and neither of th ers had an open wound the blood might have pe into the interior parts (body: No extraordinary also, was observable at the of the oxen.

The undertaker of the had been in the same offic army in the last war, and sormed M. Morand, that often killed oxen which over-fatigued for the prothe army, without any sofficer being thereby incombut it often happened, butchers who had slain the been attacked by the same as the invalid butchers, even some of them had it.

Hence it was not diperceive what had happen oxen of the invalids: so beafts that are drove there are always some to which do not follow the out being much worried or by the drivers; and is happens to them as to a over-ridden horse. It known, that a horse, is dered state, is in great loting his life; and that those who bargain for horses have an action for having their money refunded by him who had jaded the horse.

79

It is therefore very possible, that the body of an ox killed in that fate, being fill hot, and perhaps his blood more fo, may exhale a pernicions vapour, affecting those that touch the body, or receive the blood of the animal on their kin: But what can be the degree of malignity of these vapours, and why do they principally attack the cel-Iular membrane? This is not eafily explained. What is fingular is, that the vapours of animals, labouring under the bovilla pestio, or murrain, does not in any wife affect those that open them, dead or dying. A furgeon-major had opened upwards of 200, in the mortality of 1712, without being in the leaft incommoded. It appears likewife, by feveral examples, that the flesh of these animals were caten without any inconveniency; it is true, that one only example that happened in Dauphiny feems to infinuate the contrary; but it follows, however, from all M. Morand's observations, that the oxen killed as the invalids had been, probably, overdrove, and killed before they recovered from their laffitude; that botchers killing animals in that Late, run the risque of their lives, but that the flesh may be eaten with impunity; though it should be wholefomer, if the animal had time to recruit himfelf of his fa-

The reading of the circumstances of this fact before the Academy, caused M. du Hamel to recellect a like accident, that happened in his part of the country: among some oxen, driven from Limosia to Paris, one of the finest, weighing about 800 lb. was not able to follow the rest. By the advice of fome graziers and butchers, who were of opinion he had been ailing, he was fold to a butcher of Pithiviers, who fent his journeyman to kill him in the stable of the ian where he was kept. During his operations, this perfon, having put his knife into his mouth for a few moments, was fome hours after attacked with a fwelling of his tongue, and a ftreightening of his cheft, with a difficulty of breathing: There appeared black puffules over his whole body, and he died the fourth day of a general gangrene.

The inn-keeper having the palm. of his band pricked by a bone of the fame ox, a livid tumour arcfe in the part, the arm fell into a fphacelus, and he died at the end of the 7th day; his wife having received some drops of blood on the back of her hand, the hand fwelled, and the had fome difficulty in getting cured: the fervant-maid, having paffed under the ox, foon after it was hung up, received some drops of blood on the cheek, which brought on the part a great inflammation, terminating in a black tumor. She was cured, but remained disfigured by at. In fine, the furgeon of the hofpital at Puthiviers, by having opened one of these tomors, and put his lancet between his wig and forehead, his head (welled, and an eryfipelas was formed, which he long continued all of.

It is very certain, that the blood of this ox was very contagious, yet his fiesh was fold to the beat houses of Pithiviers and its environs, and none were in the least incommoded by the eating of it. It would, perhaps, be curious to know if the animals, which might have eaten of it raw, or drank the blood, had been affected. The resemblance of the two facts of Pithiwiers and the invalids is sufficiently manifest: the cause of the first is not equivocal; and there is great reason to believe that it is the same which occasioned the second.

The Case of the Rev. Mr. Winder, who was cured by Lightning of a Paralytic Dijorder.

HE Rev. Mr. Winder, whose case is the subject of this memoir, is rector of Halsted, in His form is robult, rather athletic, inclining to corpulency: his countenance florid, his disposition chearful, generally ferene, fomewhat jocular: and he was of a conflitution so happy, that, at the age of fifty-four, he was a stranger to disease; and, which is very uncommon at fuch a period of life, almost totally unacquainted with the fensation of any considerable pain. But a reverse of this ferenity of health was at hand.

For, June 3, 1761, whilst he was performing the duty of his office, it was observed by many of his congregation, though unperceived by himself, that his voice was altered, and that he did not articulate and pronounce his words with the usual facility. The sollowing week, tho still it escaped his notice, his friends remarked the extraordinary change and saultering in his speech. Yet, when they mentioned it to him not regard it as a matter o ent importance to deferve rious attention. Bat the quence proved otherwise, sc at evening, whilst he wa with a few neighbours ab chearful as usual, he sudd from his chair to the flo firoke of the paify. The p over, and when a little re he found himself almost to prived of the faculty of fpe his senses reduced to a ver fect condition. He was, the the day after the accident to an eminent physician don, who ordered him to tea-spoonful of the following ture: R. Tinct. Cort. Pe nel. alb. Sp. Lavend. an apply blifters to the occito continue the temperate had usually pursued. By c observing of which, he much better, as in a fer after to be able, by the h cane, just to remove hims place to place, for a ve distance. His tongue still nued faultering, hardly i ble; his hands trembling his head vertiginous; and sellectual faculties to much ed, that his mind became ! temporary wanderings, as pathiling with the infirmit Body.

In this condition he ac one miserable year in p despondency, when he was on the 8th day of June have recourse to the ch waters of Tunbridge. I he conformed, firstly as larly persevering in the co the space of fix weeks; at ration of which term, he confiderably relieved, as tn able to walk, by the cane, nearly half a mile; was become to steady, sold again write his name le manner, which he had before fince his first atat he ftill perceived an infirmity in all the mofts of his frame, and an e, or inability in them to d with the dictates of his He was ftill, at times, with violent palpitations seart, tremblings of his ibsultus tendinum: be-:b, he was frequently afith vertigoes. But thefe , effects of his malady trivial inconveniencies, rifon to the great mifery ed from a constant, very heavy perception of deep in his breatt, which 28 accompanied with that of spirit, seldom to be from a Hate of anguish ile, when no further hope ry remains. In this unnation of very imperfect se continued for three fter his leaving Tunespairing ever to receive meplete cure, when, on of August, 1762, about k at night, whilft he was bed, the atmosphere be-, and the fky very cloudy, one, or very little, rain fcarce a breeze of air perceived, it began to with great violence, acd by thick and frequent lightning at every exwhich were to loud, that nt was thereby fartled from his fleep, and at it of waking he was fur-KIII.

prized by the perception of a quick, ftrong flock, affecting him univerfally, as if he were thunderflruck, but so rapid, it was gone almost before he could think of it, leaving upon his mind, according to his own representation, the same idea as we recollect from having undergone a froke of electricity, which may be better imagined than described. At the very same moment the chamber he lay in appeared filled with lightning, which instantaneously vanished, leaving behind it a remarkable phosphorous fmell. And from that point of time he thought he found his natural parts more alert, and his feelings to greatly altered, that he faucied his cure to be accomplished; of which he was induced to perfuade himfelf, from a fudden fensation, described by him to be as if some obstruction in his chest, or a great adhesion therein, had been fuddenly removed, and his breast had then recovered its former full liberty or expansion: The oppretion and confinement he hal there before suffered, seeming to be entirely gone. And he now epjoyed, in imagination at leaft, the agreeable opinion of reposseffing perfect health. But how much greater was his joy, when he arose in the morning, and began to move about, on finding the funcy he had indulged during the night fully verified by the entire cafe and complete health he then really enjoyed. His head was quite ferene; his breaft unladen of its wonted eppreffion, and eafed of its habitual pain: he could move all his limbs with as much iterdinels and agility as he used before his complaint: torpors, tremblings, and the long unhappy train of miteries which afflicted afflicted him before, were now gone: the joy of health was, like the dawn of morning, renewed; and every paralytic symptom with his despair of recovery, vanished like the preceding night! and he avers, that though the day before he was unable to walk more than half a mile, and that with great difficulty and pain, he could, the morning after the shock the lightning gave him, have walked with ease ten or twelve miles: so propitious was the event. And on the 20th of September, 1762, he was, and I believe, still continues, in a perfect state of health. To establish and secure which bleshing, fo signally recovered, he was then returned to a course of the Tunbridge Waters; where this account was delivered by himself of his disorder, and the cure.

It may not be improper here to observe, that as Mr. Winder is well-known to be a gentleman of strict veracity, and found, plain sense; we cannot suspect, therefore, either his head or his heart capable of deceiving us in this relation, which himself delivered, and which I was very careful to note down as circumstantially as possible, that it might be as satisfactory to all who may think it of so much importance as to be favoured with their attention.

Account of the Needles, in the Isle of Wight. Extracted from Mr. E.-wards's Natural History.

I N the beginning of June, 1761, I had the curiofity to visit the life of Wight, where I spent a week in seeing what was curious in that part of the island, and went off to sea several times under th dous rocks and cliffs c Needles. Many strange southern counties vifit t yearly on the same accoun we enter fome of our gn drals, their greatness an gloominess firike us witi ing reverential kind of horror; and when we magnificent palaces of princes, we are firuck wit harmony, and regularity, a ing sense of the richness art, and fine tafte, that ca fuch terrestrial heavens; when I had launched al into the ocean, and take view of this most ama: stupendous work of pa the fensations produced ples and palaces, the art, were like shadows with real fubitances. dons greatness of the ro the beholder with chill and amazement, never fe While a stranger is near lears that some protubers of the rock will give wreck his vessel, and d presumptuous spectator. cessary to keep a quarter o distance at least, to make: ment of the height of the some places it is perpendi others overhanging; in ot are rows of shelves or lo for the birds called the Pi Razor-birds, where they in rows, though hardly o be seen separately, but t tion discovers them. places high in the cliff, : under water-mark, you chasms and deep caverns, to enter far into the rocl and there are chrystal Are pling waters issuing forth The h in the rock. :halk, flone, flinte, &c. i some parts on an ala furface for the depth dred feet, the height of in many places, affords Ttainment to a curious itive mind. It is ftrange and lambs feeding near s edge in the lower part ff, and not eatily conow they get thither withrecipitated into the deep, lave the poner of treadin places inaccessible to ough the birds are not table, yet many of them ed through wantonness. in is discharged from sea rock, they fly off in ng numbers as to darken der them. Great numways feen fishing in the fitting in the cliffs, and ys patting and repatting The fiftermen boat. s of their flesh to catch abs, &c. The ignorant t of the illand suppose birds are found in no he world, but at the The face of this stupenatends about four miles, nearly, if not precifely, fouth. The well point in what is properly Needles, which are ferade obeliška, or pillara, y time and force of the se main rock, and fland tom each other, arising yout of the fea. Thefe / fay, are feen here not etwo months in the year, opear in the beginning The ashermen, who are aut these rocks, declare that thefe birds are feen three or four times in the winter, for a day or two each time; in as great numbers as at their breeding time; and that they know when to expect them, which is after a little mild weather, when the fun lies warm on the cliff, and the fea beneath is pretty calm, to give them an opportunity to feek their food. The top of the cliff is barren, chalky, and stony, down which feed a great number of theep; cormorants, fhags, gulls, Cornish choughs, jack+ daws, flarlings, wild pigeous, and many forts of fmull birds, breed annually on these rocks;

83

An Account of the Tailor Bird, swith a Defeription of an Indian Forest's from Mr. Pennants's Indian Zon-logy.

TAD Providence left the feathered tribe unendowed with any particular inflinct, the birds of the torrid zone would have built their nells in the fame unguarded manner as those of Europe: but there the leffer species, having a certain prescience of the dangers that furround them, and of their own weakness, suspend their nests at the extreme branches of the trees ? they are conscious of inhabiting a climate replete with enemies to them and their young; with fnakes that twine up the bodies of the trees, and apes that are perpetually in fearch of prey; but, heaveninstructed, they elude the gliding of the one, and the activity of the other.

An Indian forest is a scene the most picturesque that can be imagined; the trees seem perfectly animated; the fantattic monkies give life to the stronger branches; and the weaker sprays wave over your head, charged with vocal and various plumed inhabitants. It is an error to say that nature hath denied melody to the birds of hot climates, and formed them only to please the eye with their gaudy plumage: Ceylon abounds with birds equal in fong * to those of Europe; which warble among the leaves of trees, grotesquein their appearance, and often loaden with the most delicious and salubrious fruit. of the richest colours cross the glades, and troops of peacocks complete the charms of the scene, spreading their plumes to a sun that has ample powers to do them justice. The landscape in many parts of India corresponds with the beauties of the animate creation: the mountains are lofty, steep, and broken, but cloathed with forests, enlivened with cataracts + of a grandeur and figure unknown to this part of the globe.

But to give a reverse of this enchanting prospect, which it is impossible to enjoy with a suitable tranquillity; you are harassed in one season with a burning heat, or in the other with deluges of rain: you are tormented with clouds of noxious insects: you dread the spring of the tiger, or the mortal bite of the naja.

The brute creation are more at enmity with one another than in other climates; and the bi obliged to exert unusual are placing their little brood on reach of an invader. Each the same end, though by d means; some form their pen in shape of a purse, deep as at top, others with a hole side, and others still more ca with an entrance at the ve tom, forming their lodge a summit 1.

But the little species we defeems to have greater diffider any of the others: it will no its nest even to the extremi stender twig, but makes or advance to safety by fixing i leaf itself.

It picks up a dead leaf, as prising to relate, sews it to of a living one §, its slend being its needle, and its thre sinchbres: the lining, feather same and down: its eggs are the colour of the bird light its length three inches, its only three fixteenths of are so that the materials of the tits own size are not likely down a habitation that dep so slight a tenure.

The following account the same ingenious author contribute to give us some the heat of that servid clims treating of the black-caps geon, he says:

* That which the Portuguese call Dominiquin, is particularly fine.

† Those of the island of Celebes are diffinguished for their ma scenery, as appears from the drawings in possession of Mr. Loten.

I This inflinds prevails also among the birds on the banks of the Grander, which abounds with monking and finites: others (for the limake their nest in holes of the banks that over-hang that yast 11.7. II. p. 1576.

§ A nest of this bird is preserved in the British Museum.

s most elegant species is I the fize of life. It was on the ground in the ide of having dropped down dead of those het days that are only in the torrid zone, when wls of the air often perish, to respire; when lions, leoand wolves, immerge themup to their nostrils in the to preferve themselves from corching fune; and when men themselves have been so afcend the highest trees, ler to draw in a more temair+.

Such a day occasioned the difcovery of this species.

The fore part of the head, the cheeks, and beginning of the bread, were white: the hind part of the head black: the chin yellow?

The rest of the neck, the breast, upper part of the belly, the back, coverts, and secondary feathers of the wings, of a line gleen't the quill feathers of a dark parale.

The lower belly and vent feathers of a fine yellow; the outside of the thighs green; the inside whites the lower side of the tail crimson; the legs red.

Boone's Account of the Climate and Difeales of Senegal.
Philosophical Transactions, 1767.

13

ANTIQUITIES.

The Thirty-second Fable of the Edda, er the antient Iceiandic Mythelogy; translated from the Original, by Mr. Mallet.

Of the Twilight of the Gods.

GANGLER then inquired; What can you tell me conceroing that day? Har replied; There are very many and very notable circumstances which I can impart to you. In the first place, will come the grand, the deso- lating' Winter; during which the foow will fall from the four corners of the world: the frost will be very severe; the tempest violent and dangerous; and the fun will withdraw his beams. Three such winters shall pass away, without being softened by one fummer. Three others shall fol-Jow, during which war and discord will spread through the whole globe. Brothers, out of hatred, shall kill each other; no one shall spare either his parent, or his child, or his relations. See how it is described in the Voluspa; " brothers becoming murderers, fhall flain themselves with bro-" thers blood; kindred shall forof get the ties of consanguinity; " life shall become a burthen; towards the building of that " the world. A barbarous " an age of fwords! an a " tempefts! an age of w " The bucklers shall be b " in pieces; and these cala " shall succeed each other t " world shall fall to roin." will happen fuch things a well be called prodigies. wolf FERRIS will devour the a severe loss will it be some mankind. Another monfie carry off the Moon, and her totally useless: the Star fly away and vanish from the vens : the earth and the tains shall be seen violenti tated; the trees torn up fr earth by the roots; the to hills to tumble headlong their foundations; all the and irons of the prisoners broken and dashed in pieces. is the wolf Fenris let loof fea rushes impetuously ove earth, because the great S changed into a Spectre, ga shore. The ship Nazlefara afloat; this vessel is construct the nails of dead men; for reason great care should be not to die with unpared nai he who dies so, supplies ma " adultery hall reign throughout which Gods and men wil [•] Goranson has it, Stelle de calo cadunt. See other variations in hi Version; which seems, in some respects, more spirited than that of M. here followed,

ANTIQUITIES.

nished as late as posible. iant Rymer is the pilot of Hel, which the fea breaking s banks, wafts along with he wolf Penris advancing, his enormous mouth; his sw reaches to the earth, and per jaw to the beavens, and reach fill farther, were thelf found to admit of it. arming fire flashes out from s and nostrils. The Great t vomits forth floods of poihich overwhelm the air and sters. This terrible monolf. In this confasion the thall cleave afunder; and s a bright glowing fire, ord outlines the Sun itself, my of these Genii passing feback over the bridge of , break it in pieces: Thence rect their course to a plain ; :bey are joined by the wolf and the Great Scrpent, e sifo repair Loke, and tot RYMER, and with them Giants of the Frost, who Loke even to death. The of Fire march first in battle forming a most brilliant on this plain; which is ndzed degrees square on fide. During thele prodi-IRIMDAL, the door-keeper Gods, rifes up; he viowounds his clanging trumpet ten the Gods; who instantly e. Then Opin repairs to natain of Minds, to consult e ought to do, he and his The great Ath Tree of is thaken; nor is any thing ven or earth exempt from fear and danger. The Gods are clad in armour; Opin pure on his golden helmet, and his resplendent cuirale; he grafps his fword and marches directly against the Wolf Penrie. He hath Tuon at his fide: but this God cannot affilt him; for he himself fights with the Great Serpent. Fast encounters Surtur, and terrible blows are exchanged on both fides; 'till FREY is beat down; and he owes his defeat to his having formerly given his fword to his attendant Skyrner. That day also is let loofe ices himself by the side of the dog named Garner, who had hitherto been chained at the entrance of a cavern. He is a monbreach the Genii of Fire fter dreadful even to the Gode, as horseback. Surtur is at he attacks Tru, and they kill eads before and behind him each other. Thou bests down the Great Scrpent to the earth, but at the same time recoiling back nine steps, he falls dead upon the spot, suffocated with floods of venom, which the Serpent vomits forth upon him. Onth is devoured by the Wolf Fenris. At the fame inftant VIDAR advances, and prefling down the monter's lower jaw with his foot, feizes the other with his band, and thus tears and rends him till he dies. Loxe and HEIMDAL fight, and mutually kill each other. After that, Sun-TUR darts fire and flame over all the earth; the whole world is prefently confumed. See how this is related in the VOLUSPA. " Heim-" dal lifts up his cronked trumpet, " and founds it aloud. Odia e confule the head of Mimies " the great Alh, that all fublime " and fruitful, is violently (haken, " and fends forth a groan. The " Giant burile his irons. What is " doing among the Gods? What " is doing among the Genii? The " land of the Giants is filled with " uproar: the Deities collect and " assemble together. The dwarfs " figh and groan before the doors " of their caverns. Oh! ye in-" habitants of the mountains; " can you fay whether any thing " will yet remain in existence? " [The Sun is darkened; the " earth is overwhelmed in the sea; 44 the shining stars fall from hea-" ven; a vapour, mixed with fire, " arises; a vehement heat prevails, " even in heaven itself ."]

The Thirty-third Fable; or, The Sequel of the Conflagration of the World.

N hearing the preceding re-lation, Gangler asks, What will remain after the world thall he confuned; and after Gods, and I-leice, and Men shall perish? For I undersload by you, adds he, that monkind were to exid for ever in another world. Thridi replies, A ter all these prodigies, there will fucceed many new abodes, rome of which will be agreeable and others wretched: but the best mention of ail, will be Gank (or l'enven) where all kinds of liscors shall be quasfed in the Hall called B_{ℓ_0} are, fittened in the country of Clim. That is also a mond delightful palate which is upon the mountains of Indian and which is built of thing good . t is palace good and jule nea thall And In Spirante (1, c. the thore ci the dead) there is a vall and The fons of Thor. Mode, and which faces the north. It is compiled of nothing but the carcales of Serpents, all whole heads are turned towards the infide of the building: there they vomit forth so much venom, that it forms a long river of poison; and in this float the perjured and the murderers; as is faid in those verses of the Voluspa: "I know that " there is in Nastrande, an abode " remote from the Sun, the gates " of which look towards the " north; there drops of poise " rain through the windows. It " is all built of the carcales of " ferpents. There, in rapid rivers, " swim the perjured, the affaffer, " and those who seek to seduce " the wives of others. In another " place, their condition is fill " worle; for a wolf, an all-de-" vouring monter, perpetually " torments the bodies who are fest " in thither." Gangler refumes the discourse, and says, Which then are the Gods that shall survive? Shall they all perish, and will there no longer be a heaven nor an earth? Har replies, There will arise out of the sea, another earth most lovely and delightful: covered it will be with verdure and pleatant fields: there the grain shall spring forth and grow or itfelf, without cultivation. VIDAR and VALE shall also survive, because neither the flood, nor the lillelt conflagration shall do them any harm. They shall duell in the plains of Ida; where was fermerly the relidence of the Gods. ducted flucture, the fortal of Magne repair thither; thither

* The pull ge in Brickets is given from the Latin of Goranfon, being controlly M. Miles.

^{*} This and the preceding names are very different in the Edition of Go-

ANTIQUITIES.

ALBER and Hobis, from nhons of the dead. They a and converfe together; sal to mind the advertities save formerly undergone. ifterwards and among the the golden Dices, which da heretofore made ufe of. ere be it observed, that se are devoured all things, rions of the human race, ile and the other female, Lif and Listbrafer, lay conander an hill. They feed dew, and propagate fo ntly, that the earth is foon with a new race of mortals. you will think still more fal is, that Swane (the Sun) it is devoured by the Wolf s. thall have brought forth hter as lovely and as rent as herfelf; and who shall he fame track formerly trod mother: according as it is ed in these verses: "The iant monarch of Fire + thall t an only daughter, before Wolf commits his devasta-This young virgin, after death of the Gods, will ue the fame track as her pa-

, continues Har, If you ay new questions to ask me, not who can resolve you; I have never heard of any one who can relate what will happen in the other ages of the world: [advise you therefore to remain satisfied with my relation, and to preserve it in your memory.——

Upon this, Gingler heard a terrible noise all around him; he looked every way, but could discern nothing, except a vast extended plain. He set out therefore on his return back to his own kingdom; where he related all that he had seen and heard; and ever since that time, this relation hath been handed down among the people by Oral Tradition.

We shall add a few of our Authors remarks on these two curious Fables.

Had the EDDA had no other claim to our regard, than as having preferred to us the opinions and doctrines of the 'ancient northern " nations?' on that important fubject, an existence after this life, it would have merited, even on that account, to have been preferved from oblivion. And really on this head it throws great light on Hiftory: whether we confider that branch of it which principally regards the afcertainment of facts a or that which devotes itself rather to trace the different revolutions. of manners and opinions. Such ranson renders it Crepilar, "Sandals." But M. Mallet's Version is inced by Barthoim. Deauratia order aleuterij. p. 597.

There feems to be a detect or ambiguity in the Original here, which has ed a strange containen of genders, both in the French of M. Mallet, Lutin Version of Geranton. The former has "Le Roi brillant du sgendrera une file unique avant que d'etre englouti par le loup; cette fille a le tra es al six mere, après la mort des dieux." The latter, Unicam muit rubicundigional ILLE REX antiquam EUM Ferris deveraverit; que est, mortant Diis, alum MAYERNAM. I have endeavoured to avoid expressing the pussage in more general terms.

Les Celtes. French Orig.

22 are only found of the former species of History, will find in these concluding Pables, the principles of that wild enthusiastic courage which animated the ravagers of the Roman Empire, and conquerors of the greatest part of Europe. Such as interest themselves more in the latter, will see (not without pleasure and astonishment) a people whom they were wont to confider as barbarous and uncultivated, employed in deep and sublime speculations; proceeding in them more conclusively; and coming, possibly, much nearer to the end, than those celebrated nations who have arrogated to themselves an exclusive privilege to reason and knowledge.

I have before observed, that < the philosophers of the norths? confidered nature as in a state of perpetual labour and warfare. Her Arength was thus continually wasting away by little and little; and her approaching dissolution could not but become every day more and more perceptible. a confusion of the seasons, with a long and preternatural winter were to be the final marks of her decay. The moral world is to be no less disturbed and troubled than the natural. The voice of dying Nature will be no longer heard by man. Her sensations being weakened, and as it were, totally extinct, shall leave the heart a prey to cruel and iphuman passions. Then will all the malevolent and hostile powers, whom the Gods have heretofore their chains, and fill the universa with diforder and confusion. The host of Heroes from VALHALL shall in vain attempt to affift and support the Gods; for though the latter will destroy their enemies, they will nevertheless fall along with them: that is, in other words, in that great day all the inferior Divinities, whether good or bad, shall fall in one great conflict back again into the botom of the Grand Divinity; from whom all things have proceeded, as it were emanstions of his effence, and who will furvive all things. After this the world becomes a prey to flames: which are, however, defined rather to purify than defiroy it; fince it afterwards makes its appearance again more lovely, more pleasant, more fruitful than before, Such, in a few words, is the doctrine of the Edda, when divested of all those poetical and allegorical ornaments, which are only accidental to it. One fees plainly enough, that the poem called Vo-LUSPA hath been the text, of which this Fable is the comment; fince in reality the same ideas, but expressed with a superior pomp and strength, are found in that old poem. It may perhaps afford fome pleafure to peruse the following extracts, given literally from the tranflation of Bartholin +.

and as it were, totally extinct, shall "The Giant Rymer arrives leave the heart a prey to cruel and "from the east, carried in a chainhuman passions. Then will all "riot: the ocean swells; the the malevolent and hostile powers, "Great Serpent rolls himself such om the Gods have heretofore "riously in the waters, and listeth with much difficulty confined, burk" up the sea. The eagle screams

[•] Les Celtes. French.

[†] Vid. CAUSÆ Contemplæ a Danis Mortis, 4to. 1689. Lib. 21. cap. 14. p. 590, & seq. I have rather followed the Latin of Bartholin, than the French Yersion of our Author.

T.

ANTIQUITIES.

91

tears the dead bodies with sorrid beak. The vessel of Jods is fet affoat.

he vessel comes from the the host of Evil Genii; es by sea: Loke is their and director. Their furious from advances, escorted by Volf Fenris: Loke appears them.

se black prince of the Genii re i issues forth from the special formation of the Gods beam rays like the Sun. The sare shaken, and fall eces. The female Giants ler about 'weeping.' Men in crowds the paths of s. The heaven is split ler.

w grief for the Goddels defends Odin. For Odin aces to encounter Fenris; sow-white flayer of Bela?, Athe black' prince of the i of Fire +. Soon is the e of Prigga beaten down.

en runs Vidar, the illuss fon of Odin, to avenge rath of his father. He atthe murderous monster, monster born of a Giant; with his sword he pierces to the heart. "The fun is darkened: the feat overwhelms the earth: the fhining stars vanish out of beaven: the fire furiously rages: the ages draw to an end: the flame according, licks the vault of heaven."

Many other pieces of poetry might be quoted to them, that the Scandinavians had their minds full of all these prophecies, and that they laid great these upon them.

We shall pass by the analogy which our Author takes pains to trace, between the Mythology of the Northern Nations, and the Doctrine taught by Zeno and the Stoics, and only give a few passages, in which he shews, from some of the Grecian and Roman Writers, so far as they have entered into the subject, that the religious opinions of the Celta seemed in a great measure to coincide with those of the Scandinavians. He says,

We are, it is true, but very moderately acquainted with what the Gauls, the Britons or the Germans thought on this head; but as the little we know of their opinions, coincides very exactly with the En-DA, we may fafely suppose the same conformity in the other particulars of which we are ignorant. Let those who doubt this, cast their eyes over the following passages,

" Zamolxia"

belli Incola. Bartholin.

anza is here omitted, being part of what is quoted above in the 3sd 176: as also one or two flanzas below. T.

ur. Illand, orig.

Fray. † Sc. Surtur.

" Zamolxis" a celebrated Druid " of the Getæ and Scythians) " taught his contemporaries, that or neither he nor they, nor the men " who should be born hereaster, " were to perish; but were on the " contrary to repair, after quitting " this life, to a place where they " should enjoy full abundance and " plenty of every thing that was good." Herod. L. 4. § 95.

" If we may believe you," (fays Lucan to the Druids) " the fouls " of men do not descend into the abode of darkness and filence, " nor yet into the gloomy empire of Pluto: you say that the same " spirit animates the body in another world, and that death is " the passage to a long life." Luc. Lib. 1. v. 454.

"The Gauls" (fays Cæfar) " are " particularly assiduous to prove " that fouls perish not."

Lih. 6. cap. 14.

Valerius Maximus, in a passage quoted above in my REMARKS on the 16th Fable, comes still nearer to the doctrine of the Edda; for he fells us that the Celtes looked upon a quiet peaceable death as most wretched and dishonourable, and that they leaped for joy at the *pproach of a battle which would afford them opportunities of dying with their swords in their hands.

" Among the ancient Irish," fays Solinus, " when a woman is " brought to bed of a ion, she " prays to the Gods to give him " the grace to die in battle." This was to with falvation to the child. (See Solin. c. 25. p. 252.)

These authorities may suffice: they do not indeed fay all that the Edna does; but that makes this work so much the more valuable.

The Runic Chapter, or the Magic of

THIS great conqueror and letions, to enforce his laws, and inspire a dread and veneration for his person, pretended not only to an extraordinary knowledge superior to the rest of mankind, but to the most supernatural and wonderful powers; an imposition that has been as fuccessfully as generally practifed by the founders of flates, in all the dark ages, and all the different parts of the world. he attributed to himself the invention of letters, of which it is probable they had not the smallest idea in Scandinavia before his time, he profited of that ignorance; and though that noble art was in itself sufficiently wonderful, to attract in the highest degree the veneration of the people towards the teacher of it, he made it still more awful by causing it to be regarded as the art of magic, and by attributing to letters the power of making all nature subservient, and of working the greatest miracles. We see by the following little poem, the extraordinary virtues which he attibutes either to letters or poetry, or probably to a combination of both.

"Do you know, (fayshe) how " to engrave Runic characters? " how to explain them? how w " procure them? how to prove " their virtue ?" Hethen goes on to enumerate the wonders be could persorm, either by means of these letters, or by the operations of poetry. " I am possessed of songs: such " as neither the spouse of a king. " nor any fon of man can repeat ;

് എ6

one of them is called the HELPER:

to it will HELP thee at thy need, in fickness, grief, and all adversi ties.

" I know a fong, which the fons

" of men ought to fing, if they " would become skilful physicians.

"I know a fong, by which I "fosten and inchant the arms of my enemies; and render their "weapons of none effect.

I know a fong, which I need only to fing when men have loaded me with bonds; for the moment I fing it, my chains fall in pieces, and I walk forth at liberty.

mankind; for as foon as hatred inflames the fons of men, the moment I fing it they are appeared.

"I know a fong, of such vir"tue, that were I caught in a "form, I can hush the winds, and render the air perfectly calm.

When I see, says he, Magicians travelling through the air, I disconcert them by a single look, and force them to abandon their enterprize." He had before spoken of these ærial travellers.

"If I see a man dead, and hanging alost on a tree, I engrave Runic characters so wonderful,

" that the man immediately defeends and converses with me.

"If I will that a man should "neither fall in battle, nor perish by the sword, I sprinkle him over with water at the instant of his birth.

"If I will, I can explain the statute of all the different species of Men, of Genii, and of Gods. None but the wise can know all their differences.

"If I aspire to the love and the favour of the chastest virgin, I bend the mind of the snowy-armed maiden, and make her.yield wholly to my defires.

"I know a secret, which I will mever lose; it is to render myself always beloved by my mistress.

"But I know one which I will "never impart to any female, ex "cept my own fifter, or to her

"whom I hold in my arms. What" ever is known only to one's felf, is always of very great value."

After this, the Author concludes with exclamations on the beauty of the things he has been describing.

"Now, says he, have I sung in my august abode, my sublime verses; which are both necessary to the sons of men, and useless to the sons of men. Blessed be he who hath sung them! Blessed be he who hath understood them! May they profit him, who hath retained them! Blessed be they, who have lent an ear to them!"

Extracts from the Ode of King Regner Lodbrog.

Fanaticism of Glory, animated by that of Religion. Regner, who was a celebrated Warrior, Roet, and Pirate, reigned in Denmark about the beginning of the ninth century; after a long series of maritime expeditions into the most distant countries, his fortune at length sailed him in England. Taken prisoner in battle by his adversary Ella, who was king of a part of that island, he perished by the bite of serpents, with with which they had filled the dungeon he was confined in. lest behind him several sons, who revenged this horrible death, as Regner himself had foretold in the following verses. There is some reason, however, to conjecture that this prince did not compose more than one or two stanzas of this Poem, and that the rest were added, after his death, by the Bard, whose function it was, according to the cultom of those times, to add to the funeral splendor, by finging verses to the praise of the deceased. Be that as it may, this Ode is found in several Icelandic Chronicles, and its versification, language and stile, leave us no room to doubt of its antiquity. Wormius has given us the text in Runic Characters, accompanied with a Latin Version, and large notes in his Lituratura Runica. Vid. p. 197. It is also met with in M. Biorners's collection. Out of the twenty-nine strophies, of which it confifts, I have only chofen the following, as being what I thought the generality of my readers would peruse with most pleasure. I have not even always translated entire stanzas, but have sometimes reduced two stanzas into one, in order to spare the reader such pasfages as appeared to me uninteres, ing and obscure.

"We fought with swords, when, in my early youth, I went towards the east to prepare a bloody prey for the ravenous wolves: ample food for the yellow-footed eagle. The whole cocan seemed as one would the ravens waded in the blood of the slain.

"We fought with swords, in

"the day of that great fight,

"wherein I sent the inhabitants of Helsing to the Hall of Odin.

Thence our ships carried us to Ifa": there our steel-pointed launces, recking with gore, di vided the armour with a terri ble clang: there our swords cless

the shields asunder.

We fought with swords, that day wherein I saw ten thousand of my foes rolling in the dak near a promontory of England. A dew of blood distilled from our swords. The arrows which flew in search of the helmets, bellowed through the air. The pleasure of that day was equal to that of clasping a fair virgin in my arms †.

ee We

Or the Vistula.

† I cannot help thinking, that the Reader will censure our ingenious Atthor, as not having here exerted his usual good taste in selecting, when he finds he has emitted such stanzas as the following, particularly the two last.

We fought with swords, in the Northumbrian land. A furious from descended on the shields: many a lifeless body fell to the earth. It was about the time of the morning, when the soe was compelled to sly in the battle. There the sword sharply bit the polished helmet. The pleasure of that day was like kissing a young widow at the highest seat of the table."

We fought with swords, in the Flemmings land: the battle widely raged before king Freyr fell therein. The blue steel all recking with blood, fell at kingsh

We fought with swords, that day when I made to struggle in the twilight of death that young chief so proud of his slowing locks, he who spent his mornings among the young maidens; he who loved to converse with the handsome widows...
What is the happy portion of the brave. but to fall in the midst of a storm of arrows †?
He who slies from wounds drags tedious miserable life: the dastard feels no heart in his bosom.

young man should march early to the consist of arms: man should attack man or bravely resist him. In this hath always consisted the nobility of the warrior. He who aspires to the love of his mistress ought to be daunt-less in the clash of swords.

we fought with swords: but now I find for certain that men are drawn along by fate: there are few can evade the decrees of the Distinies. Could I have thought the conclusion of my " life reserved for Ella, when ale " most expiring, I shed torrents of blood? When I thrust forward

" my ships in the Scottish gulphs? "When I gained such abundant " spoil for the beasts of prey?

"We fought with swords? I "am still full of joy, when I think "that a banquet is preparing for "me in the palace of the Gods,

"Soon, soon in the splendid abode of Odin, we shall drink Brek
"out of the skulls of our enemies,
"A brave man shrinks not at death. I shall utter no words expressive of fear as I enter the hall of Odin.

"We fought with swords. Ah!

"if my sons knew the sufferings "of their father: if they knew that poisonous vipers tore his "entrails to pieces! with what
"ardour would they wish to wage
"cruel war! For I gave a mother to my children, from whom they "inherit a valiant heart.

" We fought with swords: but "now I touch upon my last mo"ments. A serpent already gnaws Length upon the golden mail. Many a virgin bewailed the slaughter of that

We fought with swords; the spear resounded; the banners reslected the funshine upon the coats of mail. I saw many a warrior fall in the morning t many an hero in the contention of arms. Here the sword reached betimes the heart of my son: it was Egill deprived Agnar of life. He was a youth who never knew what it was to fear."

We fought with swords, in the isles of the south. There Herthiose proved victorious: there died many of my valiant warriors. In the shower of arms, Rogvaldur fell, I lost my son. In the play of arms came the deadly spear: his losty crest was died with gore. The birds of prey bewalled als fall: They lost him that prepared them banquets."

Vid. Five Pieces of Run. Poet. p. 31, 32, 35, &c.

• He means Herald, surnamed Harfagre, or Fairlocks, king of Norway.

† Literally, a hail-storm of darts. Une grêle de traits.

my

my heart. Soon shall my sons black their swords in the blood of Ella: their rage is in flame: - those valiant youths will never • rest till they have avenged their s father.

" We fought with swords, in se fifty and one battles under my se floating b nners. From my er early youth I have learnt to dye the fleel of my lance with blood; • and thought I never could meet er with a king more valiant than on self. But it is time to cease: or Odin hath sent his Goddesses to conduct me to his palace. se am soing to be placed on the . highest seat, there to quaff gobse lets of BEER with the Gods. The hours of my life are rolled " away. I will die laughing."

Some Account of the Arabic Manuscripts at the Escurial, with a Translation of Jime curious Passages from Caliri's Digression on Arabic Poetry; taken from Mr. Baretti's Journey from London to Genoa, &c.

JOU know that at the Escurial there is a valt library, in which, amongst thousands of valuable manuscripts in various languages, there is a large number of Arabic, of which the learned world has long wished for an account.

Several attempts have been made at different times to gratify that wish; but always in vain, until King Ferdinand, who was predeceffor to his present Majesty, com- Bibliotheca, which he coul manded Dr. Michael + Cah assume this undertaking,

This Cafiri, a Syro-Ma by birth, who has long been King's librarian at the Esc has at last after many years la published a volume (to be fol by several more) intituled, B OTHECA ARABICO-HISPAN CURIALENSIS, five libroru nium MSS. quos Arabice ab ribus magnam partem Arabo-H. composites Bibliotheca canobii rialensis complectitur. Recensu planatio opera et studio MICH CASIRI, Syro-Maronita, Pre S. Theologia Doctoris, &c. T PRIOR.

This book, just come out press in this town, is a fo about 550 pages, printed wi best types on the best paper the manuscripts noted down amount to the number 1 of arranged under twelve heads Grammatici. Rhetorici. Poetici. Philologici et Miscellanei. Lexicographi. Philosophi. Ethici et Politici. Mrdici. Al Historiam Naturalem #Cnirs.

I neologici.

Dozmatici, Scholaflici, M € c.

Cirilliani.

Many and very curious: notices that Caffri gives us

+ M. Clark calls him Svri.

I They amount to 1630, though the left is mark 1 1628. Mere char made me observe, that the class of the Pontage is and by mistake w number 268, when it ought to be marked an ans the preceding class RHETORICI ends with the number 269, 'y another marked 259.

ANTIQUITIES.

ipiled, were he not a ous master of the oris, and full-fraught t extensive erudition. ting a letter and not a efore I país over a those notices, and will ir a few.

Son entitled MEDICE reral Arabic versions ik of Hippocrates, Dioscorides, with entaries by the Araere, befides a number orks by feveral Araas, amongst which was a native of Perwa, the fon of a Perat Belbara in Ara-L, & native of Malaga d MAIMONIDES, of clion, born at Cer-

r this division, Dr. 18 (in his own Latin ibic) the lives of the personages, besides re and ARISTOTLE, works, as it appears otheca, the Arabians translated, as well as pocrates, Galen, and ion entitled Ad H13-TURALEM pertinentes, count of the codex nmber cwi, we have those Arabic authors husbandry.

in entitled THEOLOly made up with mate Alcoran, and with upon it.

n codexes form the is entitled Christiecond of them is a the Alcoran, written ic and Latin, by a Roman Friar; and the last is a Grammatica Trilinguis; that is, of the Arabic, Perfian, and Turkis tongues, with a vertion in Latin in every oppolite page.

But the division that took most of my attention, is that which is entitled Postici. The manuscripta numbered under this divition amount to the number of two bundred and swenty-one, of which thirty-one are in folio, one bundred and five in quarto, and the remaining eighty-five in octavo. Yet you are not to think, that the whole division contains nothing but poets. Cafiri has brought under it both the writers of poetry and the writers upon poetry, especially critics and commentators. I am very angry this very moment with my fate, that did not direct me to the fludy of the Arabic language, that I might go to the Escurial to read those two hundred and twenty-one volumes, or understand at least the fort specimens out of them, which the doctor has brought into his book. How the Roman Arcadians would flare to hear me expatiate, on my return, upon the merits of the fublime poets Zobair, Abulal, Mahlab, Abdelmagid, or the immortal commentators Alfaied, Khalil, Abdaila, Fadlalia, and a hundred others!

Several specimens of Arabic poetry Dr. Cafiri has turned into Latin profe; but acknowledging upon a certain occasion, that in his literal version they appear rather childish than otherwise, he adds thefe words by way of apology,

Hac carmina, fi fenfum spectes, peracuta sunt; si werba, haud parum ingeniofa. Ceterum, ut in aliis contingit linguis. Arabici versus in alteram linguam conversi, non cam grations graciam ac dulcedinem servant, quam apud se et domi babent: nec mirum, unus enim quisque sermo quandam elo-cutionis vim ac legem babet plane ab ea diversum, quæ in ceteris obtinet.

In Emilish, thus:

These verses, with respect to the sentiment, are very acute, and the expression is ingenious. But it happens to Arab: an poetry as to poetry in other languages, that it loses by translation its native grace and melody: nor is this to be wondered at, since every language has its own peculiar phraseology and force of expression different from those of other tongues."

To this remark, which must be obvious to any one who knows but two languages well, Casiri adds a digression of his own, which he entitles Arabicae Poeseos Specimen et Pretium.

In this digression we are told, that the Arabs cult vated poetry with the greatest ardour: that the great people amongst them, were most liberal to their great poets; that early in the morning of some stated days, the poets of Fez used to assemble at the house of the governor to recite verses in praise of Mahomet to a valt concourie of people; and that he, whole verses were most applauded, received a hundred golden ducats, a robe, a fine horf, and a pretty The rest of the poets had maiden. but fifty ducats a piece; that in more remote ages, great skill in pretry intitled to nobility; that when any poet endowed with uncommon powers cime to a town, the women belonging to this and that tribe, would go to meet him with timbrels and other musical infruments in their hands, : did when going to a nuprial would treat him with a fum dinner, and point him out t dren as a pattern for im The poet Alaeldin (adds received once five thousand ducats (nummi aurei) trom Aldbaer Bibar, king of for two disticts only, which will add myself) would our days fetch five-pence fr The dif monarch living. will transcribe, that you ma a guess at the worth.

Moercre ne afficiaris. 2n decrevit, illud erit; quodqui tabili decreto statutum est, siet.

At inter motum et quietem mento res componitur, et a boc facile reddetur.

I suppose that in the a Arabic, the two distichs as fine; yet modern sovereign better the value of five the ducats than to bestow these distichs, be they ever so lent.

Suffer me now to tra fome paragraphs out of digression on Arabic poet they contain several sings which seem very curious.

Now the Arabs do not, Europeans, aft either trage comedies: nor does any inform us, that they have such poems: we have how our library one or two c written in Arabic. There in their poetry any inter of Grecian mythology; shold in the utmost abhorm names as well as the work heathen deities. They have ever sables of their own, to their own genius and so They extol the virtues of elebrate their atchievements feigned personages. They h against vice, and satyrize ation of manners; and in ecies of poetry they have had writers who have eminently ad.

ANTIQUITIES.

bic poetry therefore, like a other languages, is conb certain laws of metre; but of a peculiar kind, as will tly appear. There are to be in Arabic almost all thoseof poetry which we have refrom the Greeks and the is namely, idylliums, elespigrams, odes, fatires, &c. ich taken together, país unse general title of Divan; s to fay, Academica; with title the writings of their are usually inferibed.

is, the metrical part of it) word Scheer; that is, bair air-jkin,) and compare its ire to the firucture of a tent of goats-hair (or goats-fkin) compacted with chords and for which reason a verse is

Batt (a boufe,) as being a tre of finished metre, and as e, a complete building.

Arabic verse consists of long nort syllables, out of which form four seet, the first of is called the light cherd, beade up of two syllables, one the other short; or, as the ans express it, a consonant, and a consonant quiescent; condition to conform the beauty ever chord, consisting of conswhich are moved (that is, twowel amexed to them not as, but presounced): the foot is called the conjoined proceeding smoothly and uninterruptedly,) having its two first confonants moved, and its last quiefcent: the fourth foot is called the disjoined flake, in which a quiefcent letter stands between two others, each of which is moved (that is, pronounced with a vowel.)

Of these feet the parts of their verse are composed, the chords and the flakes following each other alternately, from the different combination of which their poems receive their different denominations. Metrical quantity, or measure, the Arabiana denote by the following technical terms. MOSTAFELON, which denotes a feries of three feet; namely, a light ebord, a disjoined stake, and again a light chord: FAELATON, by which they understand like-wife three feet; first a light chord, fecendly a conjoined flake, and laftly a light ebord. FAULOR, which denotes a combination of two feet only, the first of which is a conjoined stake, the other a light chord: MOTAFAILOR, which denotes three feet; a grave chord, a light cbord, and a conjoined stake; Mo-TAPAILATON, by which are underflood three feet in a feries; namely, a conjoined fluke, a grave chard, and a light chord.

The menfuration therefore, and quantity of the Arabic verie, confitts in nothing but in the determinate and alternate number of moveable and quiefcent contor ants: I has is twofold, Matrical and Roythmaal. The former confitts of alternate feet only; the latter, besides its regular number of feet, requires that each verie term to in syllables of the tame foun (that is, in rhyme). This is some mes alternate, as in epigrams, odes, &c. and sometimes successive; but II 2 only in such poems as confist of more than seven verses.

Each verse consists of two hemi-Ricks, which taken together make up one intire verse. Either of the two hemisticks is called a door or gate; both put together, a bivalve or double gate, by a metaphor taken from a gateway, which is shut on each side by a valve or folding door.

The former part of the hemiflick, they call the * access (or approach; the latter the proposition; the last syllable of the latter hemissick, which gives the rhyme, they call the pulsation (or knocking.

From the different order and position of the chords and stakes, arise listeen kinds of verses, which are comprised in five periods or circles.

The first circle, which is stilled VARIOUS (or variegated) comprehends three kinds of verses, the long, the extended, and the expanded; which consist of ten long syllables and four short ones, or of fourteen moved and ten quirient:

where it must be observed, the these three kinds are distinguished from each other, not on account of the greater or less quantity of their syllables, but merely on account of the letters either moved or quiescent, which accordingly are ranked in different degrees.

The second circle is sliled the COMPOSITE, under which are contained two kinds of verses, the present and the copious. Each has sliteen letters that are moved, and in quiescent, placed in a different order: the measure of the ink kind is MOTAPAALON repends six times; the measure of the charies is MOPAALATON, which likewis is fix times successively repeated.

The third circle is called sini-LAR; to which belong three kinds of poems, the ede (or forg,) the fater, and the idyllium (or thorus kind of poem), each of which contains twelve conforants that are moved, and eight quiescent.

The fourth circle is called the CONTRACTED; under which are comprised fix pieces of verse; the quick, the † ejaculatory (or imparsul).

As the Arabians dwelt in tents, we are not surprized at their taking their metaphors from objects about which they were so frequently employed, and applying them to what Milton calls the building of verse. The word realist by Casha Accessus, is translated by Cashas in his Arabic Lexicon anteres per fessions, since therax. It may very well therefore signify the anterior per of porch of the tent. The next word Protessino is more obscurely expected. The original is derived from a word signifying to offer or present any thing; and it is translated by Coshas polas tentorii. As this polas tentorii was the vehible or threshold of the care, had presenting its if basic you entered the inventorit, hence I concerns it took its name, and afterwards became a technical term in metre. But the word professio convers no such idea, as far as I can fee.

The thre firl and the last of these silver it conve in the original variable the stone idea. They are words signifying the quark, impetuous, as absorpt notion of an animal, such as a basic lesping, or a stag bounding in its course. I think impetuous would be a horse translation of emission than each last.

ANTIQUITIES.

101

light, the fimilar, the conthe convolled (or abrupt), which confifts of twelve that are moved, and nine ifth circle is called the .DANT, to which one kind only belongs, filled the ; this is made up of twelve its that are moved, and fecle afteen kinds of verses coumerated, others add a i, which they call the don-d Dbubait, in which each kends with a rhyme. This it object of contention with bian poets, and is what has are much delighted Arabic poetry is not so usly observant of these at that their writers may times at liberty either to etrench a syllable or two:

y, when either a weighty y sentence, or an epiphora poigoant and acute sensems to require it: and list this kind often occur both breek and Latin poets of repute.

in a verse the Arabians the word Tarphil, the y the word Prostbess; in the verse, when enlarged foot, changes the colmass into that of matasoalate abridging or dropping les at the end is called by thins Athram, by the spharess; and let this suffice concerning the Arabic poetry, as far as relates to my prefent purpole: He who is curious enough to defire farther information upon this article, may confult (among others who have treated this subject in Latin) Father Philip Guadagneli, in a work published at Rome in Latin and Arabic in the year 1642, intituled Inflitutions of the Arabic language. In this book Guadagnoli has rendered into Latin the whole system of Arabic metre, while Dbialdia, furnamed Alkhazragœus, by birth a Spaniard, the first of poets, has given us in most elegant verse: at the end of which treatife we are also presented with various specimens of Arabic poetry.

I hope this long quotation from Casiri's work will prove acceptable, as it gives an idea of Arabic prosody, which is a thing not easily got at in books. But is it not surprizing, that a nation so fond of poetry, as the Arabs seem to have been, and possessed once of large tracks of land in three parts of the world, should never think of having theatrical exhibitions, and neither write tragedies nor comedies? What difference between nations and nations!

Dreft of the Ancient French: from Velly's New Hiftery of France.

SIGEBER'T was beried in St. Medard's Au. 576. church, at Soissons, where his statue is still seen in long clothes with d abrupt a better word than convulfied. They relate to the metre and subject-matter of composition.

The author of this book owes this and the foregoing note, as well as a part of the English translation of this long passage, to the scarned eler, professor or poetry at Oxford.

the mantle which the Romans called chlumys. This was the drefs of Clovis's children, whether as more noble and majestic, or that they looked on the title of Augustus as hereditary in their family. However it be, long clothes were for several ages the dress of persons of distinction, with a border of sable, ermin, or miniver. Charles V. it was emblazoned with all the pieces of the coat of arms. At that time, neither ruffs, collars, nor bands were known, being introduced by Henry II. Till his time the neck of our kings was always quite bare, except Charles the Wise, who is every where represented with an ermin collar. The short dress anciently worn only in the country and the camp, came to be the general fashion under Lewis XI. but was laid aside under Lewis XII. Francis J. revived it, with the improvement of flashes. The favourite dress of Henry II. and his children, was a tight, close doublet, with trunk hose, and a cloak scarce reaching to the waist.

The dress of the French ladies, It may be supposed, had likewise its revolutions. They seem, for near nine hundred years, not to have been much taken up with ornaments. Nothing could require less time or nicety than their headdress, and the disposition of their Every part of their linen was quite plain, but at the same time extremely fine. Laces were long unknown. Their gowns, on the right side of which was em- which this prince kissed the hand broidered their husbands' coat of which had the honour of touching own family, were to close us to shew all the delicacy of their shape, and came up so high as to cover their whole breaft, up to the neck. The habit of widows had very much of that of our nuns. It was not till under Charles VI. that they began to expose their shoulders, The gallantry of Charles the VIIth's court brought in the use of bracelets, necklaces, and CAT-TIDEL Queen Anne de Bretagne despitel those trinkets; and Catharine 4 Medicis made it her whole but the to invent new. Caprice, vanity, luxury, and coquetry, have a length brought them to their prefent enormity.

Clause in the Salic Low; from the . ∫ame.

A UTHARIS, king An. 598 of Lombardy, induced Garisabaldus, duke of Bevaria, to shake off the Australia. yoke; and to attach him the more firmly to his interest, aked in daughter Theodolinda in marriage. It is faid that he himself west m disguisewith his ambassadors. The princess, according to the culou of the people over whom the was soon to reign, presented the golds to the envoys; Autharis, in the turning it, squeezed her hand, a presumption which put her w blush; she suspected it could be other than the king of Lombust himself, and she was confirmed in her surmise by the warmth with arms, and on the left that of their her. This passage brings to mind ^{*} Lorrain, which, with its dependencies, formed a considerable kingdom.

ANTIQUITIES.

tartifice of the Salic law ...
fqueress the hand of a free fall pay a fine of fifteen
s.

be unbappy Chundon; from the fame.

Wife of Gontran, A king of Burgundy, aft moments, requested of et two physicians to death, tedicines the pretended had al to her; he was fo weak mife it, and had the cruelty his word. The fame king ne day a wild bull newly he caused the ranger of the be apprehended, who laid :hamberlain of the king's Chundon, and he denied The king ordered the to be decided by combat. ty accused being aged and he put in his stead one of ews, who mortally wounded ofer, but going about to him, killed bimfelf with erfary's poniard. The m's death being confidered viction of the chamberlain, sarch ordered him to be and he was floned on the This was what those bartimes called a regard to It will appear matter of , that amidit all the elofor piety and devotion, Gregory de Tours bestows tran, he should add, that concubine named Veneranda. wonder vanishes on reflectconcubinage, which howfamous it became afterwas then a legal union; lefs folemn, was not lefs

The indiffoluble than marriage. civil law authorized it when, by the Roman laws, the want of portion or birth in the woman, prohibited her being married with persons of a certain rank. Now, though a concubine did not enjoy the fame confideration in the family as a wife of equal condition, yet was it a name of honour very different from that of mittrefs; and her children, according to the oncient custom of the France, were, with the Father's approbation, not less qualified to inherit. Western church, for several centuries, held this kind of alliance entirely lawful. The first council of Toledo expressy decides, A man is te bawe but one wife or one concubine at bis option. St. Indore of Seville, the council of Rome under Eugene II. another held in the fame city under Leo IV. fpeak to the same purpose. If these marriages came to be abolified, it was not on account of any intrinsic illegality, especially when the engagement was real and for ever, but on account of the numberiess abuses arifing from the want of the canonical folemnities. It was likewise for this reason that the Roman laws, though legitimating the iffue by fuch union, excluded them from the right of fuccession.

Advantages which France derived from the antient Monks; from the fame.

A MONG other advantages accruing to the government from so many pious foundations, it is to the skill and industry of the recluses that H 4 France

France owes a great part of its present fertility. It had been frequently ravaged by the incursions of the Barbarians; the eye every where met with wastes, forests, heaths, moors, and marshes, that bequeathing to the monks estates of no produce was thought but a very small matter, accordingly they had as much land given them as they could cultivate. These worthy solitaries, far from devoting themselves to God, with a view of living in idleness, grubbed up and cleared the land, drained, fowed, planted, and built, so that these weary wastes soon became pleasant and fruitful tracts. opulent were some abbies, that they could raise a little army; and on this account the abbots were afterwards frommoned to the affemblies in the March-Field.

State of Trade in the 8th and 9th Centuries; from the same.

THERE was a settled trade between England and France, till Charlemain, offended at the presumption of Offa, king of the Mercians, prohibited all manner of dealing between the two nations; and it was not till two years after, that it returned into its former channel. In these times. scarce any other trade was known than that carried on in markets or fairs; these were almost the only places for providing one's felf with necessaries. Artificers and dealers lived apart dispersed in the country; the towns were chiefly inhabited by the clergy and some handicraftsmen, with few or no monks or nuns, the far greater part of the monasteries being either in the open countries or the neighbourhood of the cities. The 164 bility lived on their effates, or at-The Put tended on the court. people were so far under their lord's power, as not to quit the place of their birth without his leave; the villain was annexed to the effect. and the slave to the master's boose or land. Such a dispersion was little promotive of trade, which loves large and policed tommunities; and it was to remedy this inconvenience that our kings emblished so many fairs. One of the most famous, was that of St Dennis, traders reforting to it not only from all parts of France, but from Friefland, Saxony, England, Spain, and Italy. We find, however, that in more distantages, trade was not absolutely confined to those mukets alone, or to European foreigners. The city of Arles, under the first reigns of the Merovingians, was in great repute for its manufactures, its embroideries, and gold and filver inlaid works, and like Narbonne and Marseilles. quented by ships from the Levant and Africa; but this prosperity gradually funk under the devastations of continual wars, the Aiatics and Africans no longer coming to our ports. Such however is the force of original and innate dispositions, that Narbonne, Arles, and Marseilles, still retain that commercial and naval genius which had made them the staples of the universe under the Carlovingians, They kept a certain number of ships trading to Constantinople, Genoa and Pisa, and Alexandria. Lewis the Gracious granted a charter to a body of merchants without any other acknowledgment or obligation than to come once a year and account with his exchequer. T'be

ANTIQUITIES.

: French appear to have little themselves in trade under vo first races of our kings, g it almost entirely to fo-Spain furnished them tories and mules; Friefland, arty-coloured mantles, upper mts furred with marten, otter, at fkin; England, with grain, is, lead, leather, and hounds; aft and Africa, with drugs, ite vines, and Egyptian pabe only fort used in France : eleventh century, and olivewhich at that time was fo in our climates, that at a il held at Aix la Chapelle, s were permitted to use bacon If foreigners imported only on goods to France, its exwere aniwerable, confifting of potters ware, brafery, honey, madder, and falt.

uns of the Wit and Satire of Middle Ages; from the same.

BOUT this time died one of those knights against whom the malignant envy could not the least reproach: a poet revered him, composed the yric on his virtues, which, on her hand, was a severe satire eat personages, and being a both of the wit and of the is of those times, it may not acceptable: here it follows literal plainnes: "In this I lay I will lament Blacos, ell indeed may I lament his The most cordial friend! .oft worthy lord! with him

e virtues have taken their

This is fuch an afflictive

firoke that I do not know any expedient for the vaft loss, but to take that noble heart of his, and fhare it among thefe barons, who have none, and they will have heart sufficient. The first piece should be eaten by the emperor of Rome, if he is for recovering those lands which the Milanete bave wrested from him, in spite of all his bulky Germans could do. We would likewife counsel the illustrious king of France to partake of it, that he may retrieve Callile, which he is to fillily loofing; but should his good mother know it, he won't touch it; for all the world fees what a dutiful child be is, how very obedient to all the fays, never doing any thing that may displease King of England, eat thou a lufty gob, for no heart haft thou, and then thou wilt be an hero, and regain those provinces which, fy upon thy cowardice and negligence! thou halt shamefully suffered to fall into the French hands. The king of Caftile should eat two shares, having two kingdoms, and not capable fo much as to govern one; but when he is for eating, let him too get out of his mother's fight; should it come to her ears, the would give him a found warming. I would have the king of Arragon not to be sparing of this animating heart; he has two blots on his eleutcheon, one got at Marfeilles, and the other at Milan, and this is the only way to make all clean and bright again. The king of Navarre shall not go without a good bit; for by what b hear, he was bester thought of when a Count, than now on the throne, to which he has been fo fortunately raifed. A fad thing indeed! when they whom God has exalted are brought brought low by their base want of courage. The count de Toulouse, must think that he has no small need of it, if he pleased to call to mind what he has been, and what he is now; and he should eat it with a good will, for his own heart is known to be such a poor thing, that it will never help him to recover his losses."

A Differtation on Joduta, the Idol of Saxony, and of the Murche. By M. Kuster.

OTHARIO, duke of Saxony, being at war with the emperor Henry V. gave him battle in the year 1115, near Gerbstadt, in the county of Mansseldt, descated him, and killed him 45,000 men. To perpetuate the memory of his victory, Lothario caused a statue to be erected in the figure of a man, in the habiliments of war, holding in his right hand a cestus, and having on his left arm a buckler, on which were the arms of Saxony, viz. a white horse on a red shield. statue being a monument of his victory as owing to the divine affistance, which was most probably expressed in Latin or Italian, the ignorant and superstitious vulgar took the Latin word adjuterium, or the Italian cjute, for a proper name, and the statue for that of the faint whose name it was, and made of it, St. Joduta, or Jedutte, and by corruption Zeautte, Zeauck, and Geducte. Among other virtues ascribed to it, is that of curing the ascribed to it, is that of curing the Hulfen's Nieb, in which probably tooth-uch, by taking a little bit of there had been an image of the the wood, and holding it in the Virgin.

mouth, This pretended faint is also held in veneration in many other parts of Germany; heact there is a vulgar proverb in Welphalia, Pll beat you, till you invok Judutha.

There was another flatue of Jadulba near Writzen on the Oder, in the Middle Marche; travellers usually stopped to worship it, and to beg its affiliance on account of the bad roads into which they were entering; in particular, the Saint was defired to take the horses under his protection, lest the driven, through their brutality, or wanting to drive them too hard, should do them a mischief. Adam Spengler, inspector of Writzen, caused this statue, in the last century, to be thrown into the river, where it was swallowed up. Our author finds other traces of Jodniba at Mubourg, Bremen, &c. This Italian or Latin name, translated into German, was also given, by way of imitation, to other statues, or imges of Saints and Saintesses. Charlemagne built a church in Wellphalia, in the year 783, to which he gave the name of Saut Hulps, or Holy Assistance. In another church in Holtlein was a chalice, on which our Saviour fixed to the cross, had at his feet his mother and St. John, with this inteription, St. Huipe, pray for us. 18 the same place was a wooden image, which the people of the place called St. Hulpe, and there was a hole in the wail, to which they gave the name of Sant Hulpen Kluns, or St.

ANTIQUITIES:

107

· of Shakespeare, never printed in his Works.

rard Alleyn, the Garrick of takespeare's time, had been most friendly footing with et, as well as Ben Ishnfon. fed frequently to fp n! their s together at the fign of obe, fomewhere ne r Black where the Play-house then The world need not be told, e convivial hours of fuch a rate must be pleasing as profit ble, and may truly to be fuch pleatures as bear the reflections of the g in confequence of one e meetings, the following was written by G. Peel, a of Christ Church College, , and a Dramatic Poet, who ed to the club, to one Marle, nate of his.

Friend Marle. must delyre that my Syster tche, and the Cookerie book omyfed, may be fente bye a-I never longed for thy ny more than laft night: we I very merrye at the Globe, Ned Alleyn did not scruple ne pleafauntely to thy friende hat he had stolen his speeche he qualityes of an Actor's ncye in Hamlet hys Trajeom convertations many fold had paffed betweene them, pinyons given by Alleyn ige the fubjecte-Shakespeare did not take this talke in good force; but Johnson put an end to the strife with wittylye remarkinge, "This affaire needeth no contentione; you stole it from Ned, no doubte; do not marvel: Have you not seen him act tymes out of number?"

Believe me most syncerilie, Yours, G. PEEL.

As Mr. Alleyn is a character, at prefent, little known in the theatrical world, though we need not fabjoin any other testimony to his ments than the above compliment from such a judge as Ben Johnson, we shall, however, beg leave to add (hy way of shewing it was no friendly partiality) the opinions of two Gentlemen, whose established literary characters are too well known to doubt their complimenting at the expence of their genies and sincerity.

Dr. Fuller in his Worthies fays, "that Alleyn made any part, especially a majestic one, become him." And Sir Richard Baker, who was a cotemporary of his, calls him and Burbage "the best actors of our time;" adding, "what Plays were ever so pleasing, as when their parts had the greatest part."—And in his Chronicle we find him once more joining Alleyn with Burbage in the following encomium: "They were two such actors, as no age must ever look to see the like."

A Letter from Mr. J. Moult to Dr. Percival, of Manchester, F. R. S. containing a new Manner of preparing Salep.

[Read January 12, 1769.]

SIR.

which I left you some time ago, meets with your approbation, so far as to think it deserving to be laid before the Royal Society, I now send you my method of curing the common Orchis roots of our own country, so as perfectly to refemble what comes to us from Turky. And if the communication be of any public utility, I shall think myself sufficiently gratified for the trouble I have had in prosecuting the experiments necessary thereto.

The roots I have hitherto made whe of, are those of the orchis morio mas foliis maculatis of Parkinson, the eynosorchis morio mas of Gerard, and the cynosorchis major, vulgo dog-stones: though, from a specimen of the orchis palmata major mas of Gerard, which you have among the Salep, that root likewise appears capable of being made to answer the same purposes as the others. The best time to gather the roots is when the seed is formed, and the stalk going to fall; for then the new bulb, of which the Salep is made, is arrived to its I and may be known from one, whose strength is the by the preceding germins a white bud rising from the it, which is the germ of the succeeding year. Troot, being separated so stalk, is to be washed it and a fine thin skin, that to be taken off with a small come off with a coacloth.

When a sufficient qui the roots is thus cleaned, to be spread on a tin plan into an oven, heated to the of a bread oven, where th remain fix, eight, or ten in which time they will their milky whiteness, acquired a transparency of horn, but without be nished in size. When the rived at this state, they removed to another roo and harden, which will b a few days; or they may t in a very flow heat, in a fe I have tried both ways cels.

The orchis's above-r grow spontaneously in the the country, and throug whole kingdom. The best in a dry, landy, bathe method of curing

y, I hope it will encourage livation of so nutritious a le, so as to reduce it from int high price, which conto people of fortune, to moderate as would bring it amon use, like other kinds or flour; and so become a saddition to our present stables, its quality of thickater being to that of fine tarly as 2 to 1, with this ce, that the jelly of Salepis clear and transparent, that of flour is turbed and is thould find you in the intiments respecting it, I a liberty to make use of it agly.

And am,
With all respect,
or very humble servant,
le, Nov.
768.
J. MOULT.

eceived October 31, 1769.]

resumt of an Oil, transmitted fr. George Brownings, of h Carolina. By William foo, M. D. R. S. S.

tead December 14, 1769.]

To the Regal Society.

IE application of natural productions to the benefit of id, has always been an observed excellent infiliation; deavours to extend the utifubfiances already very observed, have always met by a favourable reception.

It is with this view, that I ley before you fome pods of a vegetable, and the oil preffed from their contents. They were fent from Edenton, in North Carolina, by Mr. George Brownrigg, whose brother, Dr. Brownrigg, is a worthy member of our fociety; and are the produce of a plant well known, and much cultivated, in the fouthern colonies, and in our American fugar islands, where they are called ground nuts, or ground peals. They are originally, it is prefumed. of the growth of Africa, and brought from thence by the negroes, who use them as food, both raw and roafted, and are very fond of them. They are therefore coltivated by them in the little parcels of land fet apart for their use by their mafters. By these means, this plant has extended itself, not only to our warmer American fettlements, but it is cultivated in Surinam, Prafil, and Peru.

The plant, which produces thefe. has been mentioned, and deferibed. by the botanical writers of the later times. Ruy, in his History of Plants, calls it Arachis Hypogaios, Americanus. It is the Aracbidua quadrifolia willefa of Plumier. Sir Hans Siozne, in his history of [a. maica, calls it Aracbiana India utrinique titraphylla. Pito and Ma. rograde boto mention it among the Brafilian plants, under the name of Alundebi. Linnaus has conflituted a genus of this plant, of which only one species is as yet known, under Mr. Ray's generical name of Araclis.

This plant, together with a very few of the trifo) are tribe, has the property of burying its feed under ground, which it does in the following manner: as foon as the plant is in flower, its flower is bent towards the ground until it touches it. The pointal of the flower is then thrust into the ground to a sufficient depth, where it extends itself, and forms the seed-vessel and fruit, which is brought to maturity under ground, from whence it is dug up for use.

pleus

This plant, which is a native of warm climates, will not bear being cultivated to advantage in Great-Britain, or in the northern colonies; but, according to Mr. Brownrigg, in southern climates its produce is prodigious; and what adds to its value is, that rich land is not necessary for its cultivation, light fandy land, of small value, will produce vast crops of it. fides what the negroes cultivate for their own use, some planters raise a considerable quantity of it, for the feeding of swine and poultry, which are very fond of the ground pease; and, when they are permitted to eat freely of them, foon become fat.

Mr. Brownrigg, from whom, as I before mentioned, I received the oil, confiders the expressing oil from the ground peafe, as a discovery of his own: it may, perhaps, at this time, be very little practifed either in North Catolina, the place of his zesidence, or elsewhere. But certain it is, that this oil was expressed above fourfcore years ago; as Sir Hans Sloane mentions it, in the first volume of his History of Jamaica; and fays, that this oil is as good as that of almonds. probable, however, that fmall quantities only were expressed, and that even at that time the knowledge of it did not extend very far. Mr. Brownrigg therefore is highly praise-worthy in reviving the remembrance of procuring oil from these seeds. It is obtained, by in bruifing the seeds very well, and afterwards preffing them in cases bags, as is usual in procuring oil from almonds or linked.

To have the oil in the best masner, no heat should be used. The heating the cheeks of the press iscreases the quantity of the oil, but lessens its goodness, where it may be intended to be used as food, or as a medicine, For other purpoks, the larger quantity of oil, obtained by heat, will answer equally well.

Neither the feeds nor oil are apt to become rancid by keeping; and as a proof of this, the oil before you, which was fent from Carolina in April laft; and, without any particular care, has undergone the heats of last summer, is yet perfeetly sweet and good. These seeds furnish a pure, clear, well-taked oil; and, as far as appears to me, may be used for the same purposes, both in food and physic, as the oils of olives or almonds. It may be applied likewise to many, if not all, the economical purpoles with the former of these.

But what greatly adds to the merit of what Mr. Brownrigg has informed us of, is the low price, at which this oil may be obtained. He says, that ten gallons of the peafe, with the hulks unshelled, will, without heat, yield one gain lon of oil; if pressed with heat, they will afford a much larger quantity. The value of a bubel of these, in Circlina, does at exceed, as I have been informed, eight-pence, or thereabouts. Tack will furnish a gallon of oil, the labour and apparatus to procust which, cannot e it much. T is price will not amount to to much

HIT

t of what the best Fiof olives costs in England, efore ought to be considuable information, as, t of its cheapness, a ion of mankind than at many be permitted to use heir food, from whom it hheld on account of its nantities of olive oil are Europe to America. and alone, Mr. Brownanually confumes twenty allons. The quantities is majesty's other do-America must be pro-The oil from ground which any quantity dee raifed, may and would s confemption of olive uld likewife, I am perar exportation to any of s where the oil of olives carried: and thereby valuable article of come oil has been expressed ground pease, they are at food for swine.

of the vegetable profore you, than that we possessed of, would not table to the Royal Sote the liberty of laying t account before you;

BTLEMEN,

our most obedient.

humble fervant.

W. WATION.

Improvements and Experiments in Agriculture; from Mr. Young's Six Months Tour.

Of POTATORS, and the amazing Crops subject they produce by a proper Culture.

I Shall first lay before you a general state of their culture and produce, and if it gives rise to any average accounts, shall extract them accordingly.

At Sandy in Bedfordfire.

Soil. A rich deep black fand.

Rent, 31, 10s.

Seed and diffance. Twenty bushels at one foot every way.

Culture. Hoe them thrice. Product. 250 bushels, 201, 161. Expences, 121. 181. 6d.

Profit, 71. 171. 6d.

About Doncafter.

Soil. A fine light rich loofe

Product. 250 bufhels.

About York.

Soil. Light. 12s. per acre.
Planted in two-feet rows, and earthed up with hoes.

Product. 60 buftels.

At Cottingbam near Hull,

Soil. Rich loam and mixed clay, at 31. per acre.

Seed, &c. twenty bushels. Hoe feveral times.

Product. 180 buthels.

About Stillingfleet.

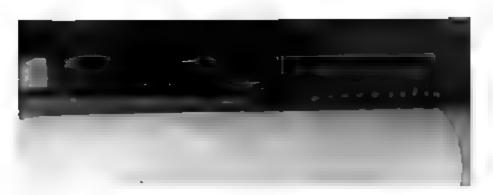

Soil. Sandy, at 14s.
Seed, &c. Sixteen bushels, rows two feet, plants one foot; horse-hoe them two or three times, and handweed them.

Product. 80 buftels. Mr. Turner, at Kirkleatham.

Soil. A light poor fund, at 8r. In rows three feet, plants

OF

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770. 112

one foot; horfe hoed once, and hand heed once; twice weeded.

Product. 588 bufbels. Mr. Turner, at Kirkleatham.

Soil. A rich black loam, well manured.

In beds four feet wide, three rows on each; alleys two feet; plants eighteen inches afunder.

Product. 166 bufhels.

Mr. Crow; Kiplin.

Soil. Clay, at 12 s. 6d.

Culture. Manures with long dung or haulm; plants in gows two feet afunder, plants nine inches; twelve bushels to the acre; four horfe-hoeings, and well hand-hoed.

Product. 120 bufhels. Feeds all forts of cattle.

Mr. Smile, at The Leafes.

Soil. Gravel.

Culture. Manure, four loads of long dung: fet in rows fifteen inches, ten from fet to fat; fifteen buffie's feed. Kept clean from wheals.

Product. 130 buffiels. Seventon moor-hae farms.

Soils. Black moory land, at 45. 63.

Produ 1. 120 bufhels.

The Cullier? moor hulbandry.

Soil. Black peat earth.

Culture. In rows two feet, fets one faut; thirteen bulhei-.

Pr. d. B. – 1 j3 bafhels. Mr. Daker, Sweet rl

Soil. Light loan on lime-Cone, at 3 ...

Culture. Rows, three feet; ten loads of dang. Horfe and hund-hoed.

Product. 150 ballels.

Mr. Seriese, at Burby. Soil A far ip leam, at 12% 6 % Culture. Plants, one feet alunder, a bandfol of dong to each, five loads; eight bulbels fets; borfe and hadhoed.

Product. 216 bathels.

Nest Newcafile.

Soil. Sandy, at 201.

Culture. Twelve baftel of fets, at one foot fquue; hand-hoe twice, and hast weed.

Product. 236 balbelt.

At Morpeth.

Soil. A loamy clay, in general 121. but planters give 54

Culture. Twenty-fire loads, dung; dibbled one for fquare, dig for them; twenty-three bafhele; handhoe thrice.

350 buftels. Er-Product. pences, 121. 51. 6d. Profit, 51. 41. 64.

At Ainzen t.

Soil. Gravelly loam, at 151. Culture. Dig and plough for them, and dung; nine bethels feed; twelve inches feusie.

Product. 150 buffiels.

At Below d.

Soil. Strong loam, at 150 to Culture. Fourteen inches square; fix buthele; land has twice,

Produst. 42 bufhels. About Retakury

Soil, Gravel, fand, and morn at 10% 6%.

Cuiture. Manure; and himhee once or twice.

Product. So buffiels,

At Girmvelt.

Soil. Sandy, &c. 121. 6% Culture. Twelve loads king dung ; twenty bullels in outfoot figure; hoe twice.

Product. 220 bulbels.

113

arlife.

ight loam, at 14s.

M.nure well, in rows en inches, one foot plant at: horse hoe.

.200 patreja"

ritb.

arious, at 8s. gd.

Manure with long rows eighteen inches, sot the plants; hand

120 bufhels.

and-mould, fand, Uc.

Two forts; in furrows an inches by twelve, re well; horfe hoe, and

The other the laxyung on grafs, and earth trenches.

In the first 300 bushels, is more than the other. I to Burton, about Holme, ight loam on limestone, Lazy-bed, dung the well; eighteen bufhels ven inches square.

180 bufhels.

ight form and fand, at

Plough for, dibble or ten inches square; bem.

150 partiels.

Rang.

ight loam, at 178.

Dig all the land nine deep; dibble in nine afunder; hand weed.

380 buftels.

wfkirk,

ight loam, at 1 cr.

Manure well, on both graft and arable; plough for them; fets nine inches square; hand weed.

Product, 150 buffele.

About Altringbam.

Soil. Sandy loam, at 200.

Culture. Dig for them; mannure well, dibble twen.y-two bufhels; hand weed and hand hoe.

Product. 700 bufhels.

At Knotsford.

Soil. Sandy, at 161.

Culture. Dig grass; twenty bushels, at one foot square, dibbled; hand hoe and weed.

Product. 500 bulkels.

Around Stone.

Soil. Sandy, at 16s.

Culture. Manure grafs well, and dig it in ; hand hoe.

Product. 450 buffels.

About Shenftone.

Soil. Sandy, at 150.

Culture. Dung grafs well, and dig in a dibble ten inches fquare; hand hoe well.

Product. 400 buffels.

Near Birmingham.

Soil. Sandy, at 17s 6d.

Culture. Dig up grafs land, and dibble in fets.

Product. 550 bushels.

At Bendfeworth.

Soil. Clay, and some light, at Culture. Manure well with lor + dung; dibble in rows, out foot iquare.

Product. 3 - unfhels.

Kenfington.

Soil. Sand and gravel, at 40s. Culture. Dung well, and plough in rows, one foot, plants fix inches: hoe twice and weed.

Product, 15% as they grow.

114 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

As there is a great variety in these products, I shall throw them into divisions according to the quantity, without any other rule; as it will then in general appear what soil and management are most adapted to them. First, all that produce sive hundred bushels and upwards; second such, as yield from two to five headred; and third, those that yield under two hundred.

As these tables are of a green length than our limits will admit, we shall only give the first of them.

Crops of 500 Bushels, &c.

Places.	Soil.	Sets.	Rows.	Culture. Proint
Mr. Turner,			3 feet by 1,	{ Horse and hand } 588
Ditto, {	Black loam, worth 40s.	-	18 inches,	Dug for, 1166
Altringbam,	Sandy loam, 20s.	22		Dig for them, manure, hand hoe, and weed,
Knotsford,	Sand, 16s.	20	ı foot sq.	Dig grass, flib- ble, hand hoe, and weed,
Birmingbam,	Sand 17s. 6d.			Dig grafs and 500 dibble in feu,
Averages,		21	_

It is very evident from this table that rent is no more a guide to product than the wind; nor is arv particular soil (except the fandy and light being generally the heft) a mark whereby to point out the scale of produce. distance of the rows, and the quantity of fer -as well as the minerial articles of manuring and cleaning, are none of them, sepaparely inken, at all decifive in fix-Thus much, ing the superiority. however, may be observed, that the more confiderable products are those that are in general very spiritedly cultivated; all in the first division, except one, are dug for, and likewise the best of those in the second; this seems as if digging for them was much superior to ploughing. The strong variations we otherwise observe muk certainly be attributed to fertility of foil, richness of manuring, or a general excellent management: A circumstance greatly encouraging to all who are willing to cultivate this most useful vegetable; for there is great reason to sappok, that a vigorous conduct in raising potatoes will more than balance every other advantage.

It should be observed, that these tvery where confidered as ent fallow crop, greatly ig the foil, and preparery respect for wheat in , or for any other grain foperior manner. It is evident from the precedthat their culture is unprofitable. la nume-" I was affured that they nitely more by potatoes The any other crop. hem are various, but at buthel, the average prounts to above 28% but low price; it is a great iny parts of this kingdom, tivating potatoes in large ow crop is more advanthe foil, nor could there er improvement in threethe counties of England, ducing potatoes into the their fields, as regularly, proper for them, as tury other vegetable.

10013

115

nmon objection to cultim in large quantities is if a market; but fuch a absolute piece of gothimost advantageous use e applied to, where they th price, most certainly them: but where the low, or the market overhis root should be apeding and fattening catch the profit will be veoth in the price paid for td in the great improvee farm, by raising large of manure; an object ht always to be foremost y farmer: the intellirived of Mr. Crowe, of cation of his crops at feeding all forts of cattle and poultry, is particularly valuable; it is well known in feveral places, that no food is better for rearing and fattening hogs, but I never before heard of feeding promiscuously all the flock in a farm-yard on them; but that gentleman's long experience proves it not only to be eligible, but extremely profitable.

If potatoes came in once every course of crops on light or rich soils, not very heavy, and were all applied to fatten numerous herds of swine, or to maintain oxen, cows, young cattle, &c. the improvement of the whole farm would be the certain consequence; for the fields in which they are cultivated are finely enriched by themselves, and their consequences in manuring would perform the same office to others.

From what I have remarked in the tour, I have reason to think digging a much superior method to ploughing, with the fets laid in the furrows. The latter way may be very proper in a very light rich. fand; but in fandy or gravelly loams the digging is superior; if I was to recommend a practice, it fhould be the following; which I think, from the preceding minutes, as well as my own experience, is excellent. Unite the ploughing and lazy-bed methods: first plough the land fine, in beds about five feet broad, then spread your dung; if the foil is very light, it should be well rotted and mixed together; but if the land is inclinable to stiffness, then long dang, old thatch, stubble, or any thing of that kind; upon the manure lay the potatoe flices promifeuoutly, about a foot afunder, cover them three inches deep, with Ιz enth earth dug out of the furrows, a trench in each like a water furrow, about eighteen inches wide. When the potatoes are about four or five inches high, weed them, dig another spit in the trenches, and cover the beds and plants two inches deeper: this will stop the growth of most weeds; but if any arise, draw them out, but never handhoe unless the surface binds, which on proper soils it will not do: Vast crops may be had in this method, and the beds left in excellent order for a crop of any thing else.

116

Of CABBAGES.

CINCE the publication of Mr. Baker's report, we have had no fresh intelligence concerning cabbages: there is not extant in print a fingle experiment upon the Great Scotch fort: it is with the utmost pleasure that I minuted in my journey all the intelligence I could gain concerning this vegetable. I was fortunate enough to meet with many gentlemen that had cultivated it for several years; fome of them from the curiofity of the object, had made accidental minutes of several circumstances of the culture, expences, produce, &c. these they favoured me with, and in other particulars gave me accounts from their own memory, and that of their servants; but as I had not any regular registers of experiments in a series, I threw the intelligence I received into as clear and methodical an order as I was able. So far did very well for each minute; but as the circumstances of culture, product, and value, have great variations, it is here absolutely necesfary to draw all these fugitive articles into one point of view compare the intelligence, a draw the averages of every ci stance, that the culture and of cabbages may be comp known. I shall make the in as few words as possible; 1 ticle begins with

Mr. Middlemore, at Granthan Batterfea, turne; Scotcb.

Soil. A red fand.

Time of fowing. Begins March. Once pricked and planted at Midfumi

Rows. Four feet asunder one foot to eighteen from plant to plant. per acre.

Culture. Watered in dr ther.

Duration. To April.

Product. Turnep cabbas or nineteen tons per Battersea 11lb. or for tons per acre; Scotch or fifty-four tons. Us fatting oxen theep.

Pricking ou Expences. transplanting, 1s. per fand.

Mr. Lyfter, at Bawtry. The

Soils. A very light fand. Kent, 111.

Time of sowing, &c. Jan. or beginning of Transplant the midd June.

Rows. Four feet afunder, two feet. 6240 plants.

Horse hoed 1 and hand hoed.

Duration. Begin to bu October; all must be de Christmas.

Twenty-seven Product.

F

feeding cows both dry and milch, rearing young cattle, and feeding sheep. Will not go near so far as turneps.

Expences. Six men plant an acre a day.

Ir. Wharton, at Doncaster. The Great Scotch.

Soil. A light fand.

Rows. Three feet, plants two.

Culture. Hand hoeing.

Duration. Late in spring, to turning into grass.

Product. Two acres completely fat three large beaft.

Tucker, at Rotherham.

Ir. Tucker, at Rotherham. The Great Scotch.

Soil. A light fandy loam, extremely rich.

Rent, 21.51.

Preparation. Winter fallow; and ten loads rich rotten dung. Time. Middle of August, and the foring. The first priched out the middle of October; transplant the last week in May; the others not pricked out at all. The winter plants the largest.

- Rows. Four feet; plants, two and two and a half. 5000 per acre.

·Culture. Watered if dry; two horse hoeings, and hand hoe-

Duration. End of March; some to beginning of April. Some want cutting before Christmas, the winter plants.

Product. One crop 30lb. another 10lb. average 20lb. or forty-four tens per acre.

Two acres and a half, under 10lb. kept (with some straw) twelve cows the principal part of the winter. If mike cows are kept constantly on them, without other sood, the butter is rank. Fat oxen; feed pigs.

Expences. A man plants two thousand in a day.

Profit. Very great. More than ten quarters of oats after them, and eight the second crop.

Mr. Ellerker's, at Risby. Large

Scotch.

Soil. Loam on a chalkstone.

Rent, 9s. 3d.

Preparation. A winter fallow; manures, ten loads of farmyard dung.

Time. Sows the end of February—pricks out once; plants the beginning of June.

Rows. Three feet; plants two. Culture. Water in dry seasons. Horse hoe once to thrice.

Duration. To the end of April. Product. Fats two beaft completely of thirty-fix stone each (1416.) Completely fats such, and finishes others of eighty stone: has sold oxen of 231. from cabbages.

Expences. A man plants an acre in three days.

Profit. Exceedingly great.

Marquis of Rockingbam's Kentisb farm. Great Scotch.

Soil. A rich, deep, black loam. Time. Sows the end of February; plants the middle of June.

Rows. Three feet, and plants three feet.

Culture. Water in dry weather.—From three to five horse hoeings, besides hand hoeing.

Product. Worth, for feeding any cattle, a half-penny each, the number of plants being 4840; that is, 101. 1s. pér acre. Fat oxen chiefly.

His Lordship's Hertfordsbire farm, 118

the same as the preceding, except only hand hooing.

Mr. Wilson, Ayton, Scotch Sort.

Time. Sows in September, plants in May.

Mr. Turner, at Kirkleatham. average of twelve experiments.

Clay, loam, and rich sandy loam.

Rent 15s.

Winter fallowed: Preparation. and some a whole year. Some crops limed.

Time. Sows the latter end of February, and in March for spring plants; and in August for winter ones. Transplants through the months of May and June.

Rows. Three to four feet, and plants two. Generally 5445 plants.

Culture. Horse hoed twice, and hand hoed as often. Never waters.

Duration. To Candlemas.

Product. In general from twenty tons to fifty-eight; average thirty-nine. Fats and feeds oxen, cows, young cattle and sheep infinitely better than any other food. The increase of one cow's milk from cabbages two quarts a day, but it tasted. The improvement of an ox of 80 stone, (1416.) fatting four months on cabbages, is on an average 51. 10s. and in proportion per ton (the hay he eats deducted) is 8 s. 6 d. the value of the Upon the whole, cabbages. go much farther than turneps, and prepare much better for spring corn.

An ox of eighty Quantity eat.

stone, 210/6. in twenty-for hours, besides 716. of hay.

Expences. After a summer fallow 31. 15s. 6d. a winter ditto 21.71.—Expence of watering is 2s. 11d. planting 4.64 hand werding 4s. 6d.

Anjou cabbages tried, but proved good for litt'e.

Mr. Crowe, at Kiplin. The average of eight years. Great Scotcb.

Soil. Clay.

Rent, 12s. 6d.

Winter fallows Preparation. and limes, a chaldron pr acre.

Sows in August for wis-Time. ter plants, pricks out at Michaelmas, and transplants in March: For spring plants of which he has but few) fows in February, transplants the end of May, or beginning of June.

Rows. Four feet, and plants two Culture. Horse and hand how, as requisite; never waters.

Duration. Until Mar-day. Product. In 1762, they weighed per cabbage 12/6. or, pr 29 MI. acre.

- 14*lb*. 1763, 34

1 2 lb. 1704,

- 20*lb*. 1765,

— 18/6. 1766,

1767, - 15/b. 1768, — 1116. — 27

Average 35 tons.

Used for all forts of cattle, and with universal secons Expences. At 10s. rent, the Seed, 64 total 21. 4 s. 6d.

Pricking out and transplant Hand hoeing, 5s. each.

ing, 41.

: The Leafes. ge of hvc years. dy, gravel. Winter fallow, n, nore with feven loads ı dang. wer the beginning of and transplants in our feet afunder, and Horse hoes sour times, 1 hoes and weeds. Until the end of he cabbages weighed average 7/6. or, per - 17 tons.

- 8/6. -- 19 — 8/6. — 19

-- 8/6. -- 19 - 6lb. - 15

age 18 tons. for fleers and fleep, cipally for cows, on of the butter beimparable, and given quantities, not more t of fummer; butter fortaight, but the if have no decayed near Craik-bill, at Scotch fort. .vel.

of four years 174

for oxen, cows, and rith the utmost fuc-Two cows in Januse that had newly and the other to Lady-day, produced k 17/6. 10 ex. of butMr. Dalton, at Slening ford. Soil. Light loam on a limeftone, very shallow.

Rent, 8s.

Preparation, Winter fallow, and a dunging.

Time. Scotch, transplanted the beginning of June. Turnep cabbage fown in fpring, transplanted in May.

Rows. Four feet by twenty-two inches.

Culture. Horse and hand hoe-

ing.

Product. Seeteb, 416. and 116. average 24, or 6 tons. Tornep 5/6. 12 tons. The first given to cows, and made the butter absolutely flink, but attributed it to the decayedleaves not being taken off. The latter were given to sheep the middle of April, who were very fond of them.

Mr. Scroop, at Danby. The Scotch. Soil. Clay, loam, and rich black land,

Rent, 41. 6d, to 251. average

144. 94.

Winter fallow, Preparation. and upon all but the richest foils, manures with composts or lime.

Time. Sows early in the spring, and transplants the end of May or beginning of June.

Rowr. Four feet, and two feet from plant to plant,

Culture, Never waters, Two horse and two hand heeings.

Duration. Till the end of April or beginning of May.

Product. Average value of feven years, at gr. 9d. per ton, 91. 164.

Tons. 1763. 34 1766, 14

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770. t 20

1766, 40 Ditto, -- 23 Ditto, -25 1707, - 40 Ditto, -25 Ditto, -53 1768, 35 Dit'o, -50 Ditto, -30 Average 37 tons.

Oxen of 100 Rone, that have had the summer's grass, are finished and without delay, never going bock in flesh, (the case often imes with turnep) and improving faster than on any other food. kinds of young cattle maintained through win er in tull health and growth to great profit. Cows fed with them to more advantage fix to one than upon any other food; the milk being in great quantity, perfectly sweet, and the butter excellent, but the pecaution must be observed of picking off the decayed leaves. Fat sheep are carried forward in great perfection, better infinitely than on turneps. Lambs of ewes fed on them have always proved uncommonly fine and strong. Swine feed very freely on them, and are kept in very good coudition without other food.

Quantity car. An ox of an 100 stone (141b.) in twenty-four hours are $168/\dot{v}$, and $7/\dot{b}$, of hay.

Expences. Average of seven years, 21. 16s. 6d.

Profit. Ditto, 61. 16s. 9d. part at 5s. 9d. per ton.

The turnep cabbage tried one year, the fame culture as Scotch, weight 8/4. Sheep ate them freely, but preferre Scotch.

Mr. Scroope, at Dalton.

Soil. Some light loam on stone, and black moory

Culture. The management every respect, the same

Danby.

Product. The weight of crop not minated, but neral it was from 15 tons per acre: average:

Earl of Darlington, at Raby. Soil. Strong gravel and Rent, 16s.

Preparation. Some on | and burning; others o winter fallow.

Time. Plants from the t May to the end of June. R ws. Three feet, planit Culture. Harfe hoed t hand ditto once.

Product. 1766 — 1416.] per cabnige, 1767 - ditto

1768 — 1c/b.

Average 40 tons. Used constantly for milche (the decayed leaves all i off) the butter partici excillent, and none better.

Mr. Dixon, at Belford. Soil. Clavey loam.

Rent, 151. 6d.

Preparation. Winter fa and a dunging.

Time. Sows in August; 1 plants from middle of A to beginning of April.

Rows. Three feet, plants Culture. Horse and hand Product. The weight of a crops not minuted, but that is, is 15/6. per cab or per acre 48 tons.

121

for milch cows; the very plentiful, and ex-; a loss of cabbages, , of the winter's buthus brought all the inoncerning cabbages in-, I must, in the next it into such averages are of the subject ret place the general probe discovered, and realue in money. The lof doing this will be an average value per raine per ton at Kirkleany fatting oxen, 8s. 6d.

'r. Serespe, — 51. 9d.
erage, 7s. 1½d.
t be our guide for vacrops of Scatch cabweight only is speciare as follow:

			Tous.
idlem	me	-	4
er	-	•	27
ker	-	•	44
Her	-	-	39
ans	•	-	35
le	+	•	184	'
нере	#		37
_	e# -	•	24
	ington	-	40
	•	-	48
36 (ons,	whic	ch at	75.
13/	161. 6	d. j	ter z	¢r e.
on to	o this	546	rage	we ra tha	LE W	ete.	10a
y we	ight.		_	_
		- 4	~ .	- 3

arquis of to 1 0

Medium of the crops { . . . d. Medium of the crops } 17 15 2 The general average of which three valuations is 131. 101. 10d. per acre.

It is here proper to remark, that this price must undoubtedly be under the real mark; it is partly formed by a valuation of cabbages in fattening boalts at 7s. 14d. per ton; but those who have been converfant in feeding cattle must be fentible, that a value taken from one application only may be under the mark: that it is fo muft ftrike every one who confiders, that turneps, and other articles of food, will fat an ox, though not fo well as cabbages; but turneps will not feed theep through the months of March and April; and neither turneps nor hay will keep cows in plentiful as well as fweet milk all the winter; thefe two uses are peculiar to cabbages, and fuch an application of them must confequently make a greater return than a ule in which other species of food rival them.

Those who have been used to the enormous expense of wintering cattle on hay, will easily believe that 7t. a ton for cabbages can by no means be an adequate price: the very proposition on comparison with hay is striking. And as to the turneps, the comparison is yet clearer. It before appeared, that the average value of turneps in the north of England, that is, the same country the cabbages are all cultivated in, is 3l. 1s. 6d. per acre: now from the attentive manner in which I viewed as well as weighed

I be a great injustice to include Mr. Dalton's; one pound average ently, that the foil, a shallow surface on a functione, is absolutely those at Kiplin, that fine and rich turnep soil, I was well convinced the average weight was not above five tons, which is better than 121. per ton; now the superiority of cabbages to turneps is absolutely fixed by the preceding intelligence; those cultivators who think the contrary, bearing no proportion to their antagonists; consequently cabbages are of much more value than 12s. per ton, or probably double the amount I have calculated them at: which circumstance must certainly convince every one, that cabbages are, in these calculations, much undervalued: and for the use of such as may be of this opinion, I shall add the value of the average crop at more estimation.

122 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

L. s. d. Thirty-fix tons at 10s. 18 0 0 at 11s. 19 16 0 at 12s. 21 12 0 at 13s. 23 8 0 at 14s. 25 4 0

Had I been fortunate enough to have gained other clues to discover the value of cabbages, particularly in making butter for tale in winter, and spring feeding sheep and lambs, I have no doubt but the average sum would have been very high in this scale, if not exceeded the utmost of it. But for want of other sacts to calculate upon, I must make use of such as I possess.

In the next place I must compare the product with the rent of the land.

Mr. Lifter	115.	27 tons
Mr. Tocker	455.	44
Mr. Turner	155.	32
Mr. Crowe	1 2s. 6d.	35

Ditto 4. † Earl of Darlington 10, Mr. Dixon 151.60 Average rent 16s. 8d At and under 15% 115. 5. rent average Ditto about 151. 251. Q It appears from hence, the bages depend very much on planted in a rich foil; and : precisely the opinion of m the preceding cultivators; a as perfectly confittent with n for the plant is a most vig

one, roots very frong and and consequently is very well culated for improving propo ably to the fertility of the for 141.94

Mr. Scroope

Forty-four tons at 75. 14d. is Thirty-two at ditto 11 Superiority of the former

4

This comparison thews the profit of applying the helf lad a farm to the culture of cabb and it proves at the tame tin advantage of manuting and formers. I apply ere the few more beneficial was of ing manute than to this culture that to carry this compariso farther, I shall next state the and product.

On clays as	ai stroi	eg loa	e and
Mr. Tarner	•	•	3
Mr. Crowe	_	-	3
Mr. Scrco; e	-	•	3
Earl of Darlis	ngton		4
Mr. Dixon	•	•	4
Averag	c 39 t	ons.	·
On ri. h de	ep ligh	h ka	Ħ.
Mr. Tucker	•	•	4

⁺ Never yielded any thing, but I call it 4s.

123

In other inferior foils. Liddlemore 54 tons gfer 27 melt 18 croop, at Dalton Average 30 tons. nteriority of the last to the ers thew how much the s affect a rich foil; but at time the product on infei proves clearly, that this le vegetable thrives to valt all forts.

Of CARROTS.

described the second of the se

Juke of Bedford finds them reat use for winter feeding e flocks of cattle and deer.

. A fand.

A rich deep fine fand, at

re. Sow at Lady-day on fpit digging; hoe very fully three times; leave n from eight to ten inches ider.

ft. Two hundred bushels iere, at 2s.

ces. Digging, 11. Seed, Sowing, 6d. Raking, 4s. 1ng, 11. 5s. Digging up, pa their gardeners also culthe same manner, but the er equal to that of carrots as fixty bushels.

r, at Bewery.

A very light fand.

v. No hoeing, but handded.

Produce. They are found to be of incomparable use in feeding hogs.

Duke of Norfolk, at Workfop.

Soil. A light fand.

Culture. Hoes and weeds theroughly.

Product. They answer incom-

Mr. Hewett, at Bilbam.

Soil. A fine light bazel mould,

a foot deep.

Culture. Sowed during four years in drills one foot afunder, the middle of April; four pound and a half of feed per acre; horfe-hoed thrice, and hand-weeded once. Left at the distance of fix inches in the rows.

Product. Six hundred and forty bushels per acre, 321. at 15. per bufbel. Beafts fatted on them and turneps, which evidently preferred the carrots fo much, that it was foon difficult to make them eat the former at all. Six horses kept on them through the winter with oats; they performed their work as usual, and looked equally well. A lean hog was fatted on carrots in ten days time, eat nothing clies and the fat very fine, white, and firm, nor did it boil away in the dreffing; he ate fourteen stone. Hogs in general feed on them with great cagerneis.

Mr. Turner, at Kirkleatham.

Soil. A black rich fand, and a white poor one.

Culture. Six acres were fown in 1767, fummer fallowed and fown broadsteast the beginning of April, hand-weeded four times, and also hand-hoed;

bat

but the crop left within three or four inches of each other

Product. The fize in the black fand from fix to eight inches long, but less than a man's wrift. In the white five inches long, and less than the other. Fed milch cows and hogs, the first very fond of them, and their milk received no ill tafte from them. Several hogs of fix stone (14/6.) were fatted on them. No pork could be They fatted quick and exceedingly well. The carrots given raw.

Expence. Weeding, hocing, and taking up, 21. 10s. per acre.

Mr. Scroop, at Danby.

Soil. The rich fine black loam. Culture. Drilled in lingle rows four feet alunder; horse-hoed thrice, but left thick in the rows_

Very fine; eighteen Produce. inches long, and eleven in circumference. Given to hoge, who fatted fo well upon them, that a few peafe fir ished them, and the fat was very fine and very firm.

Mr. Wilkie, of Hetton.

Soil. A light loam.

Culture. Sows the end of March; hoes them t icr, to the diftance of five inches.

Product. Grow to the fize of a man's writt, and twelve inches long. All catt'e are very fond of them, particularly hoge.

These minutes clearly prove the great importance of the culture.

The products, drawn into our view, are as follow: L. s. d. Sandy gardeners, at 21. } 20 0 0 per bushal, 200 Mr. Hewett, 640 buthels, } 32 0 0 Ditto, at 2s.

I think it fair to add the last valuation, as it is the actual one of the first inserted; nor do I think an extravagant price: the average is 38%, 13s. Rejecting the last price it is 26%.

In the use of them several very important facts appear in the preceding intelligence. Mr. Lifter's, Mr. Turner's, Mr. Hewett's, Mr. Scroop's, and Mr. Wilkie's experiments all prove, that carrots raw are of incomparable use in both feeding and fattening hogs; the particular instances of fattening them quick and well, are extremely valuable. It also appears from Mr. Turner's trials, that they are very fine food for milch cow!, giving the butter no bad take. Mr. Hewett's intelligence thews, that exen fat to much advantage on them, and that they completely supply the place of oats to horses.

Of Lucerne.

Shall review the experimental minuted on feveral other segrtables belides cabbages, that are not commonly cultivated. Of these claims the fift aiknlucerne

Mr. Bramsione, at Wochurn.

Soil. Very loole, black, nich fand.

Culture. Broad caft; drilled at eighteen inches, and trasfplanted at two feet.

The broad cast vields most at firtt; but it is apprehended, that the drilled will exceed it, and that the transplanted will latt longer tras cither.

Mr. Middlemore, at Grantbam. Soil. A red sand.

C : '-

125

Colture. A rood transplanted in rows, two feet fix inches, in March 1767, I found it over-run with weeds. Two acres, three roods, broad caft, feven years old. Cleaned by harrowing.

Product. The transplanted cut once in 1767, and twice or thrice in 1768. The broad caft always out three times a year. Often made into hay, a load so sere at each cutting. An acre lasts three horses at foiling the fummer through; this, at fix months the fummer, and 21. 6d. a week per horse, amounts to gl. 151. per acre. All forts of cattle fed with it, but some affect it fo much as horfes.

Mr. Lyfter, at Bawiry. Soil. A light fand.

Culture. Drilled five years ago in rows two feet afunder.

Product. Used for foiling horses, but inferior to clover or tural pastures.

Mt. Turner, 2t Kirkleatham.

Soil. A rich loam.

Culture. Haif an acre drilled in 1765, in equally diffant sows ten inches afunder. Kept clean from weeds by hand-hoeing. Product. In 1766 cut five times, in 1767 five, in 1768 four. Maintains at the rate of four cows per acre through the fommer, which, at fix months, and 21, per week per cow, is 101. 8s. per acre.

Mr. Dalton, at Sleningford.

Soil. Shallow loam on lime-Hone rock. Rent at 81.

Colture. Drilled in 1765, equally diffant rows, fix inches afunder.

Cut three times in Product. 1765, the same in 1766 and 1767. Not comparable to fainfoine, nor equal to clo-YCL.

Mr. Scroop, at Danby.

Soil. A cold wet gravel, and a rich black loam, at 25s.

Culture. Drilled half an acre in 1761, the first foil; but the plants all died the fecond. year. In 1766 drilled feven rows, containing one rood eleven poles, equally diffant four feet on the second foil. Twice horfe and twice hand hoed cach year.

Cat twice the first Product. The first maintained усаг. four coach horses and five calves fix weeks; the fecond. kept feven horfes a month. In 1767 it was cut three times. and maintained feven horfes from the middle of May to the end of September. 1768, fix horfes the fame It faved 121, 10d. a week in hay for these six horf-s; the proportion for the feven, laft year, is, therefore, 14s. 11d. and the average 13/. 10 4.

The product, therefore, of thefe two years is this:

Twenty weeks 313/. 171. 6d. This ger acre is 43% 8s. 11d. This is a prodigious product, and I think much higher than the culture was ever before carried to.

Mr. Penny, at Bendfworth. Soil. Sai Je loum, at 212.

Culture. Two scres dealled in 1761, in equal dillant rows, twelve inches afunder. Hand

126 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

hoed well for three our four years, and afterwards breakt ploughed twice a year.

Product. In soi....g horses, 161.

12s. per acre.

Expences. Hand hoeing, 40s. per acre. Breast ploughing, 5s.

From these several minutes we must, in the next place, draw an average of the whole. The product is the principal point.

1. s. d.

Mr. Middlemore, per acre, 9 15 0
Mr. Turner, - - - 10 8 0
Mr. Scroop, - - - 43 8 11
Mr. Penny, - - - 16 12 0
Average 201.

This is a vast product, and certainly proves, in a very clear manner, the surprizing excellencies of this vegetable.

The fail it requires to be in perfection appears clearly in the above table, for that of the latter three is very rich and deep; and Mr. Seroep's, which yields so much the superior product, one of the blackest, richest, moist, crumbling Joams I ever met with——the true putre solum. The great importance of an extreme rich foil to the cultage of luceine is, therefore, extremely evident; and it is equally plain that no use can pay better, of so well, as applying it to lu-Confidering the smallness of the expences, Mr. Scroop's crop far exceeds the profit of most hopgardens.

In respect to manner of sowing, the broad cast is the least crop: Mr. Scroop's four feet rows the greatest, Mr. Penny's and Mr. Tur-wer's much the same, wix. one foot and ten inches. But the superiority of Mr. Scroop's soil prevents our concluding absolutely that I tance is the most beneficial.

[Our ingenious and vedultrious author has, in a work, given a regular detail own experiments upon this in almost every degree and a of cultivation; together with curate estimates of the exthe produce, and the prospective extract from it, which will the great benefits that ma from a proper culture of luc

The effects of the rich man of former years, here a clearly enough. The proamazingly great; and the no less considerable. I k no crop from which such gr vantage is reaped, that requ little trouble; for the luceri not be ranked with meado pastures, fed with cattle, : small degree of attention re to them, yet being a per CIOP, it spares the culvivat rand of various trouble dem by annual ones. And as the ture bestowed on this noble is extremely fimilar every c and every year, it does not a that anxious attention which be given to all fowings, t annual crops. Any gentleman better conduct the culture acres of lucerne, and with in

This produce maintained rate of four horses 200 days a fifth 172 days. This is a g produce than I should have ceived possible from one as land. Gentlemen who seed coach-horses will not find sproduce in time of keeping

ly less probability of being ch

127

my horses are the small Sufnes, about 14% hands high : eir profit will be the same, as noth section a higher price sek.

this experiment I have ted the cutting made into a the proportion of price as bers, having no rule to value y by; but I should observe, acerne feems much better ed to feeding cattle with, green, than to making into for it has not the quality of A graft, of yielding good orwithitanding fome the wers 15 common hay is often very that has received no dight ty of rain, providing it was In a judicious manner: in fpect lucerns refembles clohich is much more damaged in in making; or tares, in very fine weather makes eft of hay for hard working , but with a small quantity t becomes worfe than firaw. would not be understood to that lucerne is fo totally I with a little rain: I know matrary by experience; but the product of this feason, screase from 1766 is very which shews what vigour ants enjoyed from the pre; manuring. I complained same time, it certainly will ms the wet weather near to natural grafts. This is no bjection to it; for the profit in feeding horfes, is to ex-y great, that it would be ex-ance to expect any thing fur-

last year of the smallness of the profit owing to the expense of manuring, but the crops of this have amply repaid it. Reason must tell one, that a grass which is five times mown in full growth, in one season, must pay excellently for manure; and that it is very difficult to lay on too much.

The average profit upon the four first years, when the preparation is a fallow, and when two rich manurings are given, we find is but trifling: this evidently flews that lucerne should never be caltivated under the expectation of immediate payment; and that being a perennial crop, an account of the three or four first years, is the most disadvantageous light in , which it can be viewed. Woold to heaven I had it in my power to lay before the reader a register of twenty years! I feel the amazing profit which would then appear from lucerne,

Those who would form a true idea of the nature of this plant, should consider the first years as preparation. In fallowing land for any crop, the farmer does not expect that each p'oughing should repay the expence, but looks forward two years for a reimburfement: in the case of this grafs, the first years of it, when much is fpent on it and little received, it should be the same; and the expectation of profit removed, till it is of a certain age, and well fixed in fertility and cleanness. In this way of confidering the crop, the following divition is the properest idea of the cafe.

PREPARATION.

		Expences.			Profit.					Loss.
1764, 1765, 1766,	 _	£. 7 2 8	s. 0 19	d. 4 11 5	1.1	£. 0 3 2	s. 0 5 4	2. 0 1	-	£. 5 0	s . 7 0 0	400
		18	11	8		5 5	10 7	o 4		5	7	4
						0	2	8

CROP.

1767, — - 2 18 10 10 18 1

The year 1766, it is true, produces a vast quantity; but as it is manured very richly, the expences eat out the profit, and should confequently be considered as prepatory to the following years. The product of the three sirst years we find just pays the expence. After that year the annual profit would, beyond all doubt, continue very considerable. That of 1767 is a noble beginning, and an earnest of great stuture profit.

But here it should farther be remembered, that lucerne is not in persection the sourth year.—I have already shewn that there is at least a great probability of the fisch year being superior to the sourth: this is a circumstance that gives us reason to suppose the regular permanent profit would not be inferior to this sourth year.

A profit of 101. per acre gained from a perennial vegetable, I will venture to affert exceeds any thing in husbandry, for gentlemen. Hops, madder, liquorice, potatoes, and some other crops, certainly exceed it, on some soils, in the amount of profit; but some of them are annuals, and others last not above three years. Hops are, in particular, the most troublesome calture that is known in the world, fugar alone excepted. Now grops that last but a year generally require to be shifted from one seld to another; if a man would have annually fifty acres of potatoes, he must farm, according to common management, 200 acres of land; and those which are renewed at the end of two or three years, are under the same predicament, etcording to sime writers; belides the cultivator having a perpetual rosad of all that minute trouble which attends the renovation of fach crops.

But with lucerne the case is very different; after it is once sowed it lasts many years; much longer, from the best accounts, than any modern experiments resolve. The attention it requires is very regular, and the operations to be performed on it remarkably smiler;

catting

129

ig as often as requilite, one boeing after each cutting, t hand hoeing when any weeds ur. No buying of feed, fowploughing, harvelling, felling n, &c. &c. which render agrize so troublesome to gentle-

The product is open to no Ities; none of the misfortunes hich corn is liable; nor any ofe evils that so regularly athay-making; but is all conto the feeding of cattle, a ess of the easiest kind.

it be objected that the preg experiments prove no more the use of lucerne to horses, hat confequently a gentleman adertook to cultivate it could d his plantation no further the guantity requilite for his . In answer to this I should e, that any food which is done for horses is also good oft other forts of cattle. It to suppose that a food which at a horfe will not agree with king ox-or fat a heifer-or ows or theep, &c. &c. Rea-(were experiment wanting) be fufficient to make known treths. Let any gentleman, ore, cultivate lucerne to an : it is evident enough that a never want a market for its ce, as long as he has money / Cattle with.

w can any gentleman wish better employment of his and money than to expend ee years (according to this ment) 181, per acre in prefor lucerne, the whole of expence to be repaid him i that time, with an after profit of 10 L per acre? Such te elegant hulbandry is an P-XIII amulement; and in respect of profit, what more defirable than to enjoy 1000 L a year from 100 acres of land! To speak of 10,000 % a year from 1000 acres would found like a great exaggeration; but yet it is a mere matter of multiplication, indubitably possible, and even

Of SAINFOINE.

His grafs is a common crop in many counties of this kingdom, but as feveral of the articles of intelligence concerning it are experimental, I shall treat of it here as I have done with the preceding graffer.

Mr. Hequett, at Bilbam.

Soil. Fine hazel mould on limeftone.

Culture. Sow it with half a crop of barley after a fallow, or turneps, four bushels of foed per acre. Lafts twelve or fourteen years, Product. After the first year always mow the first growth. for hay, 50 cwt. per acre, at 30s. a ton.

Six George Strickland, at Boynton. Soil. Light wold land, at Product. Improves the land to #25. 6d. per acre.

Sir Digby Legard, at Ganton. Soil. Light thin wold land, 2t 1s.

Culture, Drilled one foot afunder,

Product. A ton an acre of hay: improved to be well worth 10*s. per* acre.

Mr. Dalton, at Sleaing ford. Soil. Thin loam on a lime-Rone, at 8 ., K Culture.

Culture. In 1764 fowed twelve acres after turnep, alone—and carefully weeded.

Product. Mows it once every year; it produces as much hay per acre as any three of natural grass in the neighbourhood.

About Benfington.

Soil. Light chalk.

Culture. Sow a fack full of feed per acre, lasts fifteen years.

Product. Mown once every year: 55 cwt. of hay per acre, the second crop fed off with lambs.

These trials all prove the great excellency of this grass. The great improvement made by it on the poor wold lands by Sir George Strickland, and Sir Digby Legard, is a striking instance; Mr. Dalton's is also worthy of much notice. The products in weight are.

Mr. Hewett, - 2 10
Sir Digby Legard, - 1 0
About Bensington, - 2 15
Average, 2 tons, 1 crut.

From this state of the Sainfoine culture, I cannot help remarking, how much the vast tracts of poor light dry soils in this kingdom call for so cheap and great an improvement: there are many very extensive waltes in the north of England admirably adapted to this culture, and yet how few have the spirit to set about even this cheap and caly improvement! The poor fils on which this grafs is the greatest improvement, are not cultivating in any other manner: the common wold husbandry is a proof of this. yielding food for sheep is not a comparable produce to rich crops of excellent hay, and after-feely but nothing speaks this clearer than their letting only from 1.. to 4.. an acre, and being raised by sainsoine to 10.. and 25..

On the Number of Draught Caule nsed in Tillage; from the same.

THIS view of the flate of tillage throughout the cousties I travelled, throws the whole matter into a very clear light: the refult is certainly furprizing. I never had any conception that a just proportion would be found between the nature of the foil, and the strength employed to till it; but that all common sense world be put so totally to the blash, was what I had little notion of. equality of the draughts, on fuch different soils, is strange: the clay land takes no greater force than the loam; and the fand, within a seventh part as much as either of This shews clearly, that custom alone has been the guide of the farmers in the pumber of draught cattle they use; a piece of absurdity, which must be attended with wretched effects on their profit; and fatal ones to the good of the kingdom at large.

Had the average draught of all soils been no greater than requisite, the evil would not have been so great; but three and a half is more cattle than necessary for any soil in England, provided the husbandry is good. If fallows are broke up at the season they universally ought, two horses, or two sout oxen, are sufficient for the strongest of all soils, alone excepting such as are on very steep hills; and even in that case the course of ploughing ever to be across the slope, reduces the labour nearly to f m level. Thus the grand e is mear double the requirength. That of clay is no as the general average; therefore, must be the excess farmer can urge the effect of xperience to this remark; tancing the custom of his ours, and the prefeription , is of no avail; fince nocan be 'clearer than that and that experience are the of chance; not the refult of of knowledge or experi-No demonstration in maics can be clearer than the Mertion, that clay requires er strength to work it than which firength may as well he quantity performed in a in the number of cattle, maxim every farmer will >; but they have no notion refult of a general ave-

Onkyl

re find a yet greater equality juantity ploughed, than in inber of cattle; nothing, T, is more certain, than the teconomy of tillage being matter of chance. One view a light fandy country ng with more than as many u would till the flrongest without their performing quantity; one cannot think a course of business with. ignation: thousands of faure deprived of half their ce; and the kingdom feeds of horses instead of indusibjects. It is an object of importance, and calls for a, from those who have it power to remedy fo great an evil. The legislature certainly might interfere in some way which feemed most consistent with the delicacy of so free a people: but if nothing of that fort should be thought advicable; or rather, if, among numerous other matters, of equal import, overlooked of despiled, to save time for-I cannot but recommend it to all landlords, to endeavour to remedy, on their own effates, such mischievous cuftoms; there can be no doubt of its being in their power; all that is wanting is refolution: the moment a bufiness is firmly refolved by a man who has money in his pecket, it is half executed: Prizes, rewards, bonnties, &c. muk be given, not only to farmers, but to ploughmen; both farmers and fervants flould be procured, that have been used to good cuftoms, at any expence. It is well worth a landlord's thought; for he cannot introduce a cheap, and at the fame time good method of culture, into a country, fo as to make it common, without virtually raising his rents; besides the fati-faction. which, I am confident, numbers must feel at being ferviceable to their country.

In several of the richest and best cultivated parts of Esex, particularly between Braintree and Hocker-ill, by Samford and Thanted, the sermers do not keep above four or five horses per hundred acres of arable, which consequently perform all the work of the grass besides. Ten to a farm of two hundred arable, and one hundred grass, are reckoned a very complete allowance; and yet it is observable that the soil is a strong clay: strong enough to yield great crops of beans; and that many of the farms have much arable on the fides of hills, which makes the work pretty Rout; yet they plough their land very well, and never use more than two in a plough, although they do not break up their stubbles till after barley sowing. Through the best cultivated parts of Suffolk it is the fame: but as to nine horses to every hundred acres, it is a mon-Arous allowance: confidering that it includes light loams and fands, it is at least five too many; so that more than double all the horses employed through this tract of country are kept to no purpose. When good husbandry and extraordinary tillage are the consequence of numerous teams, the objection is answered; but we very well know that is not the case, by clay farmers keeping no more than fand ones; and by the depth of stirring being the same in all. It is custom, not good husbandry, that occasions any variations at all. To reflect, for one moment, that half the horses employed in husbandry, through so confiderable a part of the kingdom, are useless, is a very melancholy confideration; that ukless horses are pernicious to the public good, is a fact indisputable; in no light whatever are they beneficial; they have nothing to do with the exportation of horses, suppofing it a trade ever so beneficial; for it is consuming the commodity one's-self, which, in a commercial view, ought to be converted into money. It prevents the culture of a vast quantity of exportable corn. It takes great tracts of grals from fattening beafts, which yield plenty of butchers meat, and cosfequently enables us to export the more corn, but gives no profit in No article of useful confumption is promoted by fuch extra horses; no induffrious hands employed by them; in short, in every light the object can be viewed, the keeping such numbers of useless horses is a most persicious conduct to agriculture, to the landlord, and to the public.

K a

[133]

iscellaneous Essays.

be Court of Petersburg, wof the Empress Anne; at Manstein's Memoirs

mprefs, though taken ith so expensive and ar, had, however, a uclude the marriage en projected for many en her neice, Princess kleaburgh, and Prince ick of Brunswick, who t the court ever fince quess of Botts, who d to count Oftein, in sinister of the court ook the character of and, in a public autoded, in the name or, the Princess Anne for Prince Anthony ew of the Empress of fals were folemnized a r this audience, and of July (1739) they ed with all possible ages and dreffes that ar at this ceremony, paring for a twelveishop of Novogorod the nuptial blessing, a of the Holy Virgin of Cafan, and made, on this oceafion, a fermon much admired, that was printed.

When the Empress Elizabeth afcended the throne, it was suppressed, there being several strokes in it that were not relished.

On the day of that ceremony, no one imagined that the union of this Prince and Prince's would one day produce their greatest missortune, as well as that of many persons of distinction. The Prince's Anne was then looked on as the presumptive heire's of the crown; I am persuaded too, that she could not have failed of it, if the duke of Courland had not opposed it.

These nuptials, however, furnish me the hint of giving an idea of the magnificence of the court, and of the Empress's usual manner of living.

The duke of Courland was a great lover of pomp and and splendid show; this was enough to inspire the Empress with a desire to have her court the most brilliant of all Europe. Considerable sums were sacrificed to this intention of the Empress, which was not for all that so soon subsided. The richest coat would be sometimes worn together with the vilest uncombed wig; or you might see a beautiful piece of staff spoiled by K 3 some botcher of a taylor; or if there was nothing amis in the dress, the equipage would be defi-A man richly dreffed would come to court in a mijerable coach, drawn by the wretchedest hacks. The same want of taste reigned in the furniture and neatness of their houses. On one tide, you might see gold and filver plate in heaps, on the other, a shocking dirtiness.

The dress of the ladies corresponded with that of the men; for one well-dressed woman, you might see ten frightfully disfigured; yet is the fair fex in Russia generally handiome; that is to fay, they have good faces enough, but very few have fine shapes.

This incongruity of Ruffian finery and show was almost universal; there were few houses, indeed, especially in the first years of the reform, where every thing was of a piece. Little by little others imitated the example of those who had taffe. But, not even the court, nor Biron, succeeded at the first in getting every thing into that order and arrangement which are feen elsewhere. This was the work of years. Yet must it be owned, that at length every thing grew to be well regulated, except that the magnificence ran into excess, and cost the court immense sums. is incredible how much money went out of the empire upon this account. A courtier that did not lay out above two or three thousand rubles, or from four to fix hundred pounds, a year in his dress, made no great figure. One might very well apply here the faying of a Saxon officer to the late king of Poland, advising him to widen the gates of the town to let in the whole villages that the gentlemen carried on their backs. In Russ. all those who had the bosour to ferve the court, hurt their fortunes by over-dreffing, the falaries not being sufficient to afford the making such a figure. It was enough for a dealer in the commodities of luxury and fashion to remain two or three years at Petersburg, to gain a competency for the rea of his life, even though he hould have begun the world there with goods upon credit.

The Empress's usual manner of life was very regular. She was always up before eight in the morning. At nine, the began to dispatch affairs with her secretary and ministers. At noon, the direct in her chamber with the Biron family. It was only in the great folemnities that she eat in public. When that happened, the was placed in a throne, under a canopy, with the two Princesses, Elizabeth, fince Empress, and Anne of Mecklenburgh. On this occasion, the high-chancellor waited at table, Here was commonly also a grest table in the same hall, for the ark noblemen and ladies of the empire, for the clergy and foreign ministers. But in the last years of the Empress's life, she did not any longer eat in public, nor were the foreign ministers treated at the court. In the greatest sestivals, count Ofeman invited them to dinner with

In summer, the Empress took a good deal of exercise in walking; and in winter, with playing at billiards. She made light supper, and went early to bed, betwees eleven and twelve.

The court used to pass the best part of the fine season at a summer-houle.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.

heilt at about feven leagues distance from Petersburgh, called Peterboss. It is one of the most pleasant fituations that can be imagined. It funds on the sea-fide; whence you may, on the lest fide, see Cronstalt, and the whole steet; on the right, there is a prospect of Petersburgh, and over against it are the coasts of Finland. There is a spacious garden to it, and magnificent jut-d'aguer, but the house is no great matter; the apartments are extremely small and low.

The rest of the summer, the Empress resided at her summer-palace at Petersburgh, which is far from heing a good building, on the hanks of the Neva: the garden to it is very large, and well enough kept is order.

The Prince's Anne canfed a new house to be set about, the old one falling almost to ruins, but had not time to finish it. It was referved for the Empress Elizabeth to see the last hand put to it.

There was deep play at court: many made their fortune by it in Raffia, and many others were mined. I have myfelf often feen to far as twenty thousand rubles lok in one fitting at quiess or at jbereșb.

The Empress did not much love play; if the did play, it was only to lose. She then held the bank; and none were allowed to punt but those to whom she called. The person that won was immediately paid; but as they played with tounters, she never received the money of those who lost.

She was fond of public entertainments and mulic; and fent for, from Italy, all that was necessary for that purpose. Comedies, aded both in Italian and in German, pleased her extremely. In 1736, the first opera was played at Petersburg, and very well executed, though less liked than comedy, and the Italian interludes.

In the time of Peter I. and in the following reigns, drinking had been much practifed at court ; it was not fo in the time of Anne. the could not bear to fee any one drunk. There was nobody but prince Kourakin that had free permiffion to drink as much as he pleased. But that the habit of it might not be entirely loft, the 29th of January, (Old Style) being the day of the Empress's accession to the throne, was confectated to Then every one was Bacchus. obliged to tols off a great bumper of Hungary-wine, with one knee on the ground, in the presence of her Majesty. This reminds me of another fingular enough ceremony. On the eve of the great fellivals, the courtiers, and officers of the guards, had the bonour of paying their compliments to her Majetty, and of kiffing her hand: her Majefly at the fame time prefented each a glass of wine on a faiver.

Towards the end of the year 1739, the Empre's gave a comic entertainment. Prince Gallitzin was the occasion of it. Though above forty years of age, and even having a fon ferving in the army, in the rank of lieutenant, he was made at once page and buffoon of the court, by way of punishment for his having changed his religion. His first wife being dead, the Empre's told him he ought to marry again, and that she would be at the expence of the wedding. He accepted the proposal; and pitching upon a girl in low life, acquainted the Empress of his choice, and claimed her promise. The Empress, in giving this entertainment, had a mind, at the fame time, to fee how many different kinds of inhabitants there were in her vast dominions. Accordingly, she caused orders to be dispatched to the governors of the provinces to fend up to Petersburg several persons of These being arrived, both fexes. they, at the expence of the court, were new drest, each in the habit of his respective country.

Monsieur de Walinsky was appointed manager of the arrangements for this wedding, and winter was the scason chosen for the celebration of it. The Empress, to make it the more completely extraordinary, had a house built wholly of ice: it consisted of two chambers, in which every thing of furniture, even the bed-place on which the new-married couple were to lie, was to be of ice. were four small cannon and two mortars, made of the same matter. The cannon were fired several times, with half an ounce of powder in each, without buriting; and little wooden grenades were thrown out of the mortars, without their being damaged.

On the wedling-day that the feast was to be cel-brated, all the guells were affembled in the courtyard of Walinsky: thence the proc. Sion fat out, and puffed before the imperial palace, and through the principal threets of the town. There was a great train, confilting of more than three hundred persons. couple were The new-married placed upon an elephant, in a great cage. The guest, two and two, were in a fledge, drawn by all kinds of beafts, as rein-def, dogs, oxen, goats, hogs, &c. Some were mounted on camels. After the procession had gone the round prescribed to it, it was brought into the duke of Courland's ridinghouse, where a flooring of plants had been laid for the purpose, and where there was a dinner prepared for them on several tables. Each was treated according to the manner of cookery in his own country. After the repast, there was a ball: each nation had its own music, and its own way of dancing. the ball was over, the bridegroom and bride were conducted into the house of ice, where they were put into a difmally cold bed, with guards posted at the door, that they might not get out before morning.

In the month of August, the court ordered the feizure of Moul. de Walinsky, minister of the cabinet; of the count Mousekis-Pousehkin, president of the college of trade; of the privy-counfeller Chroutschew; of the superintesdant of the board of works, Jerepkin; of the private secretary of the cabinet, Eichler; and of another fecretary, called Sowda. There were several crimes laid to Waliafky's charge, but his greatest crime was, the misfortune of having incurred the duke of Courling?

displeasure.

During some days of coolneb between the Empress and her savourite the duke, Walinsky had given this princess a memorial, in which he accused the duke of Courland, and several others, who were about her Majesty. particularly simed at infuting in:0 her suspicions of the duke, and advised the Empress to dimiss him.

This

137

es having made it up urite, had the weakis mémorial lato his hich there were but The duke had d it than he resolved his fecretary; and as as a man extremely etuous, and often imis talk, and even in the other foon found te was feeking. ied, and convicted of been guilty of speeches nd too difrespectful Empréss and her faist he was condemned, his hand cut off, and The fentence was The privy-counsellor, and Jerepkin, were d, because they were and confidents. The kin-Pouschkin had his ut: Eichler and Sowda he knout, and were All the estates of inate persons were congiven to others, who Hefs them long after this manner it is, that not only money, but houses, and moveables, icker than in any other Europe, I have feen e masters at least thrice : of two years.

was one that had wit, idless ambition, a great le, vanity, and indif-e was fond of forming was all his life-time turbulent spirit. Notg thefe faults, which tven know how to conid raifed himfelf to the Fthe empire. He had

where he had arrived at the rank of major-general. Having quitted the army, he was employed in the affairs of the flate. Already, under the reign of Peter I. he had been fent as minister into Persia; he had been fecond of the embaffy at the congress of Nemirow; and count Jagonfinsky dying towards the end of the year 1736, he had, two years after, the post of minister in the cabinet, where he could not keep himfelf long, before he had disputes with count Offerman, who naturally did not love parts or wit in his colleagues; having, befides, drawn upon himfelf the refentment of the duke of Courland, he could not well avoid coming to an unfortunate end.

To these anecdotes we shall add the affassination of major Sinclair, an instance of the detestable polities which at that time prevailed in the court of Petersburgh.]

I have precedently observed, that there was a talk of a treaty between Sweden and the Porte. Monf. de Bestuchost, who resided at Stockholm, in quality of minister of Russia, gave advice to his court, that major Sinclair had been fent to Constantinople, whence he was to bring back the ratification of this treaty. Upon this news, marthal Munich, by order of the cabinet, fent certain officers, accompanied by fome subalterns, into Poland, who were to disperse themfelves into different places, and try to carry off Sinclair on his return from Constantinople; to take away all his letters and dispatches, and even to kill him in case of renftance. The officers, as they could not be every where, employed fome Jeus, and some of the poorer Polish erving in the military, gentlemen, to get information of the arrival of Sinclair, so that the danger was divulged before he fet his foot on the territories of Poland: and he had warning from the governor of Chockzim to take care of himself, for that there were lying in wait for him several Russian officers, particularly at Lemberg or Leopol, by the way of which he had proposed to pass. Upon this, Sinclair changed his rout, and the Bashaw of Chockzim gave him an escort that saw him safe to Broda, where the crown-general of Poland was, who gave him another escort, with which he got safe into Silesia. There he thought himself safe; but having been obliged to stop a few days at Breslaw, the Russian officers, who learnt by their spies the road he had taken, pursued, and overtook him within a mile of Newstadel. There they stopped him, took away his arms; and, after having carried him some miles farther, massacred him in a wood. After this noble Aroke, they took his cloaths and his papers, in which, however, nothing of consequence The court of Russa was found. having had them examined, fent them some months afterwards by the post to Hamburgh, whence they were forwarded to Sweden.

The Empress disavowed this execrable action, protesting solemnly her having no knowledge of it. Her ministers presented memorials so all the courts, to remove all fuspicion that might have been entertained of that of Russia; and that the affassins themselves might not be able to betray the secret, they were all seized and sent to Siberia. where they spent some years in dungeons, till the Empress Elizabeth, alcending the throne, releafed them, and had them placed in garrifon-regiments in the intemost parts of the country.

Those employed in this aftir were, the secretary Kuttle, miting of Silena, the lieutenants Lelawitzky and Weselonky, both feb. jects of Russia, each of whom had two subalterns to affir them. two first committed the affairs. tion; the third remained in Poland, but underwent, nevertheleis, the fame treatment as the others,

Certain it is, that the Empress did not know the orders that were given to the officers about Sinclair, and that a great part of these proceedings were concealed from her even after the allassiantion. this affair was juggled up among the duke of Courland, count Offerman, and marshal Munich.

[We shall conclude this article with an account of the manner in which the election of count Biron, to the dutchy of Courland, was conducted, and fome anecdores of the confequent government of that country.]

It was in the year 1-37, that count Biron was elected duke of The duke Ferdinand, Courland. of the house of Kettier, died at Dantzick, by which demise all the male line was extinct. The court of Petersburgh, on receiving advice of this, instantly ordered general Bismark, governor of Riga, to enter that dutchy with the troops under his command, to suppercibe election of a new duke. bility of Courland having, in the mean while, assembled at Mittaw, repaired to the cathedral, where after having lung the Frai Creatry Ernest John de Biron was eleved duke of Courland by a majority of votes. Hereit is to be observed, that the general Birmark had posted companies of horse in the h-yard of the cathedral, and : town, so that the election not fuil. The nobility of end, which had been very lid, and had enjoyed great punder the government of eceding dukes, saw itself all indden in quite another fitu-

10DE

139

No one durk open his a without incurring the risque of seized, and fent to Sibe-For executing this, a most alar method of procedure was

The party who had given a by speaking was, in the at he the leaft thought of it, old of by persens in make, here him into a covered carand conveyed him to the reprovinces of Russia. There several of these seizures at with spiriting away in that is during the three years that he Ernest John seigned, but among others so singular among others so singular comic, that I cannot well he temptation of inserting it jentleman, whole name was n, flanding one evening bee door of his country house, arried off and thrown into these covered carriages. He or near two years carried feveral provinces, without ng him to fee any human re, not even his conductors -lyes ever appearing before irefaced. At the end of that one night the horfes were out of the carriage, and he There he tft to lie in it. sed quietly till the morning, expectation of being made ttinue his journey as ofoal, day-light came on, without ie's coming to him, and all on a sudden he heard persons talking in the Courland language, near his carriage; upon which he opened it, and finds himself at the door of his own house. He made his complaints to the duke, who did not fail of acting the farce of representing his grievance to the court of Russia, whence an answer came, that if he could point out the persons who had done this action, he would take care to have them rigorously punished.

Three Letters, supposed to have been written by the celebrated M. Montesquien.

LETTER I

To M. le Chevelier de BRUANT.

I WAS not at when your letter came: you embarrals me greatly; I shall only answer you for the pleasure of entertaining myself with a man who is much better able to resolve the doubts which he proposed, than the person to whom he sent them.

I am not of your opinion with regard to despotism and despotic princes. It appears to me horrible and absurd to the last degree, that a whole people should blindly fubject themfelves to the Caprice of one, even if he were an angel. For my own part, I would not live under him a fingle day. This angel may become in a moment a monfler, thirling after blood. Despotism is to me the most abominable and disgustful of ali bad governments; man is perpetually crushed, debased, and degraded by it. Look into hiftory, ancient and moders, if ever there was one upon earth that was not an infult on mankind, and the difgrace of human nature. Monarchy would doubtless be the best of governments, if it was possible to find such kings as Henry IV. the only one who ever deferved the homage and veneration of his fubjects. Kings should always be brought up in a school of affliction, as this great man was; such alone are truly great, and the lovers of mankind. Before we can feel for the misfortunes of others, we must ourselves have been unfortunate. But on the other hand, the hearts of princes corrupted by prosperity, and the flaves of pride and folly, are inaccessible to pity, and insenfible of true glory.

I am not at all surprised, that in monarchies, and especially in our own, there should be so sew princes worthy of esteem. Incircled by corruptors, knaves, and hypocrites, they accultom themfelves to look upon their fellowcreatures with disdain, and set no value on any but the sycophants, who caress their vices, and live in perpetual idleness and inactivity. Such is generally the condition of a monarch; great men are always scarce, and great kings still more so. Add to this, that the splendor of a monarchy is short and transitory. France is already sunk into milery and difgrace; an age more will annihilate her, or the will fall a prey to the first intrepid conqueror.

The English government has nothing to support it but a delusive outside, extremely flattering to the people, who fancy themselves the are men and laws. The wife man fole governors. I do not know any is free even in the court of a country where it is more easy to tyrant, because his happiness de-overthrow the Rate. fense and generolity may, is # 1 years time, esect himself in 1 despotic prince wi h more Meys London than at Moscow: remen ber Cromwell. Money alone " fufficient to corrupt the whole perliament.

The great, ever fond of riches and power, and profirate at the feet of fortune, who always attends the throne, will promote the views of their master; and the great cots gained over, this phantom of liberty, which appeared at intervals in the convultive motions of the commons, which awakens, hakes itfelf, and foon vanishes, will be totally annihilated at the first fignal given by the supreme ruler.

I know indeed of no monarchy that is fixed, confiant and perfect; the wifest kings oppress their subjects to arrive at despotism. Adieu, my friend; live in freedom and obscurity. Solitude will procure you the best and trues ples-The fooling sure, self-content. and the wicked, seen after of, will only excite your compation; to look nearly upon them, would raife your contempt and indignation.

I write this in hafte; we will treat this matter more fully in the free intercourse of guiltless friendship.

LETTER II.

OU alk me in what country a man may enjoy the mos persect liberty? In every place, my dear Philinthus, where there create such open dissensions as may pends on himself. Reason and confcience

z are the throne of his It is not in the power of njuffice, or any thing elfe, ge his fool, or diffurb his He rejoices in himfelf, joy is always calm, per-and delightful. l you, my friend, because iolence and iniquity every nitted by wicked ministers. ch and great, by almost an in place and power; therefore intirely banish from that faciety to which indebted for every thing, which every honest and mber of it should yield up out repining at the injuh he fuffers from it? Beprince baries himself in debauchery; because he s, oppresses, and destroys, become an exile from your leave your friends, and poor and afflicted, who you for relief, and rend rt with their complaints? riend, you have too much y. Despise the unjust and ince; but love mankind, e all, the unfortunate and Avoid the impetuous that your king is furwith perverse, wicked, effive men, who laugh at rance, and avail themf his weakness. Fly to it, in fearch of that reodthip and felicity, which to be found in the feats and grandeur, or in the a and delutive tomults of metropolis. Bring with v friends, as worthy and is yourself. Read Plato, e, Charron, and Rabelais;

to the poor labourers, the only creatures upon earth who are always miferable, perpetually toiling to supply the necessities of nature, and victims to the cruel rapacity of the farmers-general, who grind and oppress them.

Thus will you enjoy the most delicate and lively of all pleafures, the pleasure of doing good, the only confolation that can reconcile us to the miseries of human life, When once you are habituated to a country life, joy and peace will revive in your disquieted and uneafy mind, which will grow frong and great, raising itself by degrees to the celetial regions of genius and philosophy. There, free as the air you breathe, throw out your thoughts as they arife; your foul will then fhoot forth fuch divine flames as thall warm and enlighten even the cold and ignorant. When you have filled your paper, arrange and correct the whole, and I will tell you with the utmost freedom my opinion of it. Adieu, my dear friend; with a heart of fuch delicate fenfibility as yours is, youth, health, and a tolerable fortune, you must be happy, ds of a court; forget, if if happiness is the portion of vir-

LETTER III.

YOU are right my dear Phi-linthus, in believing and afferting to all your friends that education makes the man. That alone is the parent of every virtue; it is the most facred, the most useful, and at the fame time the most neglected thing in almost every country, and in every station of But too many vague and lite. ourfelf in acts of kindnefs impracticable rules have been laid down down on this important subject. Even the wise Locke, the great in-Aractor of mankind, is sometimes mistaken, like other writers. education should have an eye to government, or we lafe our aim. The man of patience and underflanding will confider well the mind he has to form and instruct: he will insuse by little and little maxims adapted to his age, and saited to his genius, rank and capacity. I know that there are some soils barren and ungrateful, and which will never answer the labour of the cultivator. sides that such are very uncommon, I am inclined to suspect, that frequently the tiller has neither strength nor skill enough to dig into and improve it as he ought.

There is one radical vice in France, which may perhaps never be extirpated, because it comes from the women, who, amongst us, interfere in every thing, and in the end ruin and destroy every thing. A child is foon spoiled in their hands, from two years old to fix, when he is delivered up, without confideration, to a man whom he has neither feen nor known. The tutor, perhaps a fellow of no character, takes charge of him, not from inclination, but merely for his own in-For ten succeeding years he vegetates in the narrow circle of a college, or in the unimproving converte and faciety of prating females of quality. These tutors are generally appointed by the wemen, who feldom look any further than the outfide; never confidering personal merit, which they have not feafe enough to diffinguith, having never habituated then selves to reflect one moment on any thing ferious or uleful.

Another circumstance highly prejudicial to education, and which disgusts and deters men of ment from engaging in it, is the link regard paid to the tutor or preceptor, who ought to be respected as a father, whose place he is in a great measure intended to supply: he to whom is intruded the heir of an illustrious name and family; he who is to form the worthy citizen, and the good subject; who is to do honour to bis raak and character, and become the glory of his country. Such are the mes, charged as they are with so important an office, who, in the fathionable world, are so often despited and ill-treated, and even fometimes suffered to perish for want, Such abuses, if they become general, must point out a shameful and universal depravity of manaers. Our nobility indeed are free from this reproach; if they pay but indifferently, they make amends by the weight of their interest, and a thousand engaging civilities, for the small appointment which their fortune will permit them to allow. Your rich financiers, on the other hand, who are naturally morely, proud, and offentations, feldom pay a man without affronting him: having nothing but money to give, they gorge you with it.

In France the women ruin every thing, because they think themselves fit for every thing, and the men are weak and child. The enough to humour their caprice. Name notwithstanding made them but to obey, and the weakness of their consistuainn every day prints cut to us the weakness of their fex. With regard to education, it is worse at court than in any ofer place; the governor having a celeptic power over his pupil, suffers

b:M

9

ow up in ignorance and ills his head with the f fashion, and puffs him the notion of his own a contempt of the increatures that crawl be-Every thing around be made subservient to coradvancement. Every fall down before him on nice. He never talks to graing the royal virtues n a throne, justice, coueficence, intrepidity, and fglory; therefore it is, mgft our kings, we negreat man; for I call not eror by that name, but saider him as the terror, and difgrace of humanie whom the people are their own interest to defoon as the flame of his sughter and oppression. XIL was honest and just, and ignorant. Francis boafter, cruel, and a prewit. Henry IV. brave maimous; but too much women ever to become a er. Lewis XIV, at once ateft and meaneft of . would have excelled monarchs in the unihe had not been corrupted ath by base and ambitious A flave during his e to pride and vain-glory, breaks forth in pro-

a moment; yet expected ne time, like a true arbioce, that they should fatemfelves to his will and Intoxicated with power adeur, be imagined the orld was made but to pro-really laved his subjects, obeyed, idolized, hated, morrified, and abandoned. He lived like a fultan, and died like a wo-His reign was immortaman, lized by the lowest of his fub-

It is therefore, my dear Philinthus, impossible there should ever be a great man amongst our kings, who are made brutes and fools of all their lives, by a fet of infamens wretches, who furround and befet them from the cradle to the grave.

Latter from Voltaire to the Duke of Valiere ; from Voltaire's Letters, lately translated by Dr. Frank-

[7 OU refemble, my lord, the heroes of ancient chivalry, by thus expoling your own person in defence of your faithful followers, when in danger; but the little error which you led me into has been the means of displaying your profound crudition. Few grand. falconers would have delivered the Sermanes Festiwi, printed in 1502. Raillery apart, to put yourself in the breach for me, was an action worthy of your noble heart.

You told me, in your first letter, that Urceus Codrus was a great preacher; your fecond informs me he was a great libertine. but no cordelier. You ask pardon of St. Francis and all the feraphic order, for the contempt into which I am fallen. I join with you, and put on my penitentials; bot it fift remains true, that the mysteries represented at the Hotel de Bourgogne were more decent than mod of our modern fermons. Place who happinels. He was feared, we please in the room of Urceus

Codrus, and we shall yet be in the right. There is not a word in the mysteries offensive to piety and good manners. Forty people would never agree to write and act sacred poems in French, that should disgust the public by their indecency. and of course oblige them to shut up their doors. But an ignorant preacher, who works by himself, and is accountable to none for what he does, who has no idea of decorum, may very probably advance some ridiculous things in his fermon, especially when he delivers it in Latin. Such, for inflance, are the discourses of the cordelier Maillard, which you undoubtedly have in your large and valuable collection; in his fermon on the Thursday in the second week of Lent, he addresses himself thus to the lawyers wives gowns embroidered with NCLE gold.

"You say you are cloathed according to rank; go to the de-" vil, ladies, you and your rank 44 together. You will tell me, ferhaps, our husbands don't e give us these fine gowns; we . earn them by the industry of our " own sweet bodies; thirty thoufand devils take your industry, and your bodies too."

I will not put you to the blush, by quoting any more pallages from brother Maillard; but if you will take the trouble to look into him, you will find some strokes worthy Brother Anof Urceus Codrus. drew and Minot were likewise famous for their filthiness. pulpit was not indeed always polluted by obscenity; but for a long time fermons were little better than she mysteries of the Hotel de Bourgogac,

It must be acknowledged, that the members of what they call the reformed church in France, were the first that brought reasoning and argument into their discourse, When we want to change the ideas, and alter the priciples of men, we must make use of reason; but this was still very far from elequence. The palpit, the bar, the stage, philosophy, literature, theslogy, every thing we could book of in those times, some sew particulars excepted, were beneath the common pieces exhibited at a country fair.

True tafte was not exablified amongst us till the reign of Levis XIV. It was this which long fact determined me to attempt a flight sketch of that glorious zra; and you must have observed, in that hiltory, the age is my hero more than Lewis himself, what respect and gratitude foever may be due to his memory.

It is true indeed, that, in general, our neighbours made no greater figures than ourselves. How happened it that men could preach for ever, and yet preach so badly! and that the Italians, who had so long before shook off their berbarity in other respects, with regard to the pulpit were but so many harlequies with furplices on I Whilst at the same time the Jerusalem of Tallo rival'd the Itiad, and Orlando Furiolo surpassed the Odystey; Pattor Fido had no model in all antiquity, and Raphael and Paul Veronele actually performed what was only imagined of Zeuxis and Appelles.

You must certainly, my lord, have read the council of Treat. There is not a peer in the kingdom, I suppose, who does not ome part of it every morn-'on remember the fermon spening of the council by op of Bitonto.

Persie

roves, first, that the counsecurity, because several have deposed kings and a. Secondly, because, in said, Jupiter assembles a of the gods. Thirdly, bet the creation of man, and iding of Babel, God atto it in the manner of a

He infilts on it, a little tat the council should remicles to thirty, like the a the Trojan horse. And, afferts, that the gate of and the gate of the counthe same thing. That liver flowed from it, with the holy fathers should their hearts, which were and; or, in lieu of this,

Holy Ghost would open ouths like the mouths of and Caiphas.

my lord, was preached all the general flates of dom. The fermon of St. of Padua to the fifth is till mous in Italy than that of ip of Bitonto; we may exerefore, our brother Another Garaffe, and all the of our pulpits in the fixnd feventeenth centories, were but on a level with Lers the Italians. What e the cause of this gross e, fo univerfally spread ly in the time of Taffo: nce in the days of Monharron, and the chancel-Hospital; and over Engthe age of Bacon? H w d it that thefe men of genot reform the times they ? We must assribate it to XIII.

the colleges where youth were educated; to that monkish theologic fpirit which anished the barbarisat that the colleges had introduced. A genius, as Talfo was, read Virgil, and produced the Jerufalem. A merchant rend Terence, and wrote Mandragora: but what monk or curate, at that time of day, read Tuliy or Demoithenes? A poor and wretched fcholar, grown half an ideor by being obliged, for four years together, to get John Despautere by heart; and half a madman by supporting a thesis 👍 rebus & partibus, on thoughts and categories, received his cap, and his letters of recommendation, and away he went to preach to an audience, three parts of whom were greater fools, and worfe educated; than himfelf.

145

The people liftened to these theological farces with outfiresched necks, fixed eyes, and open mouths, as children do to flories of witches and apparitions, and returned home perfect penitents. The same spirit that made them give ear to the nonfense of a soolish mother, led them to thefe fermons a which they attended the more diligently, as it cost them nothing. It was not till the time of Coelfeteau and Balzic that fome preachers began to talk rationally; though at the fame time they were verv tirefome. Bourda'oue, in short, was the first man of any eloquence in the pulpir. Of this, Burnet, bishop of Salisbury, bears tellimony, in his Memcirs; where he tells us, that, in traveiling through Brance, he was affonished at his fermons; and that Bourdaloubreformed the preachers of England, as well as those of france.

Bourdaloue might be it led almost the Corneille of the pulpit, as Maffillon became afterwards the Racine of it. Not that I mean to compare an art, half profane, to a ministry well-nigh holv; nor, on the other hand, the little difficulty of making a good fermon to the great and inexpressible one of composing a good tragedy. Lonly say, that Bourdaloue carried the art of reasoning as far in preaching as Corneille did in the drama: and that Maffillon studied to be as elegant in prose, as Racine was in verse. True indeed it is, that Bourdalove was reproached as well as Corneille, for being too much of a lawyer, for preferring argument to paffion, and fometimes producing but indifferent proofs. Massilon, on the other hand, chose rather to paint, than to affect; he imitated Racine as much as it was possible to do it in profe: not forgetting, at the fame time, boldly to affert, that all dramatic authors would be damned. Every quack, you know, must cry up his own nostrum, and condemn those of others. His stile is pure; his descriptions moving and pathetic. Read over this passage on the humanity of the great.

" Alas! if any of us have an " excuse for being motose, whim-" fical, and melancholy, a bur-"then to ourfelves and all about " us, it must be those miserable "wretches, whom misfortures, " calamities, home-felt necessity, and gloomy cares, perpetually They might be for-" furround. egiven, if with mourning, bit-" ternef, and despair aiready in . " their hearts, the marks of it 44 should sometimes appear in their external beh viour. But Cail " the great and happy of its world, whom joy and pleafure " accompany, whill cvery thing " smiles ground them; shall these of pretend to derive, even from their felicity, an excuse for their churlishness and caprice? Shall they be melancholy, disquieted, and unfociable, because they are more happy? Shall they look upon it as the privilege of prosperity to oppress with the weight of their ill humour the poor and unfortunate, who alter their power and authority?"

Recollect, at the same time, these lines in Britannicus;

Tout se que vous voyez conspire à vos desirs, Vos jours toujours serins conless

dans les plaisirs

L'empire en est pour vous l'isépuisable source,

Ou si que que chagria en interrompt la course.

Tout l'univers, soignant de les

S'empresse à l'essacer de vous souvenir.

Britannicus est seul, quelqu'anai qui le presse,

Il ne voit dans son sort que moi qui l'interesse,

Et n'a pour tous plaisirs, seigneur, que que que pleurs

Qui lui font quelquefois oublier fes malheurs.

Whate'er then feeft confrients make thee happy,

Strine the days in endless pleasing three flow,

From the wide empire's uses.
h u'ted spring;

Or if intruding forrow, for a vhile,

Brc.ks in upon the jovs, the world itself,

Still anxious for thy good, with ardour strives

To blot out every painful sel had ritannicus, an time, is left alone; when ures opprefs, ily I, participate his griefs, all his comfort is the tears thed.

ich fometimes makes the retch forget his forrows.

omparing these two passages tr, I perceive the scholar, were, contending with his . I could shew you twenty tamples of the same nature, at I am assaid of being billon and Cheminais knew by heart, and disguised the of that divine poet in their profe. In the same manner preachers learned the art of sation from Baron, and corthe gesture of the comedian t of the sacred orator. Nome be a stronger proof than that the arts at least are to though the artists themeter far from being so.

work of fermons is, that e only to many declamations d con. The fame man who d last Sunday that there was city in grandeur, that crowns rns, that courts are full of g but illustrious wretches, it joy is spread over the faces poor, will tell you, the after, that the lower part kind is condemned to mid forrow; and that the rich "at mult one day pay for ingerous prosperity. y will inform you, in Adhat God is perpetually employed in removing all the wants and necessities of mankind; and, when Lent comes, assure you, that the earth is barren and accurred. These common places, with a few flourishing phrases, carry them on from one and of the year to the other.

The preachers in England follow another method, which would not fuit us at all. The deepeft book of metaphytics which they have is Clarke's fermons : one would imagine he had preached only to philosophera, who perhaps too, at the end of every period, might have required of him a long explanation; and the Frenchman at London, to aubim nothing could be proved, would foon have left th' preacher there. His discourses, however, make an excellent book, which very few underftand. What a difference there is between ages and national and how far off are brother Garaffe and brother Andrew from Maffilian and Clarke !

From my fludy of history I have at leaft learned, that the times we live in are certainly of all times the most enlightened, in spite of our bad books, as they are also the most happy, in spite of some casual misfortunes: for what man of lesters can be ignorant that good tafte was brought into France about the time of Cinna, and the Provincial Laters? or where is he, who has any knowledge of history, that can point out a period of time, from the days of Clovis, more happy than what has paffed fince the zera when Louis XIV. began to reign by himself, down to the prefent moment? I defy the most malevolent L 2 trke's fermons are by no means, as Mr. Voltaire here afferts, all meals these indeed on the being of a God, &c. are certainly so; but a without as many excellent, plain, practical discourses in this collection, a of our best writers.

malevolent to tell me what age he would prefer to our own.

We must do juttice; we must acknowledge that, at prefent, a geometrician of four-and-twenty knows more than ever Descartes did: and that a country vicar preaches more sensibly than the grand almoner of Louis XII. nation is better instructed, our stile in general is much improved, and confequently the minds of men greatly superior now to what they were formerly.

You will fav, perhaps, that our age is at present on the decline, and that we have not so much genius and abilities among us as we had in the gloricus days of Louis XIV. Genius, I grant you, decays; but knowledge is increated. A thousand painters, in the time of Salvator Rofa, were not worth a Raphael, or a Michael Angelo; but the thousand painters formed by Raphæl and Michael Angelo composed a school infinitely superior to that which those two great men found established. We have not, indeed, at the close of our fine age, a Massillon, or a Bourdaloue, a Boisuet, or a Fenelon: but the poorest of our preachers is a Demothenes, in comparison with all those who preached from the times of St. Romi to those of brother Gualle.

There is more difference between the world of our modern tragedies and the pieces of jodelie, then beween the Athaliah of Racine and the Maccabees of La Motte, or the Moses of the abbe Natial. Upon the whole, in the productions of the mind our artists fail thort of thate who flourished in the cawa and meridian of our golden age; but the nation attelf is improved. We are over-tun indeed with trifes, and mine always adding to the number: thele are but for many issects, which denote the abundance of fruits and thowers; yet fee now of them in a barren foil. You will observe, that in these little pieces that are perpetually coming out, destroved one by another, and all of them, in a few days, condemned to eternal oblivion, there is of:es more take and delicacy than you will find in all the books written before the Provincial Letters. Such is our affluence in wit, when compared to the poverty of twelve hundred years past.

If you examine into the prefess flate of our manners, laws, goversment, and fociety, you will fed my account firitily just. I date from the moment Louis XIV. took the reins into his own hand, and would ask the most exasperated critic, the gravek panegyrift of times palt, whether he durit compare the prefent period with that when the archoishop of Paris west to pirliament with a poignard in his pocket? Or would he prefer the preceding age, when the fit minister was thot, and his wife condemned to be burned for a witch? Ten or twelve years of the great Henry IV. appear happy, after forty of abominations and norrors, that make one's hair fland an cod; but whilst the best of princes " employed in healing our wounds, they bled on every tide. The pofon of the league infected every mind; families were divided; the manners of men harth and dilagreeable. Fanaticism reigned univertally, except at the court-Commerce, indeed, began to 18creale; but was not, as yer, sttended with any great advantages. Society had no charms, our cities no police; all the sentures, 10 conveniences of life were ig. Figure to yourfelf, e sime, a hundred thousations committed in the lod, amidst the roins of in ashes. Even to the rancis is you will fee d with our blood, a king Madrid, and the enemy ft of our provinces.

me of Pater Patrice was zewis XII but this fafome very unfortunate and was to himfelf: of Italy, duped by the justed by Henry VIII. I to bribe him to marry nie was a good king, over sitivated people, walhout anufacture; the houses tal built with lath and ad most of them covered . Who would not rather mader a good king, over sulent and wife, though and milchievous?

ther you go back into

s, the more favage you em; which readers our afguftful, that we have t to make chronological ps in columns, where g necessary is inserted. at which is ufel: is omite lake of those curious o are defirous of knowt year the Sorbonne was ed are in doubt whequeltrian flator in the tedral of Paris is of Phiis or Philip the Fair. he truth, we have not properly existed above

Laws, police,

CATE.

military discipline, trade, navigation, the five arts, magnificence, tafte, and genies, all began in the time of Lewis XIV. Some of them are ripening to perfection in our own age, which I meant to infinoate, when I advanced, that every thing heretofore was rule and darbarous, and the pulpit among & them. Urceus Codrus molt certainly was not worth talking for long about a but he has furnished me with reflections which may not perhaps be intirely uselets; we thould endeavour to draw fome advantage from every thing.

We infert the following Letter, merely to show the degree of Credit due to Voltance's Heftery of Peresthe Great,

To Mr. ROUSSEAU* of Touloufe, Director of the Encyclopedian Journal, printed at Bouilien, concerning a Letter interted in the St. James's Chronicle, July, 1762.

SIR, Ferney, Oct. 10, 1763. N answer to yours of August 14. I for which I am greatly obliged to you, I must inform you, that the duke of Grafton, who has been in my neighbourhood for fome time pail, thewed me, in the St. James's Chronicle, a letter attributed to me; but apparently the produce of Grub-Ricci, or the charnelhouse of St. Innocent. I muft be ubliged, out of regard to my charafter, to contradict this impertineat thapfody in all the English papers. Men of fenfe and candour know what credit is to be given to ere at this time at Paris three Rousseaus; Mr. Rousseau of Tonschrated John Baptist Rousseau, an eminent puet; and the famous Rousseau of Geneva, equally diffinguished for his extraordinary ingenious paradoxes, and the perfecutions which he has suffered and enthusiasse. idle reports of this kind, which the public is over-run with, and heartily tired of.

With regard to the German critique on my History of Peter the . Great, I shall be glad to see it in Those remarks, your Journal. which are sensible and judicious, will be of service to me in the second volume. I may very probably be mikaken in some points, though I have followed as nearly as I could the memoirs sent me from * Petersburgh.

There was a gross error in the manuscript concerning religion; the patriarch Nicholas was mistaken for the patriarch Photius, who lived an hundred years before This has been corrected in several copies. In another place, Apraxin is put for Narilkin. to matters of fact, if they are contested, the archives of Petersburgh must answer for me. My History of Charles XII. was severely criticisea; the criticisms are forgotten, the history remains.

An Account of the mobile Aquedust of Alcántara, by which Liston is supplied. From Barretti's Journey.

UR author, after describing the Arsenal, proceeds as sollows:

But I went to see another of another kind in the afternoon, which surpasses it by far in point of bulk as well as magnificence. I mean the Aquedut in the valley of Alcantara, by which Liston is supplied with almost all the water that is used by the inhabitants.

That valley is funk bet rocky and barren declivit Aqueduct, for about a qu mile, which is the bread valley, runs tranfversely from the summit of th declivity to the opposit of the eaftern. A long square pillars supports it give you an idea of the it is enough to fay, the their fides meafures pea and the other near thirte the length of my fwor was the only inftrament take fuch meafures; and between the two middlelars is fuch, both in bre height, that a fifty-gun her fails spread might pass without obstruction. the pillars are not of equi fions with the two central grow lower and lower, spaces betwixt them dimi dually on citber fide the t the ground gradually rifes side.

The pillars support as trave whose middle is fort a canal, through which t runs: and there is room left for three or four men a-breaft along the archit each fide the Canal, which i the whole length, and ador space to space with Lucar. in the form of little templ of which has a door or : large enough for a man t the water and clean the be the canal in case of necessit

The whole of this ima bric is of fine white mar out of a quarry not a mu

[•] The French editor tells us, in a note on this passage, that Mr. ' History of Peter the Great is nothing but a Gazette, and that it was we him merely to conciliate the favour of the court of Russia.

te and I am told that about we farther off there are some parts of it which have their of grandeur, though by no comparable to what is seen is valley. The earthquake oilt it in two or three places: e damage proved inconsiderand was effily remedied. And I wonder not if it with sood seks. A concustion violent is offered its destruction,

Matter the whole king form

togal, em a man has once feen such force as the Aqueduct of Al e, there is no deliger of his projecting it, as it is the na of grand objects to force re rance. As long as I live I referve the image of it, along that of the valley which is red to conspicuous by it.

count of the Manner in which Punifoment of the Knowt was Bed on the celebrated Madam wochin, at Petersburgh; with Observations on the Russian isments, and the Essels they was and several curious Parlars relative to the Banesh-t of Count Lestoc and his Lady Siberia. From Mr. L'Abbo uppe D'Auteroche's Jaurney Siberia.

iCE the accession of the aprels Elizabeth to the throne sale, the punishments are reto two kinds, the padegi, and padogi are confidered in merely as a correction of lice, exercised on the foldier litery discipline, by the noon their servants, and by perfors in authority over all fack as are under their command.

I saw this punishment inslicted. at my return from Toboliky to Sr. Peterfourgh. I looked out of a winds we on hearing fomebody cry out in the yard, where I faw two Russian slaves, pulling a girl of fourteen or fifteen years of age by the arms; the was tall and well made. By her diefs, the appeared to belong to fome go d family. Her head dreffed without a cap, was reclined backwards; her eyes, fixed in one perfor, pleaded for mercy; which her beauty should feem to have infured her, independent of her tears. Nevertheless, the Ruffians led her into the middle of the yard, and in an instant stripped her to the waith; they then laid her profitate on the ground, and placed themselves on their knees; one of them holding her head tight between his knees, and the other the lower part of her body; rods were then brought, which they continued constantly applying on the back of this girl, till fome one cried out, Enough. This unfortunate victim was then raifed, fo disfigured that the was fcarcely to be known; her face and her whole body being covered with blood and dirt. This severe panishment led me to imagine, that the young girl had been guilty of fome very flagrant offence: fome days after I learned, that the was a lady's waiting-maid; and that her miftrefs's husband had ordered her to be punished in that manner, on account of fome neglect. In any other part of the world, the might perhaps have been turned away, if her miltrefs had happened to be in an ill humour. The Russians think themselves obliged to treat L 4 their servants thus, in order to make them faithful. These unhappy slaves, finding so many petty tyrants in their masters, are obliged on this account to live in perpetual mistrust; so that even in the midst of their samilies, they are under a necessity of being constantly on their guard with every person who comes near them.

I never saw the punishment of the knout inflicted; but as I was going over to St. Petersburgh with a torcigner, who conducted me to see all the curiosities in the city, we stopped upon the spot where Mad. Lapouchin had suffered this punishment. The foreigner had been present on this occasion; and was still so much assected with the assair, that he gave me a particular account of it on the very spot. I shall relate the incident as he told it me, and as I sound it in my journal.

Every body who has been at St. Petersburgh, knows that Mad. Lapouchin was one of the finest women belonging to the court of the Empress Elizabeth: she was intimately connected with a foreign ambassador, then engaged in a con'piracy. Mad. Lapouchin, who was supposed to be an accomplice in this conspiracy, was condemned by the Empress Elizabeth, to undergo the punishment of the knout. She appeared at the place of execution in a genteel undress, which contributed still to heighten ter beauty. The sweetnels of her countenance, and her vivacity, were such as might indicate indiscretion, but not even the shadow of guilt; although I have been assured by every person, of whom I have made inquiry, that the was really guilty. Young, lovely, admired and fought for at the court, of which she was the life and spirit; instead of the number of admirers her beauty usually drew after her, the then faw herself surrounded only by executioners. She looked on them with allonishment, seeming to doubt whether such preparations were intended for her: one of the executioners then pulled off a kind of cloak which covered her boson; her modesty taking the alarm made her flart back a few fleps; se turned pale and borft into team: her clothes were foon after firipped off, and in a few moments the was quite naked to the waift, expected to the eager looks of a valt concourse of people profoundly filest. One of the executioners then leized her by both hands, and turning half-round, threw her on his back, bending forwards, fo as to rails her a few inches from the ground ? the other executioner then laid hold of her delicate limbs, with his rough hands hardened at the plough, and, without any remork, adjusted her on the back of hu companion, in the propered polture for receiving the punishment. Sometimes he laid his large hard brutally upon her head, in order to make her keep it down; foretimes like a butcher going to flay a lamb, he seemed to sooth her, as fuon as he had fixed her in the more favourable attitude.

This executioner then took a kind of whip called knout, made of a long strap of leather prepared for this purpose: he then retreated a few steps, measuring the requise distance with a steady eye; and leaping backwards, gave a strake with the end of the whip, so as so carry away a slip of skin from the neck to the bottom of the back: then striking his feet against the ground he took his aim for applying of the Empress Elizabeth. Sometimes criminals were impaled through the fide; fometimes they were hanged by the ribs upon hooks; in which fituation they lived for feveral days; as did women who were buried alive up to hed into Siberia. This the shoulders, for the murder of their busbunds. Beheading was a known to all persons ren in Roffia. In 1762, punishment equally inflicted on affed from banishment the common people as on the nobility.

Ş

nary ponishment of the or difgraceful, because ideal under this desponent is exposed to incise fame nature, which been the confequence

cond blow parallel to

; fo that in a few moe fkin of her back was n fmall flips, most of ained hanging to the r tongue was cut out

y after, and the was diourt intrigues.

who have committed regard to fociety, are to the great knout. ment is generally used e occations, as racking el in France. The great rs only in fome particuse common knout; the raised into the air by pulley fixed to a gala cord fastened to the tied together; a piece placed between his two ed together; and anocrucial form under his metimes his hands are d his back; and when up in this polition, his re diflocated.

entioners can make this more or less cruel: dexterous, that when is condemned to die, ake him expire at plear by one or feveral

the punishment of the t of breaking on the in use before the reign

It appears evidently from the example of the kingdom of Ruffia, that neither the death of criminals, nor the severity of their corporal ponishments, do contribute to reform mankind.

The Empress Elizabeth has kept up the punishment of the knowe only, as I have before unferred a criminals are even feldom condemned to this; banishing of the nobility; conficating their property, and putting the common people to public labour, have been fubilituted inflead of it. I have known feveral persons, who blamed the conduct of the Empres Elizabeth in this respect, confidering thefe punishments as 100 mild.

There may be some reason sog this opinion with regard to crimes of a peculiar nature; but it is evident that fuch perions were little acquainted with the nature of banithment as practifed in Ruffia.

All criminals condemned to pub. lic labour are treated in the fame manner; they are that up in prifons furrounded by a large piece of ground, included with flakes, fifty or fixty feet high; in bad weather they retire within fide the prifon, and when the feaf a permits they walk about in the in-closure. They have all chains to their feet; and are kept for a very triffing trifling expence, being generally allowed nothing but bread and water, or, according to the place they are in, some other food inflead of bread. They are guarded by a certain number of soldiers, who lead them to the mines, or other public labours; where they are treated with the utmost seven rity This punishment in many inflances is not adequate to the crimes: it has not that effect on the minds of the Russians as one might expect, because they are flaves. It would certainly have a very different effect on a free and civilized nation; where a perpetual punishment of this kind would prove a more powerful restraint on the people than the fear of death. Some villains even look upon that moment as the end of all their fufferings, to which circumstance we may impute the resolution with which some of them have behaved on the scaffold: but I believe it might be very dangerous to expole such criminals, as they do in Rus-Sia, to the public view. The habit of sceing these unhappy people at length destroys sensibility; and this sentiment is of such importance to fociety, that every method ought to be taken to preserve it among people who are already pofsessed of it, or to excite it in the breafts of those who are yet ftrangers to it. I am persuaded that the disagrecable fight of such a number of wretches in chains as are met with in most of the towns in Rus-fia, has contributed much to produce that ferocity and savagench of character so remarkable among the inhabitants of this realm.

Persons condemned to basinment are not all treated in the fame manner; fome are that up, and others allowed a little liberty. Count Lestoc, after having placed the crown on the head of the Empress Elizabeth, was banished with his lady. Legoc was arrefted fig. and thut up in the fort of St. Petershurgh. His wife was a native of Livonia, of one of the most soble families: the was maid of honour to the Empress before the married Count Lettoc; and though living at court, had still preserved the noble pride inspired by that Iberty which the province of Livonia, conquered by Peter I. Ailles-The countels of Lekec being arrested, took off all the dismonds belonging to her dress, as well as her watch, and other trinkets, and throwing them at the feet of those who took her sp. told them to lead her to the place they were ordered to conduct her to: the was thut up in the lame caftle with her hulband, bot in a separate apartment: all their esfects were put under seal, in expectation of the seatence of the private court of chancery. illustrious prisoners, given up w this odious tribunal, the judges of which were avowed enemies to Count Lestoc, especially M de Bestucheff, the first minister ., looked

^{*} I have read in some manuscript notes on Russia, that in 1741 the Empress Elizabeth had abolished the secret chancery on her accession to the throne, and had referred to the fenate all the matters which used to be tried there; but it does not appear that this order was ever carried into execution. Count Letter and his peers have never been judged by the fenate, nor by any real court of justice. upos eir rain as inevitable, and did not endeavour to ofan their defence. Lelloc rived a furn of money from power in alliance with and it was to this power Empress Elizabeth was infor the crown. The reof this prefent was the arge brought against count on being queftioned, he ne had received it; but his laving asked him the value firm, his answer was, I do ed, but if you are defirous ing, the Empress Elizabeth you: and, indeed, he had d this princels that this been offered to hin, on of the favours the thewed and the Empress had allowed accept of it, counters of Lettoc, as fully ad of the fencence that a given, as the was of her hufban.'s innocence, ged one favour of the that the might be beauthat they would fpare that is, that the might is the punishment of the ithstanding all the connof Bestuchess, the Empreis th would never consent that somers should be condemnte knout: all their estite ficated; they were banishsiberia, thut up in different and not allowed to correth each other.

onnies of Lestoc had but a to live in; her furniture of a few chairs, a table, and a bed without curade of straw, with one the got clean sheets but the arit year. Four soldiers conitantly watched her, and las in her chamber; from whence the was not allowed to fir, even for the ermmon necessities of life: the had only a few thifts to change now and then. Leitoc gave out at his return, that his wife had been furprized, that the vermin, the n collary confequence of the filth the was obliged to live in. detirny her. She used to play at card- with the foldters, in hopes of getting four or five-pence to dispose of as the pleased, which however was not always allowed. Being one day out of humour with the other who commanded, he fpat in her face, and afterwards made her captivity flut harder.

Count Lefter was full more unhappy, because the vivarity of his disposition made him very impatient of the least contradiction; and he was only indulged in the liberty of walking about his room, on condition that he avoided coming near the window.

The Empreis Elizabeth, however, had allowed Leftoe, as well as his wife, twelve French livres per day, which was very favourable treatment in Rollia; but there exiles were not permitted to touch the mone, allotted to them, left they should have employed it in bribing their guards: the officer of the guard decelore was treasurer, he was or irred to produce them all necessaries, and he let them want for every thing.

A few years after, count Lestoe and his lady were suffered to live together; they had then toveral apprime to, and a small garden at their disposal; the Counters of Leston worked in the garden, fetched water, browed, baked, mashed.

156 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

washed, &c. - Sometimes even the officer of the guard introduced company to them: one of his friends, who had conducted a party into Siberia, denred to fee the Count. This officer having contracted a kind of intimacy with Jaim, proposed a party of rlay. Leauc won four huncied French Invres: this tum was a fortune for The two exiles, they were soon after informed, that it belonged to the party this officer conducted. The Counters fell at her hulband's feet, intreating him to return the money to this improvent foldier; Lettoc raised her up, and sent the money to the nearest village to be distributed among the poor.

After the banishment of M. de Bettuchest, Count Woronzost, the High Chancellor, attempted several times to have Lestuc recalled, as he was thoroughly persuaded of his annocence, but the Emprets Elizabeth would never listen to his interactics on this point: she was however particularly attentive in giving orders to have wine sert to him trom time to time, knowing newas wery fond of it.

Lettoc and his lady were at length recailed by Peter III. after tourteen years exile: Leiloc came to Sr. Peter burgh in the grets of the lower fert of propie, which is commonly made of the eps skin. All the noblemen of the court, and all foreigners, slocked eagerly to see him, encravouring to make him forget the time he had pall in exile. The friendly proffers here-caived were fincere, becaute every body knew he was innocent; the Euprets Elizabeth gever had a subject mose firmly attached to her;

and he had constantly maintained his allegiance during his exile: he declared that M. de Bestuches had been the cause of it, and that the Empress had only given way to the importantices of this minister,

Count Ledoc, though feventyfour years old, fill preferred all that firmnets, which had been to necessary to him when he placed the princess Elizabeth on the throns. He used to give a cicumulantial account of this even, and of his banishment, in public company; although he knew very well that the flory way highly difagreeable to the Russians, and tax he threeby exposed himself uaily to be banished again; nor were the admonitions of his friends of any weight with him in this matter. Peter III. having done him the honour of admitting him to his table, Lestoc spoke to him in the toilowing terms: "Sir, my enemies will not fail to do me all " the mischief they can, but I nope " your majetty will permit an old " man, who has but few days to " live, to prace on, and die in " peace." He claimed all the effects that had been taken away from him when ne was arrested: they had been already distributed among leveral private persons, according to cuttom. He declared he would take possession of them wherever be found them. demanded, that an account thould be given him of his jewels, and of the money the officers of the guard had received during his exile. Count Lestoc bunfelf acquainted me with every thing I have meamoned concerning his banifiment, and furnished me also with the parof the revolution by which press Elinabeth was fixed on one.

it Munic, equally great as ier and as a general, acted ferent manner. He never ined. Both Ruffings and era had the greatest respect wal Munic was of the tallest hough advanced in years, tremely thin, he had prem the midst of his missora most agreeable counte-He engaged all hearts by

He engaged all hearts by iteness, and the gentleness lisposition.

of a Debauch at the prefent (then Prince of Pruffix's at Rheinthorg. From Buielfeld's Letters.

'US, Madam, our days here sals tranquilly away, and ed by every enjoyment that sie a rational mind. Royal vine for the gods, the mufic els, delicious pattimes, in rdens, in the woods, upon ern; the cultivation of let-I the police art, and a repaveriation, all concur to their powers over this eng palace. But as there is tity that is absolutely perthe pleafutes that I have at Rheinlberg, have ben with bitterne's by a fingular t, of which, Madam, I shall re an account; as you will · me return to Hamburgh. To wounds on my forchead, ye, and a check covered with colours of the rainbow; it w that I apprife you of this phe. We feldom fail to fee the effects of a debauch, and it was at a bacchanalian rout, that I acquired all those ornaments. About a fortnight fince, the prince was in a humour of extraordinary gaiety at table. His gatety unsmated all the reft; and fome glaffia of Champagne Hill more enlivened our mirth. The prince, perceiving our disposition, was willing to promore it; and on rising from table, told us he was determined we thould recommence our jollity at fupper, and in the fame place where we had left off. Towards evening I was called to the concert; at the end of which the prince faid to me, Go now to the prince/s's apartment, and when the bas firished ber play, we will jit derun to table, and spen't gat it till the lights are out, and over are formsnobat enlightened north Chamingnen I regarded this threat as a please fantry, for I knew that parties which are expreisly intended for this purpole, feldom fucceed, but commonly become more dull than joyous. On entering the prince 6's apartment, however, her highacts convinced us that the affair was very ferious, and prognotticated with a fmile, that I thould not be able to . defend myfelf against the prince's attack. In fielt, we were fearce feated before he began, by drinking a pumber of interesting healths, which there was a necessity of pledging. This first thirmsth being over, it was full awed by an incertfant flow of fallier and repartees, by the prince and the company; the most contracted countenances became expand d, the gainty, was general, even the ladges affilled in promoting our julity. After about two hours, we found that the largest retervoirs, by perpetually filling, might

158 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

might be overflown: necessity has no law; and the greatest respect could not prevent some of us, from going to take the fresh air in the vestibule. I was one of the roumber: when I wentout I found myfelf sober enough, but the air seized me, and on entering the hali, I perceived a fort of vapour that feemed to cloud my reason. I had placed before me a large glass of water, which the princess, opposite to whom I had the honeur to fit, in a vein of mischievous pleasantry, had ordered to be emptied, and had filled it with fellery wine, which was as clear as rock water; so that, having already lost my taile, I mixed my wine with wine; and thinking to refresh myself, I became joyous, but it was a kind of joy that leaned towards intoxi-To finish my picture, the prince ordered me to come and lit by him: he said many very gracious things to me, and let me fee into futurity, as far as my feeble fight was then capable of discovering: and at the same time made me drink bumper after bumper, of his lunel wine. The rest of the company, however, were not less sensible than I, of the effects of the nectar, which there flowed in such mighty ilreams. One of the ladies, who was a stranger, and in a multiplying state, found herself as much incommoded as we were, and retired fullienly for a short ime to her chamber. We thought this action admirably heroic. Wine produces complacency. The taly, en her return, was leaded with com; liments and careffes; never was wemantalo pplauded for tuch an expedition. At last, whether by accident or drigh, the princers broke a glais. This was a bynal for our impetuous jollity, and 🛋 🖯 example that appeared highly worthy of imitation. In an influnt all the glasses slew to the feveral corners of the room; and all the cristals, porcelain, pirm, branches, bowis, vales, &c. ven broke into a thousand pieces. Is the midst of this universal desires. tion, the prince flood, like the man in Horace, who contemplates the crush of worlds, with a look of perfect tranquillity. To this tumult succeeded a fresh burk of mirth; during which the prison iliptaway, and, aided by his pages, retired to his apartment; and the princels immediately followed.

For me, who unfortunately found not one valet who was human enough to guide my wandering fleps, and support my tottering fabric, I carelefly approached the grand flair-cate, and without the least hesitation, rolled from the top to the bottom; where I lay senseks on the door, and where, perhaps, I should have perished, if an old female domestic had not chanced to pass that way, who, in the dark, taking me for a great dog belonging to the caltie, gave me an appellation fourtwhat diffenous able, and at the fame time a kick in the gurs; hur perceiving that I was a men, and what was more, & courtier the took piv on me, and called for help; my fervants then came running to my a litance: they put me in Led, sent for a turgeon, bled me, urest d my wounds, and I in tome degree recovered inv senses. The next day they talked of a trepan, but I foun got rid of that dread; and after lying about a forinight in bod, warre the prince had the good ch to come every day to fee me, and land

I got abroad again. The this adventure the court has adventure the court has any of the courtiers from their beds; so that tell dined alone, I have severely by my bruises, a had tutherent to make tal reflexions.

From the Abbe Millot's Ele-

well known that the earl Iford, (Mr. Harley,) had buttibated to the difgrace ke of Marlborough. In Her the change of the mirise-Eugene came to Lonit was thought that the bit vitt was to animate by his prefence and his This great man treated ough as if he had till been Oxford having invited day to dinner, congrahim on having, at his tafirft general in Europe : replies the prince, I may for et. An elogiam the onable, as Marib rough's was principally cwing to ar to this was the duke of agh's own reply to marlard, after the battle of an the marthal's faving, the duke) had defeated tooms in Europe;" I bepeated and fuch also was the comand by the duke of Monthe doke of Marlborough term in Northamptonshire, ther almating the waterere, and laying, "he thought them equal to those of Lewis XIV. at Verfailles." No. my lord duke, my waterworks are not equal, but your grace's freeworks are much submission to her.

much superior to bis.] After the expulsion of the Stuarts, the royal prerogative was contracted within narrower bounds, the acts of arbitrary power were lefs common, civil liberty was better fecured: but the fovereign was scarce less powerful. He had al. ways at hand those resources which work upon the passions. Having places and honours at his disposal, be could bias that multitude of ambiti us or venal fouls who worthip Fortune. A contagious corruption, produced by wealth and intrigue, infected from the time of Wi ham III, those haughty prople to jealous of their liberty. Two arreconcileable parties employed against each other the fatal art of feducing cit zens, and purchating votes. In order to have a majority in parliament, they were not aftamed of changing the principles of patrictifm; and the cru t riok care to profit by an evil that favoured its designs. It carried the point in filling the lower hou a with its postizant, of sufficencing their debates, and of drawing from thence enormous fublidies, more for 114 own interest, than for the The act necessit es of the state, of triennial parliaments furnished the patriots with a refource. They had hopes of foun gaining a fupersority. But fince the duration of parliament was fixed at feven years, under Grorge L. the nation feems expoted to the attacks of desposism. In 1734, some vain attempts were made to reduce matters to their socient footing,-There have always been in Eng.

land those vigilant, zealous, incorruptible men, who have their country incessantly before their eyes, who struggle against the torrent of foreign interests, and who speak like citizens in the midst of the most corrupt assembly vernment where such men may freely speak their thoughts, where they speak them without fear, and wishout evation, has in itself a grand principle of life and vigour. But fince the crown has had a standing army, since it has had fome interests which do not concern the nation, since it can depend on the votes of a long parliament, the balance of these powers which form the English constitution, is become more difficult to support; some violent attacks on liberty, would raile a rebellion among a people that are jealous and terrible in their fury. Corruption, by destroying principles, may one day, perhaps, occasion more mischief than the violence of despotism.

" Politeness has not yet softened that fierceness of manners which the English derive from their climate, from the form of their government, and from their situation in an island. Men accustomed to the fea, inflamed by the spirit of faction, proud of liberty and riches, addicted to party disputes, wholly engrossed by their interests, their systems; hor, stery, less by sits than by principle, are to apt to disdain the art of pleasing, that they often transgress the bounds of good breeding. It frequently happens that the nobles themtelves, intermixed with the people, partake of their heats, their riots and excelles. Wealth levels rank; the great power of the commons claims the heart of the vulgar. Every out thinking himself of consequence, and fearing no man, the pride of all makes a kind of equality between all. Humour, whim, caprice, must necessarily prevail in a nation where most citizens are segardless of pleasing any one. Mif men of genius will be termented by their genius itself, according to the remark of M. de Montesquise; with a dijdain, or a diftafte for d things; they will be miferable, thugh they have such abundant reason n be bappy. To this, doubtless, is owing the frenzy of fuicide, d which there are frequent example in England.

"Courage and politics, agriculture and industry, commerce and navigation, have exalted the power of the English to the higher point which it can probably atain. The sciences and polite literature have rendered their glory still more durable. No people furpals them in learned disquisitions Their mathematicians, their philosophers, have opened an imment field to the human mind. It 🗷 fufficient to name Newton 206 Locke, geniuses the more wonderful, as they that themselves up is the sphere of nature, in order to dive into her mysteries, instead of losing themselves in fantaltic syltems to create new errors. philosophers in England have taken the false paths of impiety. But religion has found among the English some desenders without prejudices, and without fanaticism, no less powerful in their arguments, than respectable for the extent of their knowledge. The clergy having lost their ancient credit, have applied themieives to labours which procure eneral effects. They have the influence in affairs, but spress truth on the mind, conducts them to eccledignities, and emulation as talents which would be under the empire of in-

I a country where the useful erred to the agreeable, res and experiments which rethe wants of society, prinengage the attention of the

Every one knows how the English have laboured way, and what foccess they ad. In bringing to persericulture and navigation, ve fecured to themfelves inible refources. By the in-20 of the fmall pox they referred some thousands of t. It is not for us to weigh fons for or against this prac-But in whatever point of is taken, the example of an ent pation is, in this way, mgeft of all proofs; and an individual may be fearsoculation, the public ought e it.

tarning is become, in this ne of the principal ornan England; the celebrated that she has produced, are nt too well known to make fary to name them. New deep reflections, refined ts, a manly emphatical ften obscure for the sake of 4, characterize almost all of The English have enriched catre with the spoils of that ce, which they affect to debut they have taught us to more closely, to put fewer . XIII.

thackles on genius, to diffuse useful truths even in frivolous writings, to change romances themselves into schools of morality. Let us do justice to their excellent writers; our own will not be less the delight of all Europe."

From this specimen, the English reader will doubtless be carious to see the whole, and will be glad to hear that his curiosity will soon be gratisted by the ingenious pen of Mrs. Brooke.

Letter from the late Miss Talbot, to a new-born Child, Daughter of Mr. John Talbot, a Son of the Lord Chancellor.

[7 OU are heartily welcome, my dear little cousin, into this unquiet world; long may you continue in it, in all the happiness it can give; and bestow enough on all your friends, to answer fully the impatience with which you have been expected. May you grow up to have every accomplishment, that your good friend the bishop of Derry can already imagine in you; and in the mean time, may you have a nurse with a tuneable voice, that may not talk an immoderate deal of nonlease to

You are, at present, my dear, in a very philosophical disposition; the gaistics and follies of life have no attraction for you; its forrows you kindly commiserate, but however, do not suffer them to disturb your slumbers, and find charms in nothing but harmony and repose. You have as yet contracted no passed in the sufficies.

tialities, are entirely ignorant of party distinctions, and look with a perfect indifference on all human splendor. You have an absolute diflike to the vanities of drefs; and are likely for many months to observe the + bishop of Brittol's first rule of conversation, Silence; though tempted to transgress it by the novelty and strangeness of all the objects round you. As you advance farther in life, this philosophical temper will by degrees wear off: the first object of your admiration will probably be a candle; and thence, (as we all of us do) you will contract a taste for the gaudy and the glaring, without making one moral reflection upon the danger of such false admiration, as leads people, many a time, to burn their fingers. You will then begin to thew great partiality for some very good sunts, who will contribute all they can towards spoiling you; but you will be equally fond of an excellent mama, who will teach you, by her example, all forts of good qualities; only let me warn you of one thing, my dear, and that is, do not learn of her to have such an immoderate love of home, as is quite contrary_ to all the privileges of this polite age, and to give up so entirely all those pretty graces of whim, flutter, and affectation, which so many charitable poets have declared to be the prerogative of our Ah! my poor coulin, to what purpose will you boust this prerogative, when your nurse tells you, with a pious care, to fow the feeds of jealoufy and emulation as early as possible, that you have a Ine little brother come to put your nose out of joint. There will be nothing to be done then, I believe, but to be mighty good, and prove what, believe me, admits of very little dispute, (tho' it has occfioned abundance) that we girl, however people give themselves airs of being disappointed, are by no means to be despised: let the men unenvied thine in public, i is we must make their homes delightful to them; and, if they provoke us, no less uncomfortable I do not expect you, my dear, w answer this letter yet awhile; but as, I dare fay, you have the greatel interest with your papa, will beg you to prevail upon him, that we may know by a line, (before his time is engrossed by another secret committee) that you and your mass are well. In the mean time I will only affure you, that all here rejoice in your existence extremely; and that I am,

> My very young correspondent, Most affectionately yours,

C.T.

The pious and ingenious author of the above letter, who died Jan. 9. 1770, aged 48, was the only daughter of Mr. Edward Talbot, archdeacon of Berks, and younger fon of Dr. Talbot, bishop There having been of Durham. the most intimate friendship between him and the late archbifiop Secker, his widow and daughter lived as inmates in his Grace's, ismily till his death, when he left the interest of 13,000l. to them, and the furvivor of them, and afterwards the whole sam to charitable ules.

Remarks

As on a Sentence in the Law, willed Prine force et dure.

Tom's Coffee-Houft, Deverthx-Court, April 10, 1770.

S I was fitting this morning in the corner by the fire-fide e upper room of this house, gentlemen entered and took Eou of the vacant chairs about ttle round table, and one of read a news-paper to his anion: when he came to the at of the shocking wretch refused to plead to his indictat Kingfton *, the other exd much aftonifiment at the of a man, who would fubso be dying for a week in es inexpressible, rather than nimfelf upon his trial, by means he would have a poffi-, however flight, of avoiding hment; and that if he should avicted, an easy death would e otmost of his suffering in world; his friend observed, the fellow was lucky in not g been brought to trial on the sy of the affizes, for that if fentence had been paffed upon him. and the commission of the judges expired, the sentence could nor have been changed, and quoted some distant of lord chief justice. Holt, to that effect; and also said, that it had been objected by the king of Prussia, in some of what that prince calls his philosophical Works, Essays against the Existence of God, or Immortality of the Soul, &c. that the prince forts is dure was to all intents and purposes the same as giving the question, as the French call it; or, in plain English, putting a man upon the rack.

I took the liberty to interpose with my opinion, that it could not be applied to putting a person to torture, in the usual meaning of the word, when applied to judicial matters, because the torture is given to make persons acknowledge their guilt; and the other is, on the contrary, to make men deny their guilt; but that still I thought it was a ridiculous and absurd regulation or institution, and that the law seemed in some measure to confess the folly of it, for in high treason, and petty larcenies, the prisoner, though he resuled to plead,

The circumstance is as follows: A man who was charged with returning transportation, being arraigned at the last affixes at Kingston, refused to to the indetenent, unless the Judge would promise, that in ease he should wisted, his sentence should not be transportation again: Mr. Baron e remonstrated, and explained to him the impossibility of his complying in demand: and also informed him, that if he persisted in his silence, he esentenced to the peine forte dure: that he must be laid naked upon band, with a considerable weight upon him, which would be gradually ed till his death; that he would be fed with a morsel of bread, and one at of the next ditch water, daily; that he remembered two instances of abmitting for a little time to that punishment, but that neither persevered a resolution. Upon which the wretch cried out, You may die and be d yourself. The Baron answered, in the spirit of an upright judge, I cked for you, and pity you; but God forbid any thing you say, should me deviate from my duty with regard to you. The sellow, at last, and was convicted; and when he was carrying out of sourt, knocked the hanguan with a blow of his sist, plead, is judged guilty, and has the ordinary sentence, in those cases, passed upon him; if this practice should be observed in any, why not in all cases, and whatever the offence may be which the prifoner is charged with?

To this question the gentleman returned for answer, that the law was particularly attentive to the preservation of landed property; that for this reason, upon a prisoner's standing mute in general, his landed property was saved to his family; but that in petty larcenies, the offender could not be suspected of having any landed property; and in case he had, the law does not subject him to a forfeiture of it, upon his being found guilty upon pleading to his indictment; and, on the other hand, in cale of high treason, a fact not likely to be committed but by men of high rank, or of high spirit, it was judged necessary to take away from them, for the sake of the public peace, that property in land, which in the hands of their posterity, might be dangerous; and in order to make fure of fucceeding in that prudent purpose, it was necessary to alter and take away, in that particular case, the common privilege that a person had by the common law, of preserving his estate in his family, by submitting to the peine firte & dure, which many persons of that property and spirit, which would qualify or dispose them to be guilty of high treason, would certainly submit to, and go through with, provided it would enable them to preferve their estates in their families.

He owned that this was rather an apology for the deviation from the common rule of the penalty of standing mute, in these two cases, than a good defence of the rule or practice itself; that, for his part, he thought that the best desence of it, was the infrequency of its application; there having been, 25 he believed, but one infrance of a person's having gone through with it fince the last century, who was a master of a ship, charged with piratical practices, who had fome landed property, and submitted to the penalty of standing mute, and persevered in it, and was present to death in Newgate in the press-yard there, to denominated from thence,

That was the last person, you fay, Sir, I replied. The most remarkable person, as I believe, that ever submitted to that penalty, was Mr. Calverly, of a very great family in the North; who being a man of violent passion, conceived a jealouly agair it his wife, which by some unfortunate accident, was turned to such a frantic rage, that early one morning he murdered her, by splitting her skull with his battle-ax, and forced seven children the had by him to leap off the battlements of his cuffle rato the moat which furrounded it, where they all stuck fast in the mud, and were suffocated with the slime ca the water; he then mounted his horse, and galloped towards a farmer's cottage, where one of his children, an infant at the breall, was at nurse; whilst upon the roid, he was ruminating in gloomy and horrid fatisfaction upon the approach of the only matter wanting to the final completion of his zealous revenge, the moon on a fudden was darkened, he lost himself in the midd of a thick forest, the thunder of Heaven, which now flunned his ears, seemed to roll againi sent, and the pale lightning ing his foul, was, to his c imagination, the fire of hell ring punishment intolerable, ortures excruciating to mil-Mages. He Ropped, relented, ted, furrendered, and fub-I himfelf to justice. After g made his peace with Heafor the murder of his wife tildren, he was agonized by tought of having deprived ild, to referred from his dagren by the immediate interof Providence itfelf, as stated, of the estate and digfits auceftors, and of leaving tead of its due inheritance. y, and the infamy of fuch a He confidered, that when ted, his efface must go to the If he, with his own hand, anticipate the firoke of juste was informed, that the es the lands of fuch wretches crown; he therefore flood upon being arraigned, and ted with fatisfaction to the r attending that behaviour, revered in bearing the most estate was preserved for that which was a male, and from if I am not entirely misinalistic lineally descended the pre-result was a male, and the pre-result was a male, and the man well known in the and of whom the world knows nor says any thing his tragical tale likewise and the sable of the play he Yorkshire Tragedy, said a critics to be written by ware.

165

lating pain, with the patience

oto-martyr,

gentlemen complimented a my flory, and having no-

him, and summon him to thing better to do, I have, by their sent, and the pale lightning defire, sent you this account of our ling his soul, was, to his tale and conversation.

EBOR.

Esay on Flattery.

SIR,

Have the vanity to think myfelf a proficient in the art of rickling: by tickling, I mean, in plain English, flattery—I here fend you a sketch of my history, which, if you are inclined to be lazy, or—;
in short, if you think proper, you are at liberty to publish: if you do not like it, you are at liberty to make it a present, either to the husband of Venus, or to the venerable goddess Cloacina.—

The first impressions, I have been told, are the deepest-I find it true by experience—the impresfions I received at three years old, are not effaced at forty .--- How the diffant fcene rifes to my retrofpective view! Not to be tedious-my nurse first taught me to flatter, The poor old woman never attempted to wash my face, or to comb my hair, without the foothing expression of, "There's a dear -Let me wash its pretty face."-" There's a fweet creature;" and numberless other endearing phrases to the like purpole-When I grew a little older, I ttill perceived that I never was ordered to do any thing without a little bit of flattery tacked to the command—My school mistrefs bad me fay, A by itself A, and always added, " There's a " good boy"-My father, my mother, my relations, all addressed me in the fame ftvle-Mv aged grandfather too, how well I remember the hoary (age! whilft I was innocently asking him why he shook his head always, would often put his hand in his pockets, and give me a penny because I was a brave boy.—These praises, though they were only words of course, as I fince learned, then gave me great pleasure; and I found myself always disposed to love the person that bestowed them on mc-I was artful—I thought I might rule others by the same means, by which others ruled me—nor was I deceived in the fequel—however, I had not then many opportunities to try the experiment. I had an aunt, whose ill fortune it was, not to be able to get a hufband; and therefore, as is usual, she was called an old maid, before time had made her an old woman-Old maids seldom despair till they have arrived at their grand climacteric—Hence we often see ladies of fifty in the garb of fixteen. - My aunt was one of thele—It happened one day, while I was playing near her toilette, and she was repairing the depredations which nature had made in her face, by the help of art; that I unmeaningly, (it certainly must have been unmeaningly) cried out, " Law, aunty, what a " preity nose you have got! your • kand is whiter than min ... - I had no fooner uttered thele werds than the friatched me up in her arms and almost stifled me with kiss-Every day, after that lucky memont, the continued to they me new marks of her affection; Spoke well of me; was continually fiving, that I made fenfible remarks, much above my years—I was affecuated at this alteration.—She always before had looked in me with indifference and hatre. — . Ind indeed, few old maids, I have fince observed, are remarkably fond of children-However, as I did not want pente tration, I foon discovered, that's was my flattery which had gaind her favour-And, now it was, that I resolved to make flattery the ruling principle of my conduct, in future life.

М 3

Щę

When my father thought me of a proper age to go to school, he pet me to one of those schools in which youth are qualified for-in both every thing you can mention-A school I should not call it—The wfined ideas of the master looked upon this as too gross an appellation; and therefore, to prevent suftakes, he had inscribed over the portal of his manfion, in large golden letters, "The Academy."-To return from the digression: # my academy I foon found that the art of tickling was not unknown my teachers-Whenever my couls Tom, or my good aunt Deborat, came to fee me, and to enquire, & the way is, how I went on, they were fure to hear in the most extravagant terms, of all may good qualities-The usher observed, that Malter Billy was the finest young " you.h that ever he fet his eyes " on."-My militrels chucked me under the chin, and said, " It has " got a pretty face of its own, " blefs it." My matter, parting head, and looking me on the earneilly at me, used to cry, " k " really is furpriting—Such a pro-" ficiency in so thort a time! But nature has been partial—And " to be fure,—I take a great " deal of pains with him, that I " do, and the child takes vally :0 " his book." There and matt other encomiums, were given :3 me whenever my friends paid me 1 visit—But, alas! after the vik igen raked up all the remarks which I had heard, in termons and in conversations with my brother tradesmen, on the subject of frugality and temperance - on these I deglaimed on every occasion—I talked of the exorbitant price of every mecessary of life, and complained of the luxury and extravagunce of the age.—One day as I was running on at this rate, he got up from his chair, and with a vehemence not common to men of that frigid disposition which it is necesfary to have, in order to be a mifer, flapped me on the shoulders and fwore "I was the honestest, prudenteit, sensiblest fellow he ever met with."-In a few weeks the old hunks died, and bequeathed his firtune to me.

Thus, Sir, I have acquired an ample fortune—thus I have passed my life free from those animosities which an envious and contentious disposition never fails to foment thus I have gained the love and esteem of all I knew—My art of tickling has made me happy, and, I flatter myself, it has made others fo—I have increased the happiness of all who have fallen within the circle of my acquaintance, by gratifying their vanity-Whereever I was able, I have thrown an ingredient into the bitter cup of life, which never fails to sweeten it, namely, felf-applause-Yet, I confess, I have often done this at the expence of truth—I confess confession is a sign of repentance, and repentance claims forgiveness. Bring now above dependance, to explate my crime, I have taken the resolution to give the tribute of praise only where it is due-As p specimen of the justaels of my commendation, I affure you, that I entirely approve of your defign, and that none withes success to it more ardently than

Your humble fervant, TICKLER.

The Adventures of Scarmentado; a Satirical Novel by Voltaire.

When I was 15 years old, my father sent me to Rome to finish my studies. Monsignor Profonde, to whom I was recommended, was a strange kind of man, and one of the most terrible scholars breathing; he took it into his head to teach me the categories of Aristotle, and I narrowly escaped his throwing me into the category of his minions. I faw many processions and exorcisms, and much oppression. Signora Fatelo, a lady of no rigid morals, was foolish enough to like me: she was woord by two youthful monks, the Rev. Father Poignardini, and the Rev. Father Aconiti, but she put an end to the pretentions of both of them, by granting me her good graces; yet, at the same time, I narrowly escaped being excommunicated and poisoned.

poisoned. I lest Rome exceedingly well pleased with the architecture of St. Peter's church.

I went to France, in the reign of Lewis furnamed the Just; the first thing I was asked, was, whether I choic to breakfast on a collop of the Marshal d'Ancre, whose body the public had roafted, and which was distributed very cheap to those that desired to take it. This nation was at that time torn to pieces by civil wars, occasioned fometimes by ambition, fometimes by controverly; and those intestine broils had for the space of forty years deluged the most delightful country in the world with blood. Such were the liberties of the Gallican church: the French, faid I, are naturally wife; what makes them deviate from that character? They are much given to joking and pleafantry, and yet they commit a massacre; happy that age in which they shall do nothing but joke and make merry.

From hence I fet out for England; the same fanatical temper excited here the same surious zeal; a let of devout Roman Catholics, had refolved for the good of the church, to blow up the king, the royal family, and the parliament with gunpowder, and thereby free the nation from those heretics. 1 was thewn the fpot where the bleffed Q. Mary, daughter to Henry VIII. had cauf d above 500 of her subjects to be burnt alive. A fious Hibernian priest affured me, it was a very laudable action, firit, because those they had burned were English; and, 211y, because they were wretches who never to it any holy water, and did not believe in Sr Patrick.

From England I went to Holland, in hopes of finding more peace and tranquillity among a more flegmatical people. At my arrival at the Hague, I was eater, tained with the beheading of a venerable old patrior, the prime minister Barnevelt, who was the most deserving man in the Republic. Struck with pity at the fight, I asked what his crime was, and whether he had betrayed the fate? He has done worse, replied a preacher with a black cloak, he believes that we can be faved by good works, as well as by faith. You are sensible, that were such systems suffered to prevail, the common-wealth could not long sublist, and that a severe law is necellary to check and refute such scandalous errors. A deep Dutch politician told me with a figh, that such commendable actions could not last for ever: Alas, Sir! said he, our people naturally incline towards toleration; some day or other they will adopt it; I shudder at the thought: believe me, Sir, pursued he, 'tis a mere chance that you actually find them fo laudably and zealoufly inclined as to cut of the heads of their fellow-creatures for the sake of religion. were the lamentable words of the Dutchman; for my own part, i thought proper to abandon a country, whole feverity had no compensation, and therefore embarked for Spain.

l arrived at Seville in the finest scason in the year. The court was there, the galleons were arrived, and all seemed to proclaim jey, abundance, and protusion. I espied at the end of a beautiful alley, full of orange and lemon-trees, a vast concourse round an amphisheatre richly adorned; the king, the queen,

the infants and infantas, ed under a stately canopy, regainst that august factother throne, higher and gnisicent had been creeted, e of my travelling compahat unless that throne was for God, I could not see of it; but these indiscreet sing over-heard by a grave i, I paid dear for having them. In the mean time, sed we were to be diverted arousal, wrestling, or bull-when I perceived the

when I preceived the quifitor afcend that throne, tow his bleffing upon the d people. Then appeared of menks, filing off two ; fome were white, others ick, grey, and brown; feme and fome bare-footed; ad beards, and fome had ome /ere with cowls, and ithout. Then came the mer, followed by about retches, guarded by a world ices and alguazils, and coith garments, upon which ainted flames and devils. fellows were Jews, who sot altogether be compelled don the law of Mofes, and as who had married their chers, or perhaps refused to

Nueftra Dama d'Atocha, part with their money in of the brothers Hierony-

Prayers were faid very y, after which all those is were tortured and burnt, concluded the ceremony, to at edification of all the roy-ly.

tame night, while I was o bed, two messengers from suisition came to my lodgath the holy Hermandad.

They embraced me tenderly, and, without speaking a word, carried me out of the house, and conducte ed me into a dungeon not incommoded by heat, adorned with a carious cracifix, and a mat inflead of a bed; after I had been there fix weeks, the father inquifitor fent his compliments, and defired to fee me: I obeyed the fummons: he received me with open arms, and after having embraced me with more than paternal fondacis, told me, he was very forry they had put me in fo bad a lodging, but that all the apartments happened to be full, it was impossible to give me a better; adding, however, that he hoped I fhould be better taken care of another time. Then he asked me very lovingly, whether I knew why I was put in there. I told the reverend father, I supposed it was for my fins. Well, my dear child. replied he, but for what fin? make me your confident-fpeak. I did all I could to bethink myfelf of fome mifdemeanor, but in vain : upon which he made me recollect my imprudent words: in thort, I recovered my liberty, after baving undergone a severe discipline, and paid 30,000 reals. I went to take leave of the grand inquifitors he was a very polite man, and afked me how I relished the holidays they had given me? I told him they were delightful, and at the fame time went to prefs my companions to quit this enchanting country. They had time enough, during my confinement, to learn all the great atchievements of the Spaniards, for the take of religion. They had read the memoirs of the famous bishop of Chiapa, by which it appears, that ten millions of infidels were murdered in America to convert the rest. I imagined that bishop might exaggerate a little, but suppose the victims were but half that number, the facrifice was still admirable.

Notwithstanding the disagreeable adventures I had met with in any travels, I determined to finish my tour, and accordingly I embarked for Turkey, fully resolved never more to intermeddle with other people's affairs, nor give my judgment about public shews.
These Turks, said I, to my companious, are a set of unbaptized miscreants; and of course more cruel than the reverend fathers of the inquisition. Let us be silent among the Mahometans.

I arrived at Constantinople, where I was strangely surprized to see more christian churches than in Candia; but much more so, to fee also a numerous train of monks, permitted to offer their prayers freely to the Virgin Mary, and to curse Mahomet, some in Greek, others in Latin, and fome in Armenian. How reasonable are the Turks! (exclaimed I) whilst the christian world stains a spotless religion with blood; these insidels tolerate doctrines which they abhor, without molestation or inhumanity. The Grecian and Latin christians were at mortal enmity in Contantinople, and like dogs that quarrelled in the streets, persecuted each other with the utmost violence. The Grand Vizir protected the Greeks, whose patriarch accused me before him of having supped with the Latins, and I was most charitably condemned by the divan, to receive one hundred blows with a lath, upon the fole of the foot, with permission, however, to be excused for 500 se-The next day the Grand Vizir was strangled; and the day following, his facceffor, who was for the Latin party, and who was not strangled till a month afterwards, condemned me to the fame punishment, for having supped with the Grecian patriarch; and, in short, I was reduced to the sad necessity to frequent neither the Latin nor the Greek church. To make myself amends, I determined to keep a mistress, and pitched upon a young Turkish lass, who was as tender and wanton tête à tête, as the was pious and devout at the mosque. One night in the soft transports of her love, the embraced me passionately, calling out alla, alla, alla. These are the sacramental words of the Turks. I took them to be those of love, and therefore cried out in my turn, alla, alla, alla; upon which the said, heaven be praised! you are a Turk. In the morning the Iman came to circumcise me, but as I made some difficulty, the Cadi of our quarters, a loyal gentleman, very kindly told me he purposed to impale me. I saved my foreskin, and my backfide, with a thousand sequins, and sew into Persia, firmly resolved never to go to the Latia or Grecian mass in Turkey, nor ever more to fay aila, alla, alla, at a rendezvous.

At my arrival at Ispahan, I was asked which I was for, white or black sheep? I answered, that the slesh of a white, or black sheep was equal to me, provided it was tender. It must be known, that the factions of the white and black sheep still divided the Persians, who imagined, I meant to laugh

ree entered the city gates, and a fad affair to extricate from, which I did howaith a good number of feby means of which I got at of the hands of the est as far as China, with an eter, who informed me, that the only country where one live freely, gaily, and peace-The Tarcars had rendered lves makers of it with fire vord, and the Rev. fathers fuits, on one fide, and the ed fathers the Dominicans, other, faid that they drew pwards God every day, withy body's knowing it. Sure sever was a fet of more zeaaverters, for they perfecuted sother by turns; they fent ne whole volumes of calumwherein they reciprocally each other insidels and preora. There was particularly ble quarrel among them, ahe method of making a bow. efaits taught the Chinese to their parents after the mantheir country; and the Dons, on the contrary, held tey paght to bow to them, ie manner of Rome. I hapto be taken by the Jesuits Dominican, and they told rearian majesty, that I was The fapreme ope's Ipy. I immediately ordered the mandarin, who ordered a t, who ordered four guards :# and bind me, with all the my sied on fuch occasions. brought, after one hundred orty genufications, before ijefty, who afted me, whereally was the Pope's fpy, and whether it was true, that his holiness intended to come in person to dethrone him? I answered, that the pope was a priest, threescore and ten years of age; that he lived four thousand miles distant from his facred Tartaro-Chinese majesty; that he had about two thousand foldiers, who monated the guard with a parafol; that he never dethroned any body; and, in flore, that his majefty might sleep in quier. This was the laft unfortunate adventure I met with in the whole course of my travels. I was fent to Macao, where I embarked for Europe.

173

I was obliged, in order to refit my ship, to put into an harbour, on the coast of Golconda. I laid hold of that opportunity, to go and fee the court of the great Aureng-zeb, to much renowned for its wonderful magnificence: he was then at Dehli; and I had the good fortune to fee him the day of that pompous ceremony, in which he received the heavenly prefent fent him by the fheriff of Mecca. viz. The broom, with which they had swept the holy house, the Caaba, and the Beth alla. That broom is a symbol which sweeps away all uncleannels of foul, Aureng-zeb had no occasion for it, fince he was the most pious man in all Indoftan. 'Tie true he had cut his brother's throat, poisoned his father, and put to death, by torture, about 20 Rayas, and as many Omrahs, yet nothing wis talked of but his devotion, which, they faid, was without equal, except that of his most facred majefty Muley Ilmael, the most serene emperor of Morocco, who never failed to cut off leveral heads, evesy Friday after prayers.

174 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

To all this I spoke not a word, my travels and adventures had taught me to bridle my tongue; and I was very sensible, it was not mine to decide between the piery of the emperors of India and Morocco.

I had not yet seen Africa; but whilst I was debating with myself, whether it was better to fatisfy this last inclination, or fail for Italy, my ship was taken by the Negroes, and I was, of coerfe, carried thither. Our captain railed against the captors, asking them the reason, why they thus outrageously violated the laws of nations? they replied, your nose is long, and ours is flat; your hair is straight, and our wool is curled; you are white, and we are black; confequently we ought, according to the facred and unalterable laws of nature, to be ever enemies-You buy us on the coast of Guinea, as if we were not human creatures, then treat us like beafts, and with repeated blows compel us to an eternal digging into the mountains, in order to find a ridiculous yellow dust, of no intrinsic value, and not worth a good Egyptian onion; therefore when we meet with you, and are the strongest, we make you our slaves, and force you to till our ground, or elfe we cut off your nose or ears. We had nothing to say against so wise a discourse. was employed to till the ground of an old Negroe woman, having no inclination to lose either my nose or my ears; and after a twelvemonth's flavery, I was redeemed by some friends I had written to for that purpose.

Having thus seen the world, and all that is great, good, and admirable in it, I resolved to return to Candia, where I married a little after my arrival. I was foos a cuckold, but plainly perceived it to be the most harmless and tolerable situation in life.

The most criminal ust always the most unhappy. A moral tale; by the celebrated Helvetius.

WANT formerly assembled a number of men in the defarts of Tartary. Deprived of all, faid one, we have a right to all. The law which strips us of necessiries to augment the superfluities of some Rajahs is unjust. Let us struggle with injustice. A treaty can no longer sublist, where the advantages cease to be mutual. We must force from our oppresfors the wealth which they have forced from as. At these words the orator was filent; a mormer of approbation ran thro' the whole affembly: they applauded the speech; the project was noble, and they resolved to execute it; but they were divided about the The bravest rose first. means. Force, faid they, has deprived as of ail; it is by force we much recover it. If our Rajahs have by their tyrannic injustice inatched from us even what is necessary, so far as to require us to lavish apon them our own substance, our labour, and our lives, why fhould we refule to our wants what the tyrants permit to their injudice? At the confines of these region, the Bashaws, by the presents which they require, divide the profits of the caravans; they plunder the men, enflaved by their power. and by fear. Lefs unjust and more brave than them, let us asset arms: let valour decide the , and let our riches be at e price of our courage. We right to them. The gift rery points out those who shake off the setters of ty-

Let the hosbandman withingth or courage, plow, sow, ip. It is for us that he has ed in the harvest.

who, having more wit and arage feared to expose themto danger; yet let us owe g to force, but all to imposable from the hands of credulity, re shall in vain perhaps atto fnatch by force. Let us ourselves with the name and aits of the Bonzes or the Braand encompass the earth, tall see every one eager to our wants, and even our fe-

s party appeared bafe and enfures.

lly to those who were fierce urageous. Being divided in n, the affembly separated: rty spread itself into India, and the confines of China. countenances were auftere. eir bodies macerated. They ed on the people; they difamilies, caused the children disinherited, and applied The abstance to themselves. gave them lands, built them is, and fettled great reveipon them. They borrowed m of power, in order to make an of understanding bow to ke of superstition. In thort, abdued all minds by keeping eptre carefully concealed unie rags of milery, and the of penance.

During this time their old brave companions retired into the defarts; furprized the caravans; attacked them fword in hand, and divided among themselves the booty.

One day, when doubtleft the battle had not turned to their advantage, the people frized one of thefe robbers: they conducted him to the next city, they prepared the fcaffold, and they led him to execution. He walked with a firm Rep, till he found in his way, and knew again, under the habit of a Bramin, one of those who had feparated from him in the defart. The people respectfully surrounded. the Bramin, and conducted him to his paged. The robber stopped at feeing him: just Gods! cried. he, though equal in crimes! what a difference is there in our deftiny ! what do I say !- Equal in crimes? In one day he has, without fear, without danger, without courage, made more widows and opphass figh, and deprived the empire of more riches, than I have pillaged in the whole course of my life. He had always two vices more than I. cowardice and falshood: yet I am treated as a villain, he honoured as a faint: they drag me to the fcaffold, him they lead to his pagod: me they impale, him they adore.

A Fortune with a Wife no ungenerous Demand in a Husband.

Have frequently heard my brother bachelors reflected on for mercenary views in their matrimonial purfuits; and every girl with little or no fortune, is fure to fligmanage

176 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

matize the man who requires money with his wife, as a downright fortune-bunter, in the odious sense of the word. But, under the shelter I now write, I dare tell these pretty difinterested maidens, that the man who is under a legal obligation to provide for his family, Is no such unreasonable monster in expecting a wife to furnish some thing besides her fair person; and even when he has the name of receiving what is called a fortune with his wife, the affair is so managed after he is entangled by affection, that he has generally very little to boast of; and is extremely well off if the interest of this fortune indemnifies him for the extraordinary charges a family brings upon him.

But I will not let these blooming accusers off quite so easy; the tables may be fairly turned upon them; and if fome men are rendered cautious by outliving their boyish attachments, and are hence charged with mercenary views; (for I speak not of professed adventurers) it may justly be said that the generality of girls are real fortune-hunters in the utmost latitude of the word. How many base parents are in specious circumstances, who drop artful hints of what they will do for a daughter, and when advantageous offer appears, will encourage a young man until they think he has swallowed the bair, and then discountenance the connection: when the young lady co-operating, a private match takes place, and the enraged papa or mamma, declares they will not give what they never had to be-How! The poor dupe, in such case, has no remedy but to take home the wife of his bosom, and make the best he can of his bargain; if he makes a good hasband, it argues a generosity of temper, and a regard for his own peace and domestic happiness, which are not often found. Indeed if the girl is as innocent as himself in the affair, none but a brute will consider her answerable for the trick; and if the marriage proses unfortunate, much, very much, has such a parent to answer for.

But, in a more general view, young ladies are too often the duper of their own, or their parents asbition. If miss has a tolerable sace, and her father can give her ave hundred, or a thousand pounds, her first expectations extend at least to a carriage; and on this fide thirty, which period she procrastinates as long as she decently can, the turns up her pretty note at the plain tradesman behind a counter. If her fortune extends to fifteen hundred, or two thoufund pounds, the fets her cap at a coronet, and, because some such prizes have now and then turned up in the lottery of matrimory, her expectations seldom descend to a reasonable pitch, until se has no reason to hope for any thing: she has no remedy then: referve, but to rail at all mankind, and grow grey in protesting against matrimony.

Such, indeed, are the high notions and habits of dissipation that young ladies are ridiculously educated in, which their unturored understanding is seldom able to stem in the hoity-toity hey-day of life; so that it is equally dangerous for a sober thinking many whom they generally undervalue and despise, to take a wife either with, or without money. A tinfel

• ,• •

fo P

A faits their eyes, they fly he arms of fuch, and hence nony comes into difgrace by being treated according to deferts. Hence also arises that of calibacy, which (prosbing out of my view) is a justly charged to the account men.

sin. A father who can barely instead of fending an able f a daughter out to fervice, ting her in some industrious of life to maintain herfelf: can but raife a flik gown or r ber, with a few ribbons, often depends himfelf, and s her to depend, upon eng the affections of fome filly other of property, by whom, a her cloaths are all her porhe is to be supported in a I character, which the has I claim to. If the scheme I am thocked at representing alequences! Yes, ye unwife, el parents, this filmulation ale vanity is the grand fource Actuation: more unhappy valk the freets from this, Elft cause, than merely from daction of worthless men; if you acted a parental part ng your daughters a fuitable ducation, they would in gebe fortified against. But I ed of a disagreeable subject; come truth will be construed itended invective against a sich I honour, in general, . with which, unhappily, trutinizing perhaps too nare I have never been able to t particular attachment; a which was always in view, t being yet accomplished. I have traced my subject than I fift intended, which

. XIII.

was only to obviate the accusation which disappointed fair ones are continually bringing against the men for not marrying; this, in general terms, they are continually urging us to j but, in so gay and luxurious an age, the follies of which women ever take the lead in, they tither do not underfland, or despite, the proper means of effecting. They may thate the alternative, but either case tenders them very unfit help-mates for thofe who are qualified to make good hulbands. This is found reafon, huibands. which all the wit and ridicule of a female pen, or tongue, however well pointed, cannot put to fbame.

A Debottaiory Speech, by a wellaffected Tanner, to the County of Berkshire, met at Abingdon, the 2d of April, 1649, for the Election of Pembroke, to the Knight of the Shire.

Honest Friends;

7 O U that are of the free-borne people of this land, I speak to none eife, and lovers of the army, and the true English interest, all men else have forfeited their freedomes. I am full of anguith and trouble for your fakes. when I behold this day. I fear you are in a way to reine yourfelves, unleffe the Lord be merciful to you. The thing you meet for, troubles me not a little. 'Tis to choose a knight: Truly I hoped, and I hope we all hoped, to have done making knights by this time. The thing you meete to choose troubles me more. This fellow that was a lord, this Pembroke, this Montgomery, this

Herbert, this what shall I call him? call him what you will: we were promised a representative to begin on June next, and this parliament to end the last of this month; if so, why should we send this sellow thither to make mouthes for three weekes, and talke of dogs and hawkes? I say, let us have the representative, or we are cheated. But if we must make one knight more, let it not be Pembroke, he is no way fit for it. Confider him as a lord, and none of the wifest lords neither; and then consider how many wifer and fitter persons, we have for parliament-men than ever a lord of them all: and what a brand it will be to us and our country to choose a lord, such a lord; and furely, unlesse you are fooles and madmen, you will not choose him. Againe, consider him as a lord, and so he is no freeborne commoner, and so not capable of our election. Is there not an act against king and lords? if there is, then let us have no lords, unlesse you intend to have a king to.

Let us be wise; we may see a defigne in this lord as plain as the nose on his face. He was alwayes false, salse to the king that loved him, false to the lords that sate eight yeares with him; and doe you not think he will be false to the commons too? I warrant you. Is not Michael Oldsworth, this lords man, a parliament - man? Are not his, and other lords fonnes parliament-men? If he get in too, the time will come, when the house of commons will be all lords, and lords fonnes, and lords fervants, and then lords will be voted up againe, and king be in request againe, which if we live to fee againe, we have spun a sur thread.

If all this which I have faid be true, as it is impossible it should be otherwise; why should we not look on this turn coat lord as a cheat, as one that comes to betray and undoe the free born people, and switch him out of the country ?

I have done: if we must choose a knight, let him not be a lord: we doe not read in all the scripture of any lord was ever chosen knight of the shire for Barkshire. But rather let us choose none at all, and unanimoully petition the parliament to dissolve, that the representative may succeed, and none but ourselves have any share in the gubernation and government of this commonwealth.

A godly Speech, Spoken by Philip Herbert, late Earl of Pembroke, Cc. as it was beard with much Content without an Oath.

Gentlemen,

T T was not the old fashion to make speeches before you chose your knights, but I hope you like it the better for not being old, I am fure I doe; give us old fashions againe, we mult have king and lords, our old religion, and old lawes, and a hundred things older I hate any thing than Adam. that's old, unlesse it be an old man, for Adam was an old man and so am I, and I have mysels for being an old man, and therefore will love you, if yu'le make me a new knight. The gentleman that spake before me, I know not where to have him, he is an individuan wagum. He is angry the representative goes not on: he is angry iament goes not off; he is am a lord; he is angry I be none; he is angry I seek our knight, and he would of that sort of seekers, who seeke nor finde: and he es, I am not to be chosen no free borne commoner. e is a Jesuite by his subtle ats: but though I have no I hope I have reason, to him, and satisfie you. ver, I am a free born com-

179

All those three words fit

I am borne. how came I hither into the

I am free.
ccounts for last yeares exame to six and twentyi pounds, that's faire you'l when you have chosen me ight, I'll carry you every s son, the whole county, Itshire, and we'll be merry, t and hawke, and I'll be as n emperor. So I am free

I am a commoner,
I been so often at common, and common halls, to be ed no commoner? Are not all turn'da grasing? Was common swearer before I.
lectures, and a common ever since, and am not I our of Oxford, where all noners? So I am a com-

I am no lord.

n, why should I come hipe knight of your shire?

Igh I am a lord, is not o? and yet he is a parlian; and is not Bradshaw sident? But I am no lord.

am for the parliament; I am for voting down the house of lords. And to tell you truth, I never loved the King since he was dead, and those that are lords goe in black for him, but I keep my old blue still, and my diamond hatband, though the crown jewels are sold. Therefore you may choose me well enough.

You must choose me.

Why came I hither else? why did Cromwell bid me come hither? and I bid my steward come hither to lay in provision, and gather voyces. If my stewards bill be right, every throat that votes for me costs me twenty pound.

Choose me, if you would have a representative. I that have been Lord of Pembroke and Montgomery, two counties may well represent one.

Choose me if you would have no representative. For I'le doe and vote what you list, and so choosing me, you choose yourselves. So that whether you would have a representative or no, the best way is to choose me.

But let me tell you by the way; now the parliament is fallen into the happy way of making acts of parliament, let them continue. This is one of the advantages you have by loofing the King: you may have an act of parliament for what you please; and that's better than ordinance, and lasts longer, for an ordinance of parliament was good no longer than this parliament, which though it last for ever, an act lasts longer, because that lasts for ever, whether the parliament last or no.

For my religion.

Who questions it? I never changed it, I was for bishops when there were bishops; and I was for N 2 visitors visitors when there were none. It is well known I am an independent, and had beene so twenty yeares ago had it not been for Michael Oldsworth, and will be so as long as the parliament please; I have been an old courtier, and that's an old court, and the highest court, and old courtiers always love to follow new fashions. That religion is in fashion now.

I am a chancellour of Oxford, which is hardby, therefore choose me: some of you have sonnes and cozens there, all that are a kinne to any that give their voices for me, shall be heads of colledges, and canons of Christ Church, though there be a hundred of them. The rest of you shall have the leases of all the university lands amongst you; what, am not I chancellour?

The place I stand for, is knight of the shire. None but Kings can make knights, make me your knight, you are all Kings: and it will be an honour to me, and my posterity, to have it recorded, I was the first lord that was knighted by so many kings.

I know now, you cannot but choose me; I knew so before I came hither, and therefore I thank you beforehand, and invite you home.

I will conclude with that very exordium, wherewith a famous gentleman that was of this parliament, concluded his speech upon the like occasion, "Behold your knight."

Essay on good Humour.

HUMAN Nature ever was, and ever will be the same.

It only takes diffent methods of displaying itself according to the genius of the people, the authority or licentioninels of time and place, Thus a nymph of the Hottentots, who breaks the grifle of her child's nose, and anoints it with greafe and foot, is equally as well pleased with the contrivance to increase what they think beasty, as our delicate European dames are, when they spoil their own and their children's complexions by washes and paint. Fancy and imitation are the guides of tafte: why then may not the tawny mother admire her footy fon, and blefs his goggling eyes, his blubber lips, his woolly head and delicate complexion? Why not laugh as Beartily at our want of discernment as we do at theirs?, The reason is every whit as obvious to them on their fide the question, as it is to us on ours. Black teeth and extravagant long nails, are the greatest ornaments of the Siamese; painted bodies, and jewels dangling from their lips and notes, is the fine taste of the Americans. " Oh, odious creatures!—Ridiculous tafte!" fays a London or Parifian Belle.—And why so, my pert miffes? Had it been your fate to have been born even in this polite fome two thousand years sooner, you might have been as great adepts in plaistering your bodies as you are now at daubing your faces. A star on your arm might have had as fine an effect in those days, as Bruffels or Mechlia has in these. A crescent painted on your forehead might have been efteemed equal to a French fly-cap, and the meridian fun displayed ia full lustre on your delicate naked bosoms might have had more attractive owers, than the dazzling a modern birth-day diamacher, But to be fety, my pretty fair one, a wish to please? Would your loveradore you? Nay, f far greater confequence er, woold you wish to be -" Yes," Then fludy to ry perion around you fo. find for more fatisfaction pleafure to another, than it yourself. There is a benignity in conveying to another, which only é can give you any idea ir own felicity depends, t meafure, upon the proon of this principle.

was left to the care of fortune, at the age of fe-

Her mother, knowing s virtue and folid princioght thefe her propereft She thought right, seasty and fortune, which confiderable, drew crowds ring fops, and fortuneakes, to her farine. The gined fo much youth and e, could never refift their sta; the beaus depended firiking charms of their i paper-fkulls. Had Fiaso disposed, here was an eld before ber, in which at have fully indulged the Ther age and fex, and laway, at once, both her t and happiness. She, gave all thefe their anfast as they came, but nuch (weetness and fentiat the awed the rakes, and the fools.

as in her twentieth year ft young Lovemore paid :see to her. This youth a very different complexion from any of her former humble fervants; he loved her heartily for her beauty; but he loved her more for her good-humour and good fenie. He law how completely happy the man muß be, who gained to rich a prize; and the bare thought of a possibility of loung her, gave him more real uneatinels, while it lafted, than it is in the power of beauty alone to create. She perceived his merit, and observed how respectfully he admired her. As it was contrary to the goodness of her heart to keep any one in a flate of suspence, the was no fooner affured of the equity of his intentions, but the made him both easy and happy, by giving her hand where her heart dictated. Those maxims which preserved her in her youth, continued and increased her happiness in an advanced age.

Her husband is for ever extolling the darling of his heart, and expatiating on her virtues; indeed every one that knows her admires her, and blessings flow from every tongue on the head of the good, the benevolent Flavia.

On the Origin of Signs denoting Tradet.

A S, with respect to figns at leak, London is become a kind of new Jerusalem, in which "old things are done away, and "all things are become new," let me, before the remembrance of them also is gone, record something concerning them that may become an object of learning to posterity, as the symbols of Egypt, and the coins of Palmyra are to us.

It is highly probable, as others N 2 have have observed, that signs were originally fymbolical representations of certain trades, which the artificer or dealer hung out, to intimate, by a kind of univerfal language, what particular necessaries he fold With this view, the or made. woollen-draper hung out a woolpack; the retailers of linen tied up a few yards by way of felloon, the representation of which is still feen over the windows of their shops; the barber exposed a head, fince converted to a long Rick, because that also is called a pole; the ironmonger a frying-pan, before we were poisoned by copper; the shoemaker a last; and the vintner a tun.

But as luxury increased, and trades multiplied, imagination was soon exhausted in devising symbols, or if fymbols could have been contrived, to express them in all their varieties, they would no longer have been generally understood. To discover the trade by the fign, would have become as difficult, as to discover the funtiments of a hieroglyphic, in which the wings of an eagle are added to the body of a lion, and the tail of a ferpent, to express the virtues of a prince, who polless d courage, activity, and wisdom. Another insuperable objection would also very soon have arisen, from the complication of various things in a symbol or hiereglyptic; it would want a name, and for that reason could never be a direction to the house, at which it should be set up as a sign. it was necessary, therefore, that a fign thould be tome mark affixed to a house, of which a perfect idea was connected with its name, and by which any particular house might be distinguished from all others in the same street or district, signs soon became representations of some sensible object, as a dog, a horse, a bear, or a lion, without any regard to the trade or presented on in the house, before which they were hung up.

As it was necessary to vary the figu, oftner than new objects could easily be found, a very convenient diversity was introduced, by representing the same objects of different colours; thus had we blue boars, green dragons, black horfes, and white horses; and lions, black, white, golden, and red. fomething extraordinary, that when art had so far departed trem == ture, as to give fictitions colours to one animal, the did not, for the fame convenience, give detriess colours to ail; yet we have no blue horses, or green b ars, nor did I ever hear of the red bust, or the white bull. It is also remarkable, that though all our lions, which are painted yellow, arecalled golden lions, we never thould have exalted the white lion to a filter one. In Calais, however, there is an inn called the filver lio..; co : national genius differ even 14 the denomination of a fign! figns, in whatever light they are confidered, were certainly the effect of a general want of literature, and therefore can no longer be thought necessary, without national difgrace. It is very well known, that there was a time, when an act was made for the encouragement of learning, or, as it is generally called, for the beautiful the clergy, which, when a felon was condemned to be hanged, gave him his life if he could read a verse in the Bible, opened at a venture, which was therefore called his

##: k•

183

Thus was the fond duced to give his child ning, not that he might e advantage be an ironest t that with less danger he How it came, a thief. wife ancestors thought fit age learning and larceny and thus fow tares with sat, we may as well not we are happy that fo rop has been produced of , and we must get rid of as we can. But it is ertain, that when it was xpedient to make such a increasing the number of could read, it was no-> distinguish houses by inflead of writing, and houses may be diffinsetter by writing than

There is at present child among the poorest sople, who at seven or tra old, cannot read a me and trade upon his window-shutter; and we want the sign-painter known, however, to polt long after figns became y, it was not unufual for t shop-keeper to lay out pon a fign, and the cu--work with which it was s houle, lo as to project o the middle of the ftreer, urnish a less consi 'erable th a flock in trade. I credibly informed, that many figns and fignn Ludgate-Hill, which I hundred pounds; and uch was laid out by a a fign of the queen's ould have gone a good way towards decorating the original for a birth-night.

I remember to have feen three angels, not far from Somerfet-house, in the Strand, which by the thumbs and notes, I knew to be the work of a celebrated artist, who, to borrow a word from the prefent fathionable cant, figures in the exhibition. And there was not long fince in Pater-nofter Row, a head of Mr. Pope, by another artifl, not less eminent, who upon that occafion, condetcended to oblige his friend; but if I am glad that one opportunity of filly extravagance is taken away from our fine gentlemen of the shop, I am forry that a fet of industrious artificers have loft their trade; it is always very hurtful to turn money into a new channel: to take away an annual profit from those who have been accustomed to it, does more mischies, than giving it to those who have not been accustomed to it, can do good. He that has lived without it, can live without it dill; but he cannot live with our it, to whom habits of life long contracted have made it necessary.

But I shall now take notice of some strange corruptions, which, by enange of customs, by the gradual obscurity which time throws round unrecorded events, and the inaccuracy of all oral linguise, have happened with respect to signs.

It is well known that among other figns which were lately taken down, there was the bull and mouth, and the bull and gate; how a bull and a gate might come together, it was very easy to conceive; but what should join a bull and a mouth, fure no mortal can guess; yet a monstrous pair of lips and a bull have been many years hung up, painted together upon a board, as a sign for an inn, so considerable, as to give name to the street where it stands.

N 4 goels;

Those who are at all acquainted with English history know, that one of our princes was born at Bologne in France, and was therefore dislinguished by the name of Henry of Bologne. In compliment to this prince, one Roger du Bourg, after having himself been many times in France, took a house just within the old wall of the city near Alderigate; and, converting it into an inn, put up the fign of the mourb or barbour of Bologne, which was called the Bologne-Mouth, as we call the harbours on our coast Portsmouth, and Plymouth. What the success of du Bourg was, we cannot certainly tell, but probably it was confiderable, for it produced a rival not far distant, who, as he could not put up the same sign, put up one that might easily be confounded with it, the gate, instead of the barbour of the town, which was called the Bologne-Gate.

There is an inn in the Borough still standing, which is known to have been the house from which the pilgrims fet out to pay their devotions to St. Thomas à Becket, at Canterbury, whose tales have been recorded by our old poet Chaucer. This inn was formerly distinguished by the sign of a herald's coat without sleeves, called a Tuberd. At that time, when our processions were by cavalcade, and when tilts and tournaments were held on every public occasion, a herald and his office, and his coat, were well known. But the name of his coat furvived the n membrance of it, and the hose, like other houses, long retained the name of the fign, after the fign was destroyed; when, upon four occasion, it was thought necessary to put up a new fign for the Tabera inn, nothing was known by a name any thing like Taberd, but a kied of spotted dog, with long ears, which was called a Talbet; a spotted dog, therefore with long cars, was painted upon a board, infeat of the herald's coat, and the ica continued, under a different symbol, to be distinguished by the same pame.

But the present method of writing the name and the trade of our citizens over their doors, however explicit, is, like all other sublunary things, subject to error and inconvenience.

Not long ago, as I was walking along the Strand, I cast my eyes upon one fide of a window which projected in half an octagon from the house, and I read the words Hanging Warebouse, writion in large gold letters: banging, thought l, is an operation that used to be performed among us too rarely to support a reputable house-keeper it a warehouse, which attracts the notice of passengers by its splendid appearance in one of our principal streets. I went on, and over the window of a corper house new Golden-square, I read in letten equally conspicuous, Children made bore.

This shop, said I to myself, may probably get more customers than a hanging nuarebouse; but surely, thus publickly to advertise the making of children, is a most slagitious breach of public decency. As I came back, however, looking up ne thop in the other fireet. Hofe for men, avenue, and h I found the rest of the) ebildren made bere, teollowed upon turning the When I came to read the line of my femi-oftagon at chouse, I found the man's and upon looking back, I hat it flood between the The paper, and those which ad before, banging quarefarely our house-keepers > divide the words which heir name and their trade, r part of them may neceliply that there are more, betray fome Frenchman, bookseller may hire to run England, that he may his travels when he goes to the affertion, that we advertise the making of

184

, and a convenient wareor the accommodation of titudes who in our dark go out of the world in a Absurdities as gross as we o, and do still see, in the s of our country by fo, and of foreign countries satives of our own.

long been the cultom of our artificers, who keep a here they fell what they to use a kind of mixed partly literal, and partly paic. The commodity is i by a symbol or a sample, are laconically informed, by with as well as fold, by a maker; thus Mr. Day at a hat, and inscribes his y with Day maker; and y does the same by a sockinhabitant of India, therewhom these words, and others of the fame kind, should be construed, might be tempted to think that he was not in another kingdom only but in another planet, among beings of a supersion order, the makers of kings, popes, tempess, dew, and daylight.

A diligent observer, however, of these civic inscriptions, will often be amuled by the happy union of professions with names; and of different names with each other in partnership. Who but muft have noted the happy junction of Thing and Wife, in Ludgate-fireet, and of Spinnage with Lamb, Sage with Giffing, Bowyer with Fletcher, and many others, in different parts of the town, but particularly Long and Shere in High Holborn, a conjunction which must produce that medium, which has been celebrated by philosophers and poets in all ages and countries. Between Bowyer and Fletcher, perhaps all my readers may not know the relation: it is therefore necessary to acquaint them, that before the invention of fire-arms, two trades concurred in the making an arrow. One formed and feathered the Maft, who was called a fleebiere, from the Prench word fleche, an arrow, and the other prepared and fixed on the point, who was called an arrowfaith, Flechiere was eafily corrupted into Fletcher, and arrows. fmith has become a proper name, without alteration. Every one alfomust have observed, that Mr. Sharp is a furgrow, that Mr. Littlefear is an apothecary, and that Mr. Goodluck keeps a lottery-effice. Of Mr. Sharp, and Mr. Littlefear, I shall fay nothing; but in justice to Mr. Goodluck, I must relate an anecdote but little known.

186

Every body remembers, that some years ago, a person publicly advertised, that he would go into a quart bottle, at the Little Theatre in the Hay-market, which has ever fince procured him the name of the Boltle-Conjuror. Many persons repaired to the house at the time, and among others Mr. Goodluck: by fome fortunate accident he got into the green-room, when the conjuror was practifing with a bottle, previous to his exhibition upon the Rage, and watching his opportu. nity, when the operator had just got his head below the rim of the bottle, he clapped a cork into it, and brought him away. It is supposed that Mr. Goodluck had a view to his future advantage in this bold attempt: but however shat be, it is certain, that the bottle-conjurar is now in his possession, and has made the calculation which has so much astonished the world in Mr. Goodluck's advertisements. By this calculation Mr. Goodluck avers, that particular numbers have been ascertained, among 600 of which there will certainly be as many prizes, as among 700 promiscuously chosen.

Mr Goodluck has been severely censured for disappointing the company at the Hay-market, and confining a person, who, if not an Englishman, was at least under the protection of English government; and it is infinuated, that if his calculator should by any means escape from the bottle, he may recover fuch damages for faite impritonment, as Mr. Goodluck will find it difficult to pay.

It must, however, be acknowledged, that Mr. Goodluck has given us a remarkable instance of dilinteresteducis, and even generosity, in distributing among customers, at common price:, fortunate numbers, by the pi selection of which for himself might have amassed an imi fortune.

I know it has been said, t is ridiculous to suppose Mr. C luck to have any view in mult ing his customers, but incn his gains, and therefore it me inferred, that he gets mor selling his tickets, than by ke them, which, if they were numbers, that have more the equal chance, could not be case; but this is reasoning common principles, which enable us to account for the a of common men, but not t vestigate the motives of One keeps a conjuror in a bottle.

> Yours, &c. AMBULAT

The Folly of Self-Tormenting

M. Addison says, that is people complain of w nels or indisposition in good pany, they should immediatel presented with a night-cap, hint that it would be best for t to retire. I own, I am on those who have no idea of carr either my cares, or my infirm out of my own babitation, ex in fuch instances as I am fen they can receive relief, or mi: tion: -- Wny should I unnecest wound the good-nature friend, or make myfelf conten ble to my enemies?—if the c munication of my grievances re interrupts the fatisfaction of t amongit whom I am cast, I i hurt them without benefitting on the contrary, if they mble with me, it is a ridicule which my mind colated to fullain—but allow me to observe, that myself on this occasion tudinarian, and the magnifies into calamities—for e severely attacked, whereasly or corporeally, the omplaining, would be to be root of humanity, and e characteristics of our me, however, more imto the point, I must tell I have perhaps the most et of relations you ever -My mother, poor wo-· affections are fanctified loignancy and fincerityf the man the loved, and tential decay of conflituthen I have an aunt that we upon the tack of her gination; not a change of or a change of fituation, not produce fome prefent Mive agony. If the day er corps inform her that have rain to-morrow-if is tolerably powerful the with beat, or if tempeanticipates the inconveof approaching winter-if eives a cloud, the is for into an obscure corner to her eyes from lightning-2 the beholds a clear hombles for the confequendrought. Not a melanimation is dropped in her but the instantly recollects and dreadful difasters she r experienced or escaped ; n the is told of any exary piece of good fortune's people unexpectedly, the at the ungraciousacle of her stars, that withholds every fuch blessing from falling to her share.

A brother of this lady's, confequently an uncle of mine, who had met with a cruel disappointment in love, at a very early period. of his life, was to morofe as to infife upon it, that women were univerfally unworthy, and univerfally unfaithful-tell a flory to their advantage, and he was petalant ; mention them with feverity, and you apparently tear open his old wounds-if he was treated respectfully by them, they were deceirful, and it they behaved coolly, he complained of being despisedwhen the younger part of his relations were disposed to be merry, his head ached, and when they were fertous, they treated him as if he was a bug-beat-when he was contuited what he would chuse for dinner, he was teazed, and when uncontuited, he was neglected-But to fom up all-after years of affiduity and attention, on the park of all his relations, excepting your humble fervant, whole independent spirit frequently incited him to raillery, he died, and left me every shilling of his fortune as a reward for my fincerity.

A young fellow, who flands in the relationship of cousin-german to me, is what may justly be entitled a conditutional self-tormentor—for he was so from his infancy. When a school-boy, whatever was in another's possession, was always considered by him as much better than his own—his top never spun so well, nor his marbies rolled to dexternusly as those of his companions—his task was always harder tran any body eise's, and his repetition of it listened to with prejudiced ears by our master.

On entering into life, this grange humour increased upon him; he conceived every dinner he was not a partaker of, much more excellent than the one he participated —— Every taylor, if he changed a dozen times in a month, was fmarter than those he employed, and every estate he heard of, happier fituated, and better improved than his own, though the rents were absolutely inferior to what he was in the receipt of. attached himself to a fine accomplished girl, but soon sound out that her filler was much more charming. The fifter had a young friend who had as much the advantage of her, and that friend, a relation that surpassed them all-His strange hymour and inconsistency, foon marked him for an object of contempt; and however, out of respect to his family, he is to this day received in some sew houses, he is tolerated not approved, pitied not honoured, notwithflanding his birth, education, and estate.

I have a fifter, which is the last oddity I introduce to you at this period, that is evermore labouring under some imaginary disease-She fits down to table without an appetite, it is true—but then the has been eating all the morningher complexion is extremely fine but the bloom of nature is called a hestic-her voice, that is naturally sweet, is changed into an affested whine, and her nerves are so delicate, that one of my honest Jaughs is sufficient to throw her into hysterics-I have taken great pains to convince her of her folly, but if I attempt to rally, the burits into tears, and I am hurried out of the room as the greatest of all barba-I make daily appolutions to renounce all connexion with foridiculous a groupe of wretches;
my resolutions, nevertheless, (barbarian as I am) are dissolved by their applications to return to them, though the infallible consequence of our re-union, is an abrupt separation.

of, Is it not astonishing, fir, that imimpeople in no degree descient in the understanding, and blessed with asto sluence, would be such enemies to He their repose, that instead of attendoming to the distresses of others, out which they have the power so annore ply to relieve, they thus deseat all ung the gracious purposes of Provivandence, where their own happiness reis concerned, and neglect all the opportunities of doing good, that lie before them?

Your humble servant, George Goopfellow.

An original Letter which was written by the celebrated Sir Walter Raleigh, to Prince Henry, eldef Son of James the First.

May it please your Highness,
"HE sollowing lines are addressed to your Highness, from a man who values his liberty, and a very small sortune in a remote part of this island, under the present constitution, above all the riches and honours that he could any where enjoy under any other establishment.

You see, Sir, the doctrines that are lately come into the world, and how far the phrase has obtained, of calling your royal father, God's Vicegerent; which ill men have turned both to the dishonour of God, and the impeachment of his Majetty's goodness. They adjoin vicegerency to the idea of being all-not to that of being Majesty's wisdom, ped, will save him that may lie under as: but your youth, of praise, which I in you, may possion to hearken to those would conduct your into tyranny. Be Prince! Hear them sheir deceits; you are to a throne, from il can be imputed to god must be convey-e is called the Vicewaven; while he is vicegerent of heaman have authority ean of good to do Prince: let mean pirits, which want Suppose your power a difability of doing nant of power to do spacity in a Prince, be it spoken, it is he had in common Let me not doubt which do not carry mutual happiness of People, will appear or great understandmeable to your noble fuch fycophants in tale of liberty; and in ambition worthy is your fellow-createry; from a condition that of brutes, it reason, as less minute against it. Prefeture subjects the being free agents; wa royal house the divine right of being their benefactors. Believe me, my Prince, there is no other right can flow from God. While your Highnels is forming yourfelf for a. throne, consider the laws as fo many common places in your fludy of the science of government; when you mean nothing but justice, they are an case and nelp to you. This way of thinking is what gave men the glorious appellation of Deliverers and Fathers of their country: this made the fight of them. roule their beholders into acclamations, and mankind incapable of bearing their very appearance. without applauding it as a benefit. Confider the inexpressible advantages which will ever attend your Highness, while you make the power of rendering men happy the meafure of your actions. While this is your impulse, how cally will that power be extended.

Domet-

184

The glance of your eye will give gladnels, and your very fentence have a force of bounty. Whatever fome men would infinuate, you have loft your tubeels when you have loft their inclinations. You are to prefide over the minds, not the bodies of men; the foul is the effence of the man, and you cannot have the true man against his inclinations. Choose therefore to be the King or the Conqueror of your people; it may be submission, but it cannot be obedience that is pessive.

I am, SIR,
Your Highness's
most faithful fervant,
WALTER RALEIOH.

Landon, Aug. 12, 1611.

The History of a popular Character in France very much mentioned, but very little known in England; (from the Account of the Characters and Manners of the French.)

WHILE taking notice of the domestic and familiar intercourse subsisting between the clergy and the sair sex in France, it were unpardonable to omit a being of which we simple protestants entertain no fort of idea.

This being is what they call here an Abbé, a term not to be rendered in our language, as their existence is posterior to the reformation, and no such character was known among the Romanists till about a century and a half ago, and scarce even then. Their origin, like that of some nations, is hardly discernable; though one may venture to assert that France has the best right to claim the merit of having produced them.

Their first appearance seems to have been about the commencement of the last century, as before that æra it is presumed the title of Abbé is not to be met with, unless in the monastic sense, (in which it is very ancient) or to denote a person possest of those revenues of an abbey that fell to the department of the abbot; but as to the now common and almost burlesque denomination of Abbé, it is of the recent date above-mentioned.

It is, however, a very convenient word to fignify what could not otherwise be comprised in one; as an Abbé, according to the strictest definition, is a person who has not yet obtained any precise or fixed settlement in church or state, but most heartily wishes for, and would accept of either, just as it may happen. There is no devit is to be hoped, from true representing them in this light

In the mean while their leges are many. They a missible in all companies,: degradation to the best, n standing they are sometimes in the worst. Their dress is that of an academic, or of fest scholar, than of an eccle and never varying in colo incumbrance on the pocket. society is far from avoid numbers of them are gente fible, well-bred, and enlig men, fit for the conversa any whose pursuit is either tainment or instruction.

It should also be remember that the title of Abbé is a applicable to those we have describing, but likewise to sinstice of the highest rank; nals and bishops only bein it in the usual mention of men; all degrees of who otherwise promiscuously a to, and neither harts nor any body's character.

And really it is some to a poor gentleman, as scholar, that he can productel to the community ans shelter of some decent appearance of some decent appearance of some the means of porting it are apparently we and that of scholar would ther vain and affected.

These Abbis are very numeral and no less useful. They coileges, the instructors of in private samilies, the turning gentlemen: and macure a decent livelihood be literary and witty compositional kinds, from the prof shy to the most airy ro-They are, in short, a body that poffesses a fund of unitleats and learning; and is tly employed in the cultif every various branch of liand ingenuity. No subject r escapes them; scrious or lid or ladicrous, facred or , all pay tribute to their re-; and as they are converthe loweft, as well as the topics, their fame is equally the learned and in the ıg world.

191

:fiential article would be in this description of the /ere we to pais by their deo the fair fex; whose faio return, they have the of being in the fullest and viable degree. The wit urtness for which they are remarkable, are just the mg that fuits the ladies; e whom, all must labour who are not abenprovided with this grand um, in France, where it is . request and less willingly d with, in all who aim at ting themselves with the in any other country t. De l'efprit & de la via lively and facetious dif-, is the only paffport which, he French ladies, will en-: party a gracious recep-Whoever has it not, is t being acceptable in the ty of French companies; as the ladies fit ampires, ao are deficient in what em the most necessary rewill make but a very ine though we ferious, grave, dervalued among the French gentlewomen, who know how to fet a full and proper estimation on one respective merit, yet they are ever accusing us of being perpetually plunged in a reverie, from which nothing can totally extricate us.

Their accufation, however, falls erroneously on numbers of our countrymen, who are as jocund and airy as the merriest and most lively of their own. But then the gaiety of an Englishman is only occasional, the toujours gai is peculiar to a Frenchman; and it is worth observing, that such a difpolition is to very far from being congenial to the former, that an affectation of it is the great pierre d'achoppement, the fure flumbling block of our young English travellers; as an Englishman, indeed a man of any nation, always appears to the best advantage, when he shews himself as he really is, and feeks not to fet himfelf off by foreign airs unnatural to his temper and inclination; and which only lay him open to ridicule, by the awkwardness of his endeavours to imitate originals, of which nature never defigued him for a copy.

To return to our Abbis, they are like Gay's universal apparition, prefent every where. The reason of which is obvious, being fought after by most people, on various accounts, as they are equally men of bulinels and pleasure, not less expert in the most ferious transactions, than fond of enjoying their share of whatever occupies the gay world. Hence they diligently frequent all public (peclacles, which are thought incompicts without them; as they comace, are by no means un- pole the most intelligent part of the company, and are the most weighty approvers or condemners of what passes in almost all places.

Certain it is, that they are, in many respects, not only the inspectors, but the censors-general of the land: and that the judgments which slow from their tribunals are commonly very decisive; more perhaps than some personages of very elevated stations would suffer them to be, if their power extended to the controlment of the understanding.

Dissertation on the Virtues and Abilities of Caligula's Herje.

HEN I read over our own history, as well as that of other nations, I feel a kind of reverence rife in my soul for the memories of several emperors, kings, princes, and sovereign dukes, for the wisdom, as well as excellent taste, they have shewn in the judicious choice of such persons as they thought worthy to be placed at the helm of government.

When one considers that the prince has it in his power to chuse out of millions of his subjects, and among whom there are no doubt both wise men and fools, when we see him hit on one in whom virtue and wisdom are so equally conspicuous, that all the world agrees there was not his fellow lett, it must fill one's mind with woncer and surprize.

What a happinels (for example) must it have been to live under the auspicious reign of the emperor Caligula, who had so great a regard to merit wherever he found it, and took such a fatherly care in providing for the happiness of his people, that he made his horse a minister of state! yet there was not wanting a sactions and seditions party at that time in Rome, who took liberties with the emperor himself, only for making choice of so useful an animal to share with him the burthen of governing the world, who, after all that could be said of him, was certainly a most able minister.

I doubt not but he had his friends and flatterers, as well as other ministers have had fince; but it would move the indignation of every loyal heart, to read with what contempt and even scurrility, a perfon so highly in trust and favour with the emperor, was treated by the malcontents of those times.

There is a period to prejudice itself; the prejudice against this great minister, is long fince dead; and I don't doubt but the present age will think more favourably of him than that in which he lived: For I think the time might be pointed out, when a nation for near ten years space had reason to envy Rome for having even a buse for a minister.

I am forry history should be filent in respect to some things very material to be known. I mean those relating to his birth, family and education — Methinks I am curious to know, whether this great minister was a coach or a cart-horse,—a hunter, or a pad,—to speak in the Newmarket style, whether he had blood in him.

I am not ignorant that the world has long run away with a notion that he was the worst horse in the stable; which notion I take to be built upon a general maxim, which is known to have prevailed in the courts of some of those wetched empe-

emperors: " That in a government to be supported by corruption, any beat may serve for a minister."

For my own part, I am willing to do justice to his memory, according to the best lights I am able to collect from history:—nay, I sad in myself an inclination to believe, that he owed his high preferment to his merit.

Whether I have read or dreamed the following story, I can't recollest :--- that the emperor being one day on his back (bye-the-bye, no man in the empire rode so ill) with his whole court about him, thele obsequious gentlemen perceiving how aukwardly he managed the reins, took occasion from thence to flatter him upon his being a most excellent horseman, upon which the borfe immediately threw him, only to let him fee what a parcel of raicals he had about him. The emperor perceiving that the horse was the only person about the court that had either truth or honefly in him, took a refolution from that moment, to raise him to those high honours to which he afterwards arrived.

many virtues shone on him after his rife. In the first place, he did not show the least alteration of behaviour on this sudden change of good fortune;—he was the same creature as before;—he gave himfelf no overbearing airs upon it, as is common with those raised above their element—He was the only person about court who seemed no way conscious of his having a superiority over others.

He did not by any mean arts engage the attention and confi-Vol. XIII. dence of the emperor, nor did he mifrepresent the good intentions of his subjects, nor did he prevail on him to turn a deaf ear to their complaints, or to rej ct their petitions; nor did he engross the power of all the great employments in the empire, although he had full as good a right to such power (if parts and abilities can give a right) as some that have usurped it since.

" He did not prefume to creft himself into a dictator in the senate; nor did he either direaly. or indirectly, bribe or command the fenators to fay black was white, green, blue, yellow, or any colour he was pleased to call it: He was not so insolent as to cause men of the first nobility in the empire to wait his pleafure for access to his person, nor did he ever send men of the patrician order on footmen's errands."-As corrupt as the patricians were grown at that time, if he had given himfelf those airs, fome one amongst them would certainly have beflowed upon him the discipline of the horse-whip.

As he was no flatterer himfelf, he took no pleafore in the flatteries of others; of confequence he did not fquander away the public treafure in penfions to profittute fellows to found his praises.—He had more sense, as well as more modesty, than to expose himself to the ridicule of the world by so preposterous a piece of vanity.

He was content with the fair and honest appointments belonging to his office, without multiplying perquitites, or turning every public thing into a job; nor was he eternally execute more and more to his own family; and although he might have as supid and indigent kindred kindred as some other ministers have had since,—he neither took them from the plough nor the cart to disgrace his country abroad, nor to spoil the public business at home.

He was so remarkable for his temperance, that if he had his belly sull of oats in the morning he never craved for more that day.

—A rare instance of moderation in a person of so much power!

History is not only silent with respect to his family, but we cannot so much as learn from it whether this great minister was a stone-horse or gelding. Some will have him the latter, because there is nothing recorded of his amours. All that we know is, that he did not make himself ridiculous that way; if he had, it would not have escaped notice.

It is difficult to be particular in speaking of one of whom so little is recorded; but although authors have been filent as to his virtues, we may be fure he is free from all those vices with which he is not taxed; for the vices of those who are suddenly raised to high preserment, are soldom buried in oblivion; and upon the whole I conceive, that notwithstanding for so many centuries past he has been treated as a stupid and ignorant minister, yet his parts would make no contemptible figure, either in the arts of peace, or the management of war, when compared to those of other ministers who have lived since. Add to this, his temperance and modelty, and above all, that honest and definterested mind which kept him within such bounds, that though he lived upon nothing but hay and corn, he never stole any.

Whoever considers all these things with an unprejudiced judgment, must differ from the common opinion with respect to this favourite; and upon an impartial comparison with some other modern favourites, will be obliged to own, that the horse was not only the honestest, but by far the wish minister. I am, &c. Centaus.

Subject of a Picture, nour painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds.

TAVING lately scen a para-III graph in the public papers, relative to a picture, now painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds, it may not be disagreeable to our readers to be made acquainted with the subject, which the admirable Danie has introduced in his Inferno, and which is not sufficiently known. Ugolino, a Florentine count, is giving the description of his being imprisoned, with his children, by the archbishop Ruggeri.-" The hour approached, when we expected to have something brought us to eat. But instead of feeing any food appear, I heard the door of that herrible dungeon more closely barred. I beheld my little children in filence, and could not weep. My heart was petrified! The little wretches wept, and my dear Anselm said, Father, you look on us! what ails youi'! could neither weep nor answer, and continued swallowed up in filent agony, all that day, and the following night, even till the dawn of day. As foon as a glimmering ray darted through the doleful prison, that I could view again those four faces in which my own image was impressed, I gnamed both my hands, with grief and My children believing I did arough eagernels to eat, raifsemfelves fuddenly up, faid , Father, our torments be lefs, if you would allay ge of your hunger upon us." rained myfelf, that I might treale their milery. We were ite hat day and the follow-The fourth day being come, o falling extended at my feet, * My father, why do you not ne?" and died. The other expired one after the other m the fifth and fixth day, ed as thou feeth me now! , being feized with blindsegan to go groping upon with my hands and feet; ontinued calling them by ismes three days after they Then hanger vanlead. l my grief."

tion of a Letter from the rejs Lyeen, to the Dauphin tance, on his Marriage with trebduchefsher Daughter.

UR confort, my dear Dauhin, has just taken her leave As the was my delight, I ie will be your happiness. trained her up in full conthat the would one day your fortune. I have inher with love to your perduty to your will; with els to foften your cares, th the defire of feeking ccasion of pleasing you. I neftly recommended to her ious thoughts a fervent deo the King of Kings, unirm perfuation that those gleft their duty towards him, in whole hands are the fceptres of kings, can never promote the true interest of the people over whom they are allotted to govern. Be mindful, I say, my dear Dauphia, of your duty to God; and I repeat the same to the princess my daughter. Be mindful of the good of the people over whom, whenever it happens, you will go-vern too foon. Reverence the king your grandfather: he good as he is good; and render yourfelves accellible to thole who labour under misfortunes. It is impossible, in carrying yourfelf in this manner, but that you must share in the general happiness. My daughter will love you, I am fure the will, because I know the inward sentiments of her heart; but the more I make myfelf anfwerable for her love and her endearments, the greater reason I have to expect that you will preserve for her an inviolable affection. Farewell, my dear Dauphin; all happinels attend you: my eyes overflow with tears.

Extract from the Records of the Town of Arundel.

A Pew months before the abdication of the daftardly tyrant James II. lord chancellor Jeffries, of detefled memory, went to Arundel in Suffex, in order to influence an election. He took his residence at the castle, and went the day fixed for the election to the town-hall, where Mr. Peckham, who was then mayor of Arundel, held his court. Jeffries had the impudence to shew his bloody face there: the mayor orO z dered

196 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1970.

dered him to withdraw immediately; and in case of refusal, threatened to have him committed. "You," said he, "who ought to be the guardian of our laws, and of our sacred constitution, shall not so audaciously violate them. This is my court, and my jurisdiction here is above yours." Jestries, who was not willing to perplex still more the king's safairs, and to exarge the populate, retired immediately. The next morning he invited Peckham to breakfast with him, which he accepted; but he had the coarge to scorn to take a place, which the merciles executioner offered him.

£ 197 1

POETRY.

from The Deseated Village; a Poem, by Dr. Goldsmith, SWEET AUBURN! parent of the blifsful hour,

Thy glades forlors confess the tyrant's power.
Here as I take my folitary rounds,
Amidst thy taugling walks, and ruined grounds,
And, many a year elapsed, return to view
Where once the cottage stood, the hawthorn grew,
Remembrance wakes with all her busy train,
Swells at my breast, and turns the past to pain.

In all my wanderings round this world of care. In all my griefs—and Goo has given my share—I fill had hopes my latest hours to crown, Amidst these humble bowers to lay me down; To husband out life's taper at the close, And keep the slame from wasting by repose. I fill had hopes, for pride attends us fill, Amidst the swains to shew my book-learned skill, Around my fire an evening groupe to draw, And tell of all I felt, and all I saw; And, as an hare whom hounds and horns pursue, Pants to the place from whence at first she slew, I fill had hopes, my long vexations past, Here to return—and die at home at last.

O bleft retirement, friend to life's decline, Retreats from care that never must be mine, How happy he who crowns in shades like these, A youth of labour with an age of eafe; Who quits a world where frong temptations try, And, tince 'tis hard to con bat, learns to fly! For him no wretches, born to work and weep; Explore the mine, or tempt the dangerous deep ; No furly porter stands in guilty state, To fpurn imploring famine from the gate, But on he moves to meet his latter end, Angels around befriending virtue's friend ; Bends to the grave with unperceived decay, While religiousion gently flopes the way; And all his prospects brightening to the last, His heaven commences are the world be past t

Sweet

198 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Sweet was the found when oft at evening's clok, Up yonder hill the village murmur rose; There as I past with careless steps and slow, The mingling notes came foftened from below; The swain responsive as the milk-maid sung, The fober herd that lowed to meet their young, The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool, The playful children just let loose from school, The watch-dog's voice that bayed the whispering wind, And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant mind; These all in sweet confusion sought the shade, And filled each pause the nightingale had made: But now the founds of population fail, No chearful murmurs fluctuate in the gale, No busy steps the grass-grown foot-way tread, For all the bloomy flush of life is fled. All but you widowed, solitary thing That feebly bends beside the plashy spring; She, wretched matron, forced, in age, for bread, To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread, To pick her wintry faggot from the thorn, To feek her nightly shed, and weep till morn; She only left of all the harmless train, The fad historian of the pensive plain.

Near yonder cople, where once the garden smiled, And still where many a garden flower grows wild; There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose, The village preacher's modest mansion rose. A man he was, to all the country dear, And passing rich with forty pounds a year; Remote from towns he ran his godly race, Nor e'er had changed, nor wished to change his place; Unpractised he to fawn, to seek for power, By doctrines fashioned to the varying hour; Far other aims his heart had learned to prize, More skilled to raise the wretched than to rise. His house was known to all the vagrant train, He chid their wanderings, but relieved their pain; The long remembered beggar was his guest, Whose beard descending swept his aged breast; The ruined spendthrist, now no longer proud, Claimed kindred there, and had his claims allowed: The broken foldier, kindly bade to stay, Sate by his fire, and talked the night away; Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of forrow done, Shouldered his crutch, and shewed how fields were won, Plessed with his guests, the good man learned to glow, And quite forgot their vices in their woe; Ca Careless their merits, or their faults to scan, His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
And even his failings leaned to Virtue's fide;
But in his duty prompt at every call,
He watched and wept, he prayed and felt, for all.
And, as a bird each fond endearment tries,
To tempt its new-fledged offspring to the skies;
He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was layed, And sorrow, guilt, and pain, by turns dismayed, The reverend champion stood. At his control, Despair and anguish sted the struggling soul; Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise, And his last faultering accents whispered praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace, His looks adorned the venerable place? Truth from his lips prevailed with double sway, And fools, who came to fcoff, remained to pray. The service past, around the pious man, With steady zeal each honest rustic ran; Even children followed with endearing wile, And plucked his gown, to share the good man's smile, His ready smile a parent's warmth exprest, Their welfare pleased him, and their cares distrest; To them his heart, his love, his griess were given, But all his serious thoughts had rest in Heaven. As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form, Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm, Tho' round its breast the rolling clouds are spread, Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

Beside you straggling sence that skirts the way, With blossomed furze unprofitably gay, There, in his noisy mansion, skill'd to rule, The village master taught his little school; A man severe he was, and stern to view, I knew him well, and every truant knew; Well had the boding tremblers learned to trace The day's disasters in his morning sace; Full well they laughed with counterfeited glee, At all his jokes, for many a joke had he; Full well the buly whisper circling round, Conveyed the dismal tidings when he frowned; Yet he was kind, or if severe in aught, The love he bore to learning was in fault; The village all declared how much he knew; Twas certain he could write, and cypher too;

Lands

200 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

Lands he could measure, terms and tides presage,
And even the story ran that he could gauge.
In arguing too, the parson owned his skill,
For even the vanquished, he could argue still;
While words of learned length and thundering sound,
Amazed the gazing rustics ranged around;
And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew,
That one small head could carry all he knew.

But past is all his fame. The very spot Where many a time he triumphed, is forgot. Near yonder thorn, that lifts its head on high, Where once the fign-post caught the passing eye, Low lies that house where nut-brown draughts inspired, Where grey-beard mirth and smiling toil retired, Where village statesmen talked with looks prosound, And news much older than their ale went round, Imagination fondly stoops to trace The parlour splendours of that festive place; The white-washed wall, the nicely-sanded sloor, The varnished clock that clicked behind the door; The chest contrived a double debt to pay, A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day; The pictures placed for ornament and use, The twelve good rules, the royal game of goofe; The hearth, except when winter chilled the day, With aspen boughs, and slowers and sennel gay, While broken tea-cups, wifely kept for shew, Ranged o'er the chimney, glistened in a row.

Vain transitory splendours! Could not all Reprieve the tottering mansion from it fall! Obscure it finks, nor shall it more impart An hour's importance to the poor man's heart; Thither no more the peasant shall repair To sweet oblivion of his daily care; No more the sarmer's news, the barber's tale, No more the wood-man's ballad shall prevail; No more the smith his dusky brow shall clear, Relax his ponderous strength, and lean to hear; The host himself no longer shall be found Careful to see the mantling bliss go round; Nor the coy maid, half willing to be prest, Shall kiss the cup to pass it to the rest.

POETRY.

201

ODE for the NEW YEAR, 1770.

By WILLIAM WHITEHEAD, Eff.

FORWARD, Janus, turn thine eyes,
Future scenes in prospect view,
Rising as the moments rise,
That form the sleeting year anew.
Fresh beneath the scythe of Time,
Could the Muse's voice avail,
Joys should spring, and reach their prime,
Blooming 'ere the former fail;
And every joy its tribute bring,
To Britain, and to Britain's King.

Suns should warm the pregnant soil,
Mealth in every breeze should blow;
Plenty crown the peasant's toil,
And shine upon his chearful brow.
Round the throne whilst duty waits,
Duty join'd with filial love,

Peace flould triumph in our gates,
And every distant fear remove;
"Till gratitude to Heaven should raise
The speaking eye, the song of praise.

Let the nations round in arms
Stun the world with war's alarms;
But let Britain ftill be found Safe within her wat'ry bound.
Tyrant Chiefs may realms defiroy:
Nobler is our Monarch's joy,
Of all that's truly great posses'd,
And, by blessing, truly bless.

The comets rife, and wonder mark their way
Above the bounds of Nature's fober laws,
It is the all-chearing lamp of day,
The permanent, the unerring cause,
By whom th' enliven'd world its course maintains;
By whom all nature smiles, and beauteous order reigns.

to the Hon. Miss Yours, (afterwards Lady Anson) on her pa Portrait of Dante by Clovic. By her Brother, the lass Hou. so Yorks, E/q;

PAIR artist! well thy pencil has effay'd To lend a poet's fame thy friendly sid; Great Dante's image in thy lines we trace; And while the Mules train thy colours grace,

202 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

The Muse propitious on the draught shall smile, Nor, envious, leave unfung the gen'rous toil. Picture and Poetry just kindred claim, Their birth, their genius, and pursuits the same; Daughters of Phæbus and Minerva, they From the same sources draw the heavenly ray. Whatever earth, or air, or ocean breeds, Whatever luxury or weakness needs; All forms of beauty Nature's scenes disclose, All images inventive arts compose; What ruder passions tear the troubled breast, What mild affections soothe the foul to rest, Each thought to Fancy magic numbers raise Expressive picture to the sense conveys. Hence in all times with focial zeal conspire, Who blend the tints, and who attune the lyre. See! in reviving Learning's infant dawn, Ere yet in precepts from old ruins drawn, Sham'd the mock ornaments of Gothic taste, New artists form'd, each Grecian bust replac'd; Ere Leo's voice awak'd the barbarous age, Oppress'd by monkish law, and Vandal rage: See! Dante, Petrarch, thro' the darkness frive, And * Giotto's pencil bid their forms furvive ! When now maturer growth fair Science knew, + Titian her favour'd sons ambitious drew; Not half so proud with princes to adorn His tablets, as with wits less nobly born, Ariosto, Aretine, yet better skill'd On letters and on virtue fame to build: These in their turn instruct the willing song, The painter's fading glories to prolong. In later times, hear Waller's polish'd verse The various beauties of Vandyke rehearse; And Dryden, in sublimer strains impart To Kneller praise more lasting than his art. Friendships like these from time receive no law, Contracted of with those we never saw; In ev'ry art who court an endless fame, Giotto was the scholar of Cimabue, and the first painter of any that appeared in Italy. He worked at Florence; was the contempo Dante and Petrarch, whose pictures he drew, and with whom he triendship.

'Thro' distant ages catch the sacred slame:

[†] Titian drew more portraits of kings and princes, than any pain ever lived. Anosto and Arctine were his friends and contemporaries, of he made pictures.

POETRY.

101

See * Zeuxis, warm'd by Homer's rage divine, With rapture read, and what he reads, defign! See † Julio, bred on the Parnassian soil, With Virgil's grandent dignify his toil! † Clovio, perhaps, like aid to Dantè ow'd; Intent his figure on the canvas glow'd: To Dantè's fame the grateful colours flow, And wreaths of laurel bind his honour'd brow.

Thou too, whom Nature and the muse inpire, List'ning the poet's lore hast caught his fire; With so much spirit ev'ry seature fraught, Clovio might own this imitated draught; And Dante, were he conscious of the praise, Would sing thy labours in immortal lays; His melancholy air to gladness turn'd, No longer his unthankful Plorence mourn'd; Fair & Beatrice's charms would lose their force, No more her steps o'er heaven direct his course; To thee the bard would grant the nobler place, And ask thy guidance thro' the paths of peace.

Oh! could my eloquence, like his, persuade
To leave the bounded walks by others made,
Thro' nature's wilds bid thy free genius rove,
Copy the living race, or waving grove;
Or boldly rising with superior skill,
The work with heroes or with poets fill;
Then might I claim deserv'd the saurel crows,
My verse, not quite neglected or unknown;
Then should the world thy glowing pencil see,
Extend the friendship of its art to me.

east fuch parts of his poems, as were best suited to the subject he had an efore he took up his pencil.

ilio Romano, the disciple and favourite of Raphael, was said to have a majesty in his compositions. He was the best scholar of the modern, and a diligent reader of Virgil, and the greatest poets.

lio Clovio lived soo years after Dantè. The portrait of Dantè, here sed, represents him in a melancholy posture in the fore-ground, looking a Florence, from whence he was banished during the commotions in that a which he bore the highest offices. Clovio's great work is a book of 3s, to be seen at this day in the Florentine gallery, the subjects of which taken from Dantè's poem on hell, purgatory, and heaven.

atrice, the miltress of Dante in his youth, who died many years before and of whom he speaks with great affection. She is represented in the as the guardian angel who leads him through heaven, as Virgil and do their heroes through hell and purgatory.

204 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1776

To a Lady with a Present of Pope's Works. By the Same.

HE lover oft, to please some faithless dame, With vulgar presents feeds the dying flame, Then adds a verse, of slighted vows complains, While the the giver and the gift distains. These frains no idle suit to thee commend, On whom gay loves with chafte defires attend: Nor fascied excellence, nor amorous care, Prompts to rash praise, or fills with fond despair; Enough, if the fair volume find access; Thee the great poet's lay hall best express; Thy beateous image there thou may's regard, Which strikes with modest awe the meaner bard. Sure had he living view'd thy tender youth, The blush of honour, and the grace of truth, Ne'er with Belinda's charms his fong had glow'd, But from thy form the lov'd idea flow'd; His wanton setire ne'er the sex had scorn'd, For thee, by Virtue and the Muse adorn'd.

Stanzas in the Manner of Waller: occasioned by a Receipt to make given to the Author by a Lady. By the Same.

N earliest times, 'cre man had learn'd His sense in writing to impart, With inward anguish oft he burn'd, His friend unconscious of the smart.

Alone he pin'd in thickest shade,
Near murmuring waters sooth'd his grief,
Of senseless rocks companions made,
And from their echoes sought relief.

Cadmus, 'tis faid, did first reveal

How letters should the mind express,

And taught to grave with pointed seel,

On waxen tablets its discress.

Soon was the feeble waxen trace Supply'd by lnk's unfading spot,
Which to remotek climes conveys,
In clearest marks, the secret thought.

Bleft be his chymic hand that gave
The world to know so great a good!
Hard! that his name it should not save,
Who first pour'd forth the sable flood.

Tie this configns to endless praise The hero's valous, flatesman's art,

POETRY.

205

Historic truth and fabling lays, The maiden's eyes, the lover's heart.

If fill oblivion's Lethe live Immortal in poetic lore, What honours thall the fiream receive Sacred to mem'ry's better pow'r l

Who now from Helicon's fam'd well.
The drops celefial would request,
When by ink's magic he can spell.
The image of his faithful breast?

This kindly spares the modest tongue To speak aloud the pleasing pain.; Aided by this, in tuneful song Fond your the virgin-paper stain.

Tho' flain'd, yet innocent of fame, No bloth th' indignant reader warms, If well express'd the poet's flame, Inspir'd by fair Maria's charms.

[NTA. An ELEGY. By JOHN GIRRARD, Carate of Withycombe in the Moor, Devon.

Flete meam, filvæ, dilettaque rura, puellam Non iterum tenero, rura, terenda pede l

RELAUS.

N o'ergrown wood my wand'ring steps invade,
With surface mantled in untrodden snow;
Dire haunt, for none but savage monsters made,
Where frosts descend, and howling tempests blow.

Here, from the fearth of bofy mortals flray'd,
My woe-worn foul shall hug her galling chain:
For fure, no forest boasts too deep a shade,
No bannt too wild for misery to remain.

O my Aminta! dear distracting name!

Late all my comfort, all my fond delight;

Still writhes my foul beneath its tort'ring same,

Still thy pale image fills my aching fight!

When thall vain mem'ry flumber o'er her woes?
When to oblivion be her tale refign'd?
When thall this fatal form in death repose,
Like thine, fair victim, to the dust confign'd!

Again the accents faulter on my tongue;
Again to tear the confcious tear forceeds;
From tharp reflection is the dagger forung,
And nature, wounded to the center, bleeds.

Ye bitter skies! upon the tale descend——
Ye blasts! tho' rude your visits, lend an ear——
Around, ye gentler oaks, your branches bend,
And, as ye listen, drop an icy tear.

"Twas when the step with conscious pleasure roves,
Where round the shades the circling woodbines throng;
When Flora wantons o'er the enamell'd groves,
And seather'd choirs indulge the am'rous song.

Inspir'd by duteous love, I fondly stray'd,
Two milk-white doves officious to ensure:
Beneath a filent thicket as they play'd,
A grateful present for my softer fair.

But ah! in smiles no more they met my sight,
Their russled heads lay gasping on the ground:
Where (my dire emblem) a rapacious Kite,
Tore their soft limbs, and strew'd their plumes around.

The tear of pity stole into my eye;
While ruder passions in their turn succeed:
Forbid the victims unreveng'd to die,
And doom the author of their wrongs to bleed.

With hasty step, enrag'd, I homewards ran, (Curse on my speed) th' unerring tube I brought, That satal hour my date of woe began, Too sharp to tell—too horrible for thought—

Disastrous deed!—irrevocable ill!——
How shall I tell the anguish of my fate!
Teach me, remorseless monsters, not to seel,
Instruct me, siends and suries, to relate!

Wrathful behind the guilty shade I stole,
I rais'd the tube—the clam'rous woods resound—
Too late I saw the idol of my soul
Struck by my aim, fall shrieking to the ground!

No other bliss her soul allow'd but me; (Hapless the pair that thus indulgent prove) She sought concealment from a shady tree, In amorous silence to observe her love.

I ran—but oh! too soon I sound it true!—
From her stain'd breast life's crimson stream'd apace;
From her wan eyes the sparkling lustres slew—
The short-liv'd roses saded from her sace!

Gods!—could I bear that fond reproachful look,
That strove her peerless innocence to plead!—
But partial death awhile her tongue forsook,
To save a wretch that doom'd himself to bleed.

While I distracted press'd her in my arms,
And fondly strove t'imbibe her latest breath;
"O spare, rash love, she cry'd, thy fatal charms,

" Nor seek cold shelter in the arms of death.

"Content beneath thy erring hand I die.
"Our fates grew envious of a bliss so true;

"Then urge not thy distress when low I lie, "But in this breath receive my last adieu!"-

No more she spake, but droop'd her lily head!
In death she sicken'd—breathless—haggard—pale—
While all my inmost soul with horror bled,
And ask'd kind vengeance from the passing gale.

Where slept your bolts, ye ling'ring light'nigs say;
Why riv'd ye not this self-condemned breast?—
Or why, too passive earth, didst thou delay
To stretch thy jaws, and crush me into rest?—

Low in the dust the beauteous corse I plac'd, Bedew'd and soft with many a falling tear; With sable yew the rising turf I grac'd, And bade the cypress mourn in silence near.

Oft as bright morn's all-searching eye returns,
Full to my view the fatal spot is brought;
Thro' sleepless night my haunted spirit mourns,
No gloom can hide me from distracting thought.

When, spotless victim, shall my form decay?
This guilty load, say, when shall I resign?
When shall my spirit wing her chearless way,
And my cold corse lie treasur'd up with thine?

Epistle from an unfortunate young Gentleman to a young Lady.

By the Same.

These words, the last my dying lips recite, ead, and repent that your unkindness gave wretched lover an untimely grave! ank by despair from life's enchanting view, oft, ever lost to happiness and you!—
o more these eye-lids show'r incessant tears, o more my spirit sinks with boding fears; o more your frowns my suing passion meet, o more I fall submissive at your feet:
'ith fruitless love this heart shall cease to burn, ife's empty dream shall never more return.

• Occasioned by a catastrophe well known in the West.

Think

208 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

Think not, that lab'ring to subdue your hate, My artful soul forebodes a fancied fate; For 'ere you sun descends his western way, Cold shall I lie, a lifeless lump of clay!

Tir'd of my long encounters with distain,
Peaceful my pulse, and ebbing from its pain;
Each vital movement sinking to decay,
And my spent soul just languishing away;
'Ere my last breath yet hovers to depart,
I prompt my hand to pour out all my heart.
The hand, oft rais'd compassion to implore;
The heart, that burns with slighted fires no more!

Releatless nymph! of nature's fairest frame,
Unpitying soul, and woman but in name;
Augelic bloom the coldest heart to win,
Without, allurement, but disclain within;
Regard the sounds which seal my parting breath
Ere the vain murmurs shall be hush'd in death.
Let pity view what love disclain'd to save,
And mourn a wretch sent headlong to the grave.

Profuse of all an anxious lover's care,
To urge his suit, and win the list'ning sair;
Try'd ev'ry purpose to relieve my woe,
My soul chides not, for innocent I go;
Save when soft pity bids my gentler mind
Shrink at your fate, and drop a tear behind.

How oft and fruitless have I strove to move Unfeeling beauty with the pangs of love; As role your breast with captivating grace, And heighten'd charms came blushing to your face; Infulting charms! that gave a fiercer wound, Fond as I lay, and prostrate on the ground. Heav'ns! with what scorn you strove my suit to meet, Frown'd with your eyes, and spurn'd me with your see To bleeding love such hard returns you gave, As barb'rous rocks that dash the pressing wave. O could your looks have turn'd my hapless fate, And frown'd my short-liv'd passion into hate; Then had no scattering breeze my forrows known, Nor vale responsive had prolong'd the moan; Then had those lips ne'er learnt their woeful tale, Nor death yet cloath'd them in eternal pale.

Oft to the woods in frantic rage I flew
To cool my bosom with the falling dew;
Oft in sad accents sigh'd each prompting ill,
And taught wild oaks to pity and to seel;
Till with despair my heart rekindled burns,
And all the anguish of my soul returns.

Come,

Then restless to the fragrant meads I hie, Death in my face, distraction in my eye; There as reclin'd along the verdant plain, My grief renews her heart-wrung strains again, Lo! pitying Phæbus sinks, with sorrow pale, And mournful night descends upon the tale!

When tir'd, at length, my wrongs no more complain, And fighs are stifled in obtuser pain; When the deep fountains of my eyes are spent, And fiercer anguish finks to discontent; Slow I return, and prostrate on my bed Bid the fost pillow full my heavy head. But oh! when downy sleep its court renews, And shades the soul with visionary views, Illusive dreams to fan my slumb'ring fire; And wake the fever of intense desire, Present your softer image to my sight, All warm with smiles, and glowing with delight; Gods! with what bliss I view thy darling charms, And strive to class thee melting in my arms!-But ah! the shade my empty grasp deceives; And as it flits, and my fond foul bereaves, The transit it slumbers slip their airy chain, And give me back to all my woes again: There wrapt in floods of grief I figh forlorn, The constant greetings of unwelcome mora. But should oblivion reassume her sway, And flumbers once more seal my woes away; When the short flights of fancy intervene, Your much-lov'd image fills out every scene. But now no more fost smiles your face adorn, Lo! o'er each feature broods destructive scorn, Suppliant in tears I urge my suit aghin, Sullen you stand, and view me with disdain; Your ears exclude the story of my smart, Your baleful eyes dart anguish to my heart. I wake-glad nature hails returning day, And the wild songsters chaunt their matin-lay; The fun in glory mounts the crystal sky, And all creation is in smiles but I. Then, fink in death, my senses! ---- for in vaia You strive to quench the phrenzy of-your pain; Break, break, fond heart!----her hate this cank not tame, Then take this certain triumph o'er thy flame. Tis done!----the dread of future wrongs is past. Lo! brittle passion verges to its last! Tis done!---vain life's illusive scenes are o'er---Disdainful beauty shakes her chains no more. Vol. XIII.

210

Come, peaceful gloom, expand thy downy breaft,
And soothe, O soothe me to eternal rest!
There hush my plaints, and gently sull my woes,
Where one still stream of dull oblivion flows.
No lab'ring breast there heaves with torture's throws,
No heart consumes her daily hoard of woes;
No dreams of former pain the soul invade,
Calmly she sleeps, a sad unthinking shade!

But e'er from thought my strug'ling soul is free, One latest tear she dedicates to thee. She views thee on the brink of vain despair, Beat thy big breaft, and rend thy flowing hair. Feels tort'ring love her fable deluge roll, Weigh down thy senses, and o'erbear thy soul. In vain your heart relents, in vain you weep, No lover wakes from his eternal sleep. Alas! I see thy frantic spirit rave, And thy last breath expiring on my grave. Is this the fortune of those high-priz'd charms? Ah! spare them for some worthier lover's arms. And may these bodings ne'er with truth agree, My grief and anguish be unknown to thee. My bitter mem'ry ne'er recount with pain, That e'er you frown'd, or I admir'd in vain.

No more—my spirit is prepar'd to sly, Suppress'd my voice, and stiffen'd is my eye. Death's swimming shadows intercept my view, Vain world, and thou relentless nymph, adieu.

A Translation of Dr. King's Latin Epistle, entitled, Antonietti's Ada the Corticans, concerning their Choice of a King. By Mr. Russel

HO' Phæbus kindly should inspire Such strains as dwelt on Virgil's lyre, With all the strength and ease polite That poets wish for when they write, Nor battles should my verse employ, Nor kings who conquer—to destroy. Bavaria's sons might croud the plain, And Gallia war with heighb'ring Spain, While Britons, eareless of their own, Invade the peace of lands unknown. Whate'er I had of skill or fame My countrymen alone should claim; And you, ye Corsi, brave and free, Ye sons of arms and liberty! Your fame should raise my willing voice, Your prudent ares-your beardless boys,

Your monks who honour's influence feel; And change their hoods for caps of seel, But now my once poetic rage Confumes and languishes in age: The muse who once my lays inspired, In youth appear'd, with youth retir'd; Yet fill, my country's love remains, And triumphs in my aged veins; My thoughts from long experience rise, I've prov'd whatever I advise: Thro' distant nations as I stray'd Both kings and peoples take I weigh'ds Attend! and freedom, (long pursu'd In hostile plains and seas of blood) Shall pleas'd vouchfafe a chearing smile, And dwell for ever on our isle. In me combin'd with rev'rence view A poet and a prophet too; And tho' my numbers you despise, Revere the gods who bid them rise! Still undisturb'd shall Gallia pour Her hostile legions on our shore; Our isle her native worth desends: On that her pow'r, her state depends; Prop'd by her hero's matchless same, And honour'd with a kingdom's name, Still may that name its force maintain, And treason ply her schemes in vain. But fince our king seeks lands unknown, And you're in doubt to fill his throne, And stead of him, wou'd chuse a new, As worthy Corfice and you, A prince shall rise, in solemn state, If not as active full as great. (Let my instructions but take place) An offspring of an ancient race, Free all his days from loose delights: And chaste and sober all his nights: From foreign conquetts still averse, And careful of the public purse. Our peace his views shall ne'er embroils Contented in his native soil; His hands from all corruption pure Your gold (if you have gold) secure: His breach of faith shall ne'er surprise His cheated subjects, or allies, For kings, still practised to betray, (Forgive, ye thron'd ones, what I fay)

şi)

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Kings have I known for state intrigues, Forget their oaths and break thro' leagues: A fairer prince than him I mean, For shape and limbs, was never seen, If our Alcimedon but know, With cautious art to form him so; Nor does his skill to his submit, Of whom the Mantuan poet writ: Alcimedon, whose skill could teach To meck ev'n life, the sculptur'd beech, In bowls, for which the swains contended, By thee, O matchless bard, commended. When first this monarch shall appear, Salute his reign with joy sincere, A wooden king! the crowds shall cry, A wooden king! the groves reply. Nor shall he (heav'n forbid he shou'd!) Be form'd of coarse—and common wood; Some timber mocks the artful tool, Too hard to carve, not fit to rule. Unnumber'd oaks adorn our land, And still in safety let them stand; In fullen state resist the storm. But never bear a monarch's form! Ne'er shall my int'rest strive to bring A tattling Dodonzan king-At pleasure to destroy and kill By only faying, 'tis my will! Oft too, the facred forest-maids In silence dwell beneath their shades, And when the tree receives a stroke, With various ills revenge their oak. Nor durst we do so make a thing, T'affront the gods-to cut a king! But most beware to form his grace Of that alluring glittering race: Of which an eak, in days of old, Stretch'd out a branch of blooming gold; From good Æneas, as befell, A token to the god of hell; One of this race would still incline, Bright, like his ancestor, to shine; Uneasy till his acts unfold, His ample branches with your gold. Of this the Germans, France and Spain, Opprest, and helpless too complain: And now, ye muses, lest I seem, To dwell too long upon my theme,

Whatever skill ye have, bestow it Both on the carpenter and poet! Direct indulgently the tool To form a king in peace to rule, A king who much belov'd shall be, Obey'd by all, and fung by me! About it, skilful artist, seize The pond'rous axe and hew the trees! But first adore with suppliant prayer The gods who oft inhabit there. Of oaks, and elms, and all the rest Of various timber, box is best: Box! pliant wood, is turn'd with ease, Alike is form'd for war, or peace; In box the royal form display, And him let Confice obey! Then heav'nly peace, and arts shall smile, Health, honour, riches bless the isle! The Fauns secure, their haunts retain, The fields shall wave with rip'ning grain, The sailor safely cross the seas, And bards grow old in learned ease.

For motives too, of nature strong, This kingdom should to box belong: Box! which for ages long has stood, By all allow'd a regal wood! Carv'd out in box, our moderns stand, The work of some ingenious hand. Secure shall box enjoy its fame, Nor even malice wounds its name! While patient gamesters leisure give To chess, or Vida's poems live; Where facred walls the nations raise, Around whose altars diamonds blaze; The maid to whom the name is given, Of star of earth, or queen of heaven, In box carv'd out, is plac'd on high, And view'd with reverential eye: Oh let not then my native land, While thus ador'd, her form shall stand, Another kind of wood prefer, To that which bears the name of her! To prize ev'n angels more were wrong, Such honour does to box belong: But when the native woods it leaves, And roval form the trunk recrives: When Heav'n itself approves the choice, And crowds lift up th' affenting voice:

P 3

414 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

Then will we bring our monarch home, And place him in a marble dome: A throne and sceptre we'll prepare, Form'd by Alcimedon with care, Cut from the individual tree From whence he hew'd his majefty. His front with laurel wreaths we'll bind; A purple robe shall trail behind, The bay, or ivy, round his head, Shall their verdant foliage spread: For thus, as history allows, The brave and witty bind their brows! And fure they'll not improper be, To crown a prince so sage as he: So shall he stand, our island's wonder, Secure from faction, flames, and thunder I

And now a proper number chuse,
Who bend to public good their views:
To these the gen'ral power commit,
The sov'reign judges let them sit;
The temples, cities, laws, protect,
And war or peace, at will direct:
To envoys speak whate'er they please,
And combat with the Genoese;
Let this preside in ev'ry cause,
Desend, and execute the laws;
To these the gen'ral weight convey,
Of civil, and of martial sway.

But, when to make offenders tremble, In public council you assemble; Bring out your wooden king, and place On throne sublime, his filent grace: Beneath his name, to make decrees, And make him say just what you please. Wife Venice thus discreetly rules, Her dukes are necessary tools Of wood, or wooden-like they reign; The senators the laws explain: Decree, resolve, relinquish, claim, Their princes do but lend a name, And yet in royal domes they dwell, Against their peace no crowds rebel; In pompous robes adorn'd appear, And wed the ocean every year; And while to other's skill they trust, Are neither tyrants nor unjust. Their subjects active, rich, and wise, Could even papal wrath despise:

But far my countrymen from hence, Be still remov'd, a martial prince; For kings who arm in time of peace, Can only mean their realms to fleece: With force to ratify their will, Heav'n keep from us so great an ill! Our monarch known, his country's friend, One heauteous nymph shall still attend, And still to her employment just, With care to brush him clean from dust; That neither worms may breed within, Nor spiders weave beneath his chin. A naiad, let the damsel be, For none can be so fit as she; And while the muses ('tis my due, For counsels useful thus to you) To distant times transmit my name, Oh! nymph, to you an equal fame! Who to this office doth succeed, Shall be, and justly too, decreed ! Forgive your gen'ral and your poet, If my advice (fince good I know it, With prov'd success and truth replete) Again with freedom I repeat: For whether 'tis an idle tale, Or that my own conceits prevail; Or that the muse is better able To give her sanction in a fable: But in my mind a wooden king Will freedom, peace, and plenty bring: And future bards, whose wit shall praise His sober nights, and harmless days, His chastity, his temper even, Shall still this prince, deriv'd from Heav's; His gentle sway and mild command, That title justly may demand. What blocks are register'd by fame, When honour'd with a royal name? As rough as oak, as dull as clods, Yet call'd the offspring of the gods: Phædrus, to prove the worth of logs, Shall tell the fable of the Frogs.

The Frogs to heav'n their prayers address. A king—great thund'rer we request!
A king who knows our taste and genius,
To settle all disputes between us.
If Bees! small insects! dare to claim
The honour of a royal name;

216 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

Say why should Frogs, great Jove, remain, Befeeching for a king in vain? From Phæbus' self our birth we trace, The friend, the author of our race. The charms of voice to us belong, From us was nam'd the comic fong. A poet too of Greece, they fay, Made us a chorus in his play: Not is't on voice our fame depends, Our valour Homer's self commends. They spoke, and soon their mighty boast To laughter mov'd the heav'nly hoft; Great Jove himself could not forbear, Yet smil'd compliance to their prayer. Not long considering he stood, But threw them down a log of wood: Soule, it plunged down-away they scud, And croak and tremble in their mud. The water dash'd a murm'ring sound, The waves unusual pressure found: But soon the log in peace repos'd, Around its fides the waters clos'd; The Frogs their panic fears recover, The surface smooth'd, and all was over. Phisignathus, a chief, his head First rais'd above the stream, and said, " Approach, my friends, your monarch view ! I know his kind, and where he grew." Fixt in amazement, long they thood, Then grinn'd, and scorn'd the royal wood I Jump on him, and t' increase their crime, Bedaub his fides with dirt and slime. Again the gods the frogs address'd: Again their worth and parts express'd; And begg'd them to regard their merit, And send them soon a king of spirit. Jove with contemptuous anger view'd How close destruction they pursu'd: " The prince," he cry'd, " you merit, take!" He spoke, and hurl'd them down a snake. Ar und the lake the monster stray'd, And dreadful devastation made, On mothers, fathers, sons, he fed: This lost a limb, and that a head. O'er ail alike he threich'd his way, And made whole multitudes his prey ! In vain they leapt about the beg, And wish'd in vain, their old king Log.

Their pray'rs they made, but Jove no more Compy'd, indulgent as before; With smiles their misery he survey'd, And to their vows this answer made:

"Ye wretches! to your interest blind, Ungrateful, faithless, like mankind:
You view'd with scorn a peaceful throne, Beneath a tyrant learn to groan!"

The POET and STRAW.

A FABLE.

N Riebmond Hill with doublet bare
A hungry poet takes the air:
The air on Riebmond Hill, tho' good,
And excellent Camelion food,
Is rather of too thin a nature
For a beef-loving, two-legg'd creature:
Our poet stops, he looks around,
And murmurs thus in doleful found:

"While plenty o'er the landscape reigns,

Shall Bards alone feel meagre pains?

" Ah, what avails, if in the Town

" My madrigals acquir'd renown;

of If stranger to all-pow'rful coin

" I seldom taste the rich sirloin;
" Is for the produce of my brain,

" I meet from money'd fools difdain;---

" In vain the laurel crowns my brows;

What crowns my pocket?—Not one fouse:

of Day or laurel, where the use is?

Nor bay or laurel fruit produces:---

" I've fame pursu'd, and now I've caught her,

" She proves-mere moon-shine in the water;

" How happier the unletter'd glutton,

Who can indulge on beef and mutton:---

.61 How curst each servant of the nine!

" I'd rather be a fool and dine."

He said, and to his great surprize

Beneath his feet a Straw replies:———

" Ah, hapless Bard, look down and see

Thy striking emblem here in me;

"Despis'd by those, to whom my head

" Furnish'd the staff of living-bread:

" That gain'd, behold me here cast down,

" Trod on by ev'ry fordid clown:

Just so the bard, who from his brain

44 Lie hungry mind can entertain,

118 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

. Is foon neglected and forgot, . A barren praise his haples lot;

es To fame becomes an empty bubble,

"Trod on by fools like firaw or flubble."

THE TWO KINGS.

A FABLE.

Noting the river $19x, with shoals Of new departed motley fouls, Old Charen look'd confounded black, Les with the load his boat thould crack : Tho' fouls, as fouls, are lightfome freight, Their fine oft prove a deedly weight, And flow'd their floating carriage fail 'em, Not ev'n cork jackets would avail 'em : His boat chuck-full, ---- fuch fcreaming rose Prom purses, miffes, ladies, beaus, That Charen rais'd his voice and fwore, While echo answer'd from the shore,  If they continu'd their damn'd tricks, •• He'd foufe 'em every one in Styx," And afk'd 'em with a face most grim, If they had ever learnt to fwim :-In thort he foon becalm'd the riot, And made 'em tolerably quiet: He trimm'd his boat, and with a frown, Damu'd 'em, and made 'em all fit down. Order observ'd in some degree,

A shoft of high pomposity, With courtly air and scornful look Thus to his brother shadows spoke:

Hence, reptiles, hence-your diftance know-

Due homage to a monarch thow;
Shall one of my illustrious birth,
A king,————a deity on earth,

 Be crowded thus with the Canaille,  Fellows who flink of beef and ale?

Tou, Charon, with that dirty face, Depend on't you shall lose your place;

* May brother fovereign Plate foon

Shall make you fmart for what you've done;

 Reptiles, avaunt --- at diffance tend;
 Your touch, looks, manners, all offend."

Old Charen grumbling in his maw, Damu'd him, and bid him bold his jaw;
Whith one, who, living,—from the flage
Had often outertain'd the age,

With whim Cervantic in his face, First bowing, thus address'd his Grace; 44 All hail-great king, great monarch, hail! Frown not, I'm not of the Canaille; "In me your brother Brentford view, "I've been a king as well as you; "Like you have worn a pageant crown, "And aw'd the millions with a frown; " Like you too, brother Phiz, refign'd, "And left my pageant crown behind:-"But now, good Sir, be not offended-The curtain dropt, the farce is ended: Tho' fortune for the stage equipt us, Cur wardrobe keeper, Death, has stript us, And the rich robes on earth possest, Lie folded in the grave at rest:----" Maugre the rank we living bore, Like these we're shadows now———no more; « All, brothers all—at least in this, We're but Personæ Dramatis; "Like them we're bound to Critic-hall, "By critic rules to rise or fall: Where kings, lords, beggars, all must stand, . And undistinguish'd hold the hand, While critic Minos and his Jury " ('Tis true, good brother, I assure ye) "Will his or clap, just as they find "We've play'd the characters assign'd; " Where birth and rank pass unregarded, " And merit only is rewarded." He spoke-the monarch, sighing, swore, "He never heard such truths before."

On our MODERN COMEDIES.

220 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

BACCHUS; by the late Dotter Parnell. This Pum it Mr. Pope's Edition.

A S Bacchus ranging at his leifure,

(Jolly Bacchus, king of pleafure!)

Charm'd the wide world with drink and dances,

And all his thousand airy fancies,

Alas! he quite forgot the while

His fav'rite vines in Lesbos isle.

The God, returning ere they dy'd,
Ah! fee my jolly Fauns he cry'd,
The leaves but hardly born are red,
And the bare arms of pity spread;
The beasts afford a rich manure;
Fly, my boys, to bring the cure;
Up the mountains, o'er the vales,
Thro' the woods, and down the dales;
For this, if full the cluster grow,
Your bowls shall doubly overslow.

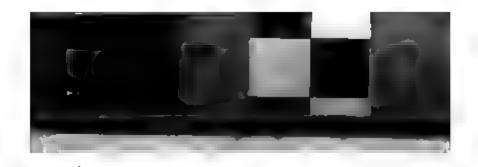

They bring the dung of every beaff;
The loads they wheel, the roots they bare,
They lay the rich manure with care;
While oft he calls to labour hard,
And names as oft the red reward.

The plants refresh'd, new leaves appear, The thick'ning clusters load the year; The season swiftly purple grew, The grapes hung dangling deep with blue.

A vineyard ripe, a day ferene Now calls them all to work again. The Fauns thro' ev'ry furrow shoot To load their flaskets with the fruit: And now the vintage early trod, The wines invite the jovial God.

Strow the roles, raite the long,
See the master comes along;
Lusty Revel join'd with Laughter, Whim and Frolic follow after:
The Fauns aside the vats remain
To show the work, and reap the gain.

All around, and all around
They fit to riot on the ground;
A vessel flands amidst the ring,
And here they laugh, and there they fing;
Or rise a jolly jolly hand,
And dance about it hand in hand;
Dance about, and shout amain,
Then sit to laugh and sing again.

224

Thus they drink, and thus they play The fun, and all their wits away.

But so an ancient Author fung,
The vine manur'd with every dung,
From ev'ry creature firangely drew
A twang of brutal nature too;
'Twas bence in drinking on the lawns
New turns of humour feix'd the Fauns.

Here one was crying out by Jove!
Another, fight me in the grove;
This wounds a friend, and that the trees;
The lion's temper reign'd in thefe.

Another griss, and leaps about,
And keeps a merry world of rout,
And talks impertinently free,
And twenty talks the fame as he:
Chatt'ring, idle, airy, kind:
These take the monkey's turn of mind.

Here one, that faw the Nymphs which flood,
To peep upon them from the wood,
Steals off to try if any maid
Be lagging tate beneath the shade:
While loose discourse another raises
In naked nature's plainest phrases,
And every glass he drinks enjoys,
With change of nonsense, but and noise;
Mad and careless, hot and vain:
Such as these the goat retain.

Another drinks and casts it up, ... And drinks, and wants another cup; Solemn, filent, and sedate, Ever long, and ever late, Full of meats, and full of wine: This takes his temper from the swine.

Here some who hardly seem to breathe, Drink, and hang the jaw beneath., Gaping, tender, apt to weep; Their nature's alter'd by the sheep.

'Twas thus one autumn all the crew (if what the Poets fay be true) While Bacchus made the merry feath, Inclin'd to one, or other beath: And fince, 'tis faid, for many a mile He spread the vines of Lesbos ille.

B B G G A R.

—inopemque pattrui

Hor. Et Laris, et Fundi-

PITY the forrows of a poor old man! Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your deer, Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span; Oh! give relief—and Heav'n will bless your store.

These tatter'd cloaths my poverty bespeak, These hoary locks proclaim my lengthen'd years; And many a furrow in my grief-worn cheek, Has been the channel to a stream of tears.

You house, creeted on the rising ground, With tempting aspect drew me from my road, For plenty there a residence has found, And grandeur a magnificent abode.

(Hard is the fate of the infirm and poor!) Here craving for a morfel of their bread, A pamper'd menial forc'd me from the door, To seek a shelter in an humbler shed.

Oh! take me to your hospitable dome, Keen blows the wind, and piercing is the cold ! Short is my passage to the friendly tomb, For I am poor and miserably old.

Should I reveal the fource of every grief, If foft humanity e'er touch'd your breaft, Your hands would not withhold the kind relief, And tears of pity could not be represt.

Heav'n fends misfortunes—why should we repine? 'Tis Heav'n has brought me to the state you see: And your condition may be foon like mine, —The child of forrow—and of misery.

A little farm was my paternal lot; Then like the Lark I sprightly hail'd the more; But ah! oppression forc'd me from my cot, My cattle dy'd, and blighted was my corn.

My daughter—once the comfort of my age ? Lur'd by a villain from her native home, Is cast abandon'd on the world's wide stage, And doom'd in scanty poverty to roam.

My tender wife-sweet soother of my care! Struck with sad angoish at the stern decree, Fell-ling'ring fell a victim to despair, And left the world to wretchedness and me.

Pity the forrows of a poor old man! Whose trembling limbs have borne kim to your door, Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span; Oh! give relief-and Heav'n will bless your store.

=13

To the King of PRUSSIA, on his Recovery; by M. de Voltaire.

Translated by Dr. Franklin.

N Pluto's dark abodes, the fifters three, Who weave too fast the threads of destiny, As 'long the Styx they took their ev'ning walk, Had often heard the wand'ring spirits talk Of Pruffia's gallant deeds, the laws be made, The wars he fought, the virtues he display'd. As thus they trac'd the hero from his birth, They took him for the oldest king on earth 2 And as his wond'rous acts they counted o'er, Indead of forty, wrote him down fourfcore. Then Atropos, to kings a hateful name, Dispatch'd by gloomy Dis, to Berlin came; Her fatal thears prepar'd, expecting there To find a poor old man, with filver hair, And wrinkled forehead :- Great was her furprize, To see his auburn locks, and sparkling eyes; To fee him wield the fword, to hear him play On the fost flute, his jovial roundelay. She call'd to mind how once Alcides great, And fmooth-tongu'd Orphous, brav'd the power of futer She trembled when the faw, in Prustia join'd, The voice of Orpheus, with Alcides' mind; Affrighted, throw her fatal shears aside, And home returning, to her litters cry'd, For Prusia weave a new and golden thread, Lafting as that for god-like Lewis made. In the same cause did both the heroes fight; "Gainft the fame foes with equal zeal unite. Both gain'd by wond'rous acts immortal fame; The fame their valour, and their end the fame; And both hereafter shall-but soft; the mule No longer the unequal task pursues; Two living monarchs aptly to defign, Requires an abler pen, and ftronger pow'rs than mine.

To the Marquis de VILLETTE; by the same.

TOW few are those who teach while they delight!

How sew, like thee, who think as well as write!

But reason with the sister graces join'd,

To give thee perfect empire o'er the mind;

Thus with his lyre Apollo wins our hearts,

And kills the serpent Pytho with his darts.

'Tis the same great, the same all-pow'rful god,

Who quells the savage monsters of the wood,

As he whose active and enliv'ning ray,

Gives warmth to nature, and lights up the day.

But more a god he is, when to the charms

Of love he yields, and sperts in Daphne's arms.

234 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770;

ODE for bis MAJESTY'S BIRTH-DAY, June 4, 1770.

Written by William Whitehead, Esq; Poet Laureat, and set to Music by Dr. Boyce, Master of the King's Band of Musicians.

DISCORD hence! the torch refign—
Harmony shall rule to-day.
Whate'er thy busy siends design
Of suture ills, in cruel play
To torture or alarm mankind,
Lead the insidious train away,
Some blacker hours for mischief sind,
Harmony shall rule to-day.

Distinguish'd from the vulgar year,
And mark'd with heaven's peculiar white,
This day shall grace the rolling sphere,
And ling'ring end its bright career,
Unwilling to be lost in night,
Discord lead thy siends away,
Harmony shall rule to day.

Is there, intent on Britain's good,
Some angel hovering in the sky,
Whose ample view surveys her circling stood,
Her guardian rocks that shine on high,
Her forests, waving to the gales,
Her streams, that glide through fertile vales,
Her lowing pastures, sleecy downs,
Towering cities, busy towns,
Is there who views them all with joy serene,
And breathes a blessing on the various scene?

O if there is, to him 'tis given,
(When daring crimes almost demand
The vengeance of the Thunderer's hand,)
To soften, or avert the wrath of Heaven.
O'er Ocean's face do tempests sweep,
Do civil storms blow loud,
He stills the raging of the deep,
And madness of the crowd.

He too, when Heaven vouchsafes to smile Propitious on his favourite Isle, With zeal performs the task he loves, And every gracious boon improves.

Blest Delegate, if now there lies Ripening in yonder pregnant skies

225

Some great event of more than common good.

Though envy howl with all her brood,

Thy wonted power employ,

Usher the mighty moments in Sacred to harmony and joy,

And from this zera let their coarse begin!

ODE on bis MAJESTY'S BIRTH-DAT.

Baid to be written by a very great Lady on the 4th of last June.

Ť.

WHEN monarchs give a grace to fate,
And rife as princes thou'd, Lefs highly born than truly great,
Lefs dignify'd than good.

What joy the natal day can bring From whence our hopes began, Which gave a nation such a king, And being such a man!

HI.

The facred fource of endless pow'r Delighted fees him born,
And kindly marks the circling hour
That spoke him into morn.

Beholds him with the kindest eye
Which goodness can bestow;
And shews a brighter crown on high,
Than e'er he wore below,

A Specimen of Saragon Poetry, from Aubalfidal Annales Mollemici .-

On a Cat killed in a Dove-bouse.

Ī.

SWEET puls, whom as a child I lov'd;
And as a child now mourn!
From home, ungrateful, halt thou rov'd;
Ah, never to return!

H.

Nor doubts you felt, nor fears express'd, Though creeping to your fate; While on my fond presaging break Unbidden bodings fate.

Yot. XIII.

Q

III. Into

226 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770

III.

Into the dove-cot fost and slow
You steal your cautious way;
But once an entrance found, not so
You seize your sluttering prey.

But in thy steps swift vengeance treads, And winds thee in her snare: The hunter, where the toils he spreads, Himself should perish there.

The tender dove with curious scent say, wherefore you pursu'd;
Nor rested, wretched puss, content
With mice thy proper food—?

That ever food, of life the spring, Should be of life the bane! Curst be such dainty feasts as bring Destruction in their train.

The HORSE and the OLIVE.

By the late Archdeacon Parnell, not yet printed in his Works.

Whilst thus I sing to make the moderns wise: Strong Neptune once with sage Minerva strove, And rising Athens was the victors prize.

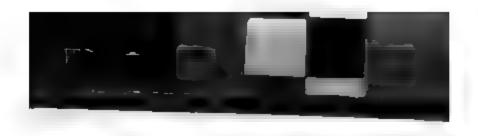

By Neptune, Plutus (guardian pow'r of gain), By great Minerva, bright Apollo stood; But Jove superior bade the side obtain, Which best contriv'd to do the nation good.

Then Neptune striking, from the parted ground The warlike horse came pawing on the plain, And as it tost its mane, and pranc'd around, By this he cries, I'll make the people reign.

The Goddess, smiling, gently bow'd her spear, And rather thus they shall be bless'd, she said: Then upwards shooting in the vernal air, With loaded boughs the fruitful Olive spread.

Jove saw what gift the rural powers design'd,
And took th' impartial scales, resolv'd to show,
If greater bliss in warlike pomp we find,
Or in the calm which peaceful times bestow.

(

227

On Neptune's part he plac'd victorious days, Gay trophies woo, and fame extending wide; But plenty, fafety, fcience, arts, and eafe, Minorva's fcale with greater weight supply'd.

Fierce war devours whom gentle peace would fave;
Sweet peace reftores what angry war defiroys;
War made for peace, with that rewards the brave,
While peace it's pleafures from itself enjoys.

Hence vanquish'd Neptune to the sea withdrew, Hence wise Minerva rul'd Athenian lands; Her Athens hence in arts and honours grew, And still her Olives deck pacific hands.

From fables thus disclos'd, a monarch's mind May form just rules to chuse the truly great, And subjects weary'd with distresses find, Whose kind endeavours most befriend the state.

E'en Britain here may learn to place her love,
If cities won, her kingdom's wealth have coft;
If Anna's thoughts the patriot fouls approve,
Whose cares reflore that wealth the wars had loft.

But if we ask, the moral to disclose, Whom her best patronus Europa calls, Great Anna's title no exception knows, And unapply'd in this the sable falls.

With her nor Neptune or Minerva vies;
Whene'er the pleas'd, her troops to conquest flew:
Whene'er the pleases, peaceful times arise:
She gave the Horse, and gives the Olive too.

On throwing by an old black Coat,

O LD friend, farewell—with whom full many a day, In varied mirth and grief, bath roll'd away. No more thy form retains its fable dye, But, like grey beauty, palls upon the eye—That form which shone so late in fashion's bloom! How fallen!—ere while the glory of the loom! Late, wrapt secure within thy woollen folds. I brav'd the summer rains, and winter colds. Fearless of coughs, catarrhs, which Eurus brings, Or dark November, on his noisome wings, Whistling a tune, like Cymon in the song, Through filthy streets and lanes I've trudg'd along;

Nor

ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770. 228

Nor heeded aught the Hackney Coachman's cries, Though coach your bonour sounded to the skies: And shall I then forget thy brighter hue, Sell thee a flave to yonder hoarfe-mouth'd Jew? Forbid it gratitude—forbid it shame— That were a deed would blacken Clodio's name. Thou poor old man, whose brow is streak'd with care, Stretch'd on the clay-cold earth, thy bosom bare, Had I but half that Clodio's shining store, Thy break should heave with misery no more: Yet take the scanty pittance I bestow, This coat shall shield thee from the drifting snow. But ere we part—indulge the moral lay, Hear it, ye fools, who flutter life away:

Vain are the rich man's toils, the proud man's brags, Men turn to dust—and broad cloth turns to rags.

The EXPOSTULATION. To DELIA, by Lord G.

POR ever, O! merciless sair,
Will that cruel indifference endure? Can those eyes look me into despair, And that heart be unwilling to cure?

If I love, will you doom me to die, Or, if I adore you, upbraid? Can that breast the least pity deny To the wretch which your beauty has made?

How oft what I felt to disguise Has my reason imperiously strove, Till my foul almost fell from my eyes, In the tears of the tenderest love!

Till render'd unable to flow, By the torture's excess which I bore. That nature funk under the woe. Or only recover'd to more.

Then Delia determine my fate, Nor let me to madness be drove: But, O! do not tell me you hate, If you even resolve not to love.

229

The FETTY By Las, MARY S.

Or think this boson your truth,
My tears, also I must own your truth,
And with it could reward.

Th' excess of unaba ing woe,

Thus tortur's bre is endured,

Too well, alas! sould make me know,

The pain that iwells in yours.

Condemn'd like you to weep in vair,
I feek the darkeft grove,
And fondly bear the fharpeft pain
Of never-hoping love.

My wasted day, in endless sight,
No sound of comfort hears,
And morn but breaks on Delia's eyes
To wake her into tears.

If sleep should lead her friendly aid,
In fancy I complain,
And hear some sad, some wretched maid,
Or see some perjur'd swain.

Then ceafe thy fuit, fond youth, O ceafe,
Or blame the fates alone;
For how can I reflore your peace,
Who quite have loft my own?

APRAYER " INDIFFERENCE By Ma. G-

Found in Richmond Garden.

OFT I've implor'd the gods in vain,
And pray'd till I've been weary;
For once I'll firive my wish to gain,
Of Oberon, the fairy.

Sweet airy being, wanton sprite,
Who liv'th in woods unfeen,
And oft by Cynthia's filver light,
Tripp'd gayly o'er the green;

232 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1779,

While floods of tears, and piteous moan,
A genuine forrow testify,
Silent, poor Henry's seen alone,
No tear bedews poor Henry's eye.

We grasp at joys within our reach;
We grasp, and catch a watery bow:
Lessons like these should mankind teach,
True joy exists not here below.

To FEAR.

Thou, dread foe to honour, wealth and fame, Whose tongue can queil the strong, the sierce can tame, Relentless Fear! ah! why did fate ordain My trembling heart to own thy iron reign? There are, thrice happy! who disdain thy sway, The merchant wand'ring o'er the wat'ry way; The chief serene before th' assaulted wall, The climbing statesman thoughtless of his fall; All whom the love of wealth or pow'r inspires, And all who burn with proud Ambition's fires: But peaceful bards thy constant presence know, O thou of ev'ry glorious deed the foe! Of thee the filent studious race complains, And Learning groans a captive in thy chains. The secret wish when some fair object moves, And cautious Reason what we wish approves, Thy gorgon front forbids to grasp the prize, And seas are spread betwixt; and mountains rise. Thy magic arts a thousand phantoms raise, And fancy'd deaths and dangers fill our ways; With smiling Hope you wage eternal strife, And envious fnatch the cup of juy from life. O leave, tremendous pow'r! the blameless breast, Of guilt alone the tyrant, and the guest; Go, and thy train of sable horrors spread Where Muider meditates the future deed, Where Rapine watches for the gloom of night, And lawless Passion pants for others right; Go to the bad, but from the good recede, No more the toe of ev'ry glorious deed.

POETRT,

Une termation eft defice.

FORSEN. SE FOUNDATION of FAME.

Translated from Rouffeau.

Pro W, he wins! when Rome is on fire, Or on hence Alexander by praisid, Who with fire every nation has blazid?

Shan I call that a virtuous rage
Which can murderous valour infuse,
Which no crie, no diffress can assuage,
Which its fleel in my bosom embraces?
Can I make my mouth speak 'gainst my mind,
And force it to praise all the rayage
Which is made by a hero, a savage
Who is born for the grief of mankind.

What horrible pictures I fee! Ye conquerors, deaf to pity. Vows broken, and projects conceiv'd. And kings of their kingdoms bereav'J.

City walls all encompassed by fire,
Men and stones to the stame fact a prey.
With blood all the conquirors perspite,
And death sweeps a nation away;
Mothers, pale and distinct with blood.
Snatch their daughters from infamy's hold,
From the arm of a soldier that's bold.
From a grasp that's inhuman and rude.

Magnanimous warriers, display
Your courage in full open day;
Let it quickly, ye warriors, he shewn.
How your hearts will fustain Fortune's frown;
When bortone gives aid to your arms.
You are conquerors great of the earth;
Your glory are reason disarms,
Your glory are like Prophus breaks forth.
But the ild became her succour deny.
The mask to is from before your pale face,
You to method of our human race,
And the hero is fled from the eye.

The PETITION of the FOOLS to JUPITER.

FABLE.

[Supposed to be written by David Garrick, Esq. addressed to the Lot of Chesterfield.)

ROM Grecian Æsop, to our GAY, Each fabulist is pleas'd to say, That Jove gives ear to all petitions, From animals of all conditions; Like earthly kings, he bears their wants, And like them too not always grants. Some years ago—the Fools assembled, Who long at STANHOPE's wit had trembled, And with repeated strokes grown fore, Most zealously did Jovs implore, That he would shield them from that wit, Which, pointed well, was sure to hit: 'Twas hard, they said, to be thus baited, That were not by themselves created; And if they were to folly prone, The fault, they hop'd, was not their own. Jove smil'd, and said-Not quite so fast: You were, indeed, made up in haste; With little care I form'd your brain, But never made you pert and vain: STANHOPE himself would be your friend, Did you not strive my work to mend, And wildly straying from my rules, Make yourselves fops, whom I made fools: But tell me how, for I am willing To grant your wish, on this side killing, And shield you for the time to come.— " Strike CHESTERFIELD, deaf, blind, and dumb," es First, in his Tongue, fuch terrors lie, " If that is stopp'd he can't reply: " To stop his tongue, and not his ears,

"Will only mustiply our fears;

"He'll answer both in prose and verse,

And they will prove a latting curse: "Then Tiop, O fire of gods and men,

"That still more dreadful tongue, his pen:

" Spare not, good Jove, his lordship's fight,

We ne'er shall rest, if he can write." Hold, hold-cries Jove, a moment stay; You know not fools, for what you pray:

235

Your malice, thooting in the dark, Has driv'n the arrow o'er the mark. Deaf, dumb, and blind, ye filly folk! Is all this rancour for a joke? Shall I be pander to your hate, And mortals teach to rail at fate? To mend a little your condition, And grant one third of your petitions He shall be deaf, and you be free From his keen, brilliant repartée, Which, like high-temper'd polish'd fleel, Will quicker wound, than you can feel: With fear, with weakness we comply, But fill what malice afks, deny : How would Apollo, Hermes, (wear, Should I give ear to all your pray'r, And blaft the man, who from his birth Has been their fav'rite care on earth? What, tie his tongue, and cloud his fight, That he no more may talk and write! I can't indulge your foolish pride, And punish all the world beade.

An Answer in the Name of Lord Chefferfield.

ARRICK, I've read your Feel's Petition,
And thank you for the composition;
Though few will credit all you fay,
Yet 'tis a friendly part you play;
A part which you perform with ease,
Whate'er you act is sure to please.

But give me leave, on this occasion,
To make one little observation:
Though no good reason is assign'd,
At least not any I can find,
Why I should be deaf, dumb, or blind;
Yet since it was resolv'd above
By this same sool-obeying Jova,
I must not speak, or hear, or see,
Surely to soften the decree,
He might have lest the choice to me.
Were that the case I would dispense,
With sight and wit, and eloquence,
Still to retain my fav'rite sense;
For grant, my friend, we should admit,
What some may doubt, that I have wit a

Whee

236 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

What are the mighty pow'rs of speech, What useful purpose do they reach? When vain and impotent you see, Ev'n down from Socrates to me, All the bons mots that e'er were said To mend the heart or clear the head, Fools will be fools, say what we will, And rascals will be rascals stil!.

But rather I your case would be in, Say you, than lose the power of seeing; The face of nature will you say Is ever chearful, ever gay, And beauty, parent of delight, Must always charm the ravish'd fight.

This choice perhaps I might commend;
But here, you have forgot, my friend,
That Nature's face, and Beauty's heav'n,
Lose all their charms at seventy-seven;
The brightest scenes repeated o'cr,
As well you know, will please no more;
The prospect's darken'd o'er with age,
The Drama can no more engage,
We wish, with you, to quit the stage.

In thor, it is a point I'm clear in,
The best of senses is, our hearing;
Happy who keeps it still, and he Who wants must mourn the loss like me;
For though I little should regret
The table's roar where sools are met,
The flatt'ring tribe who sug or say
The lies or tastle of the day;
Still have I cause for discontent,
Still lose what most I must lament,
The converse of a chosen sew,
The luxury of—bearing you.

A WISH to the North. By a Lady,

Liberty! blest gift of Heav'n,
Why sighs my breast for thee in vain a Alas! by tyrants far thou'rt driven,
And rude constraint uturps thy reign.
O wert thou mine! no more consin'd
To doze out life in one calm dream,
Ye Surry vales I'd leave behind,
And ply my bark on Humber's stream,

237

Pair stream I transported wou'd I view Thy fruitful vallies, blooming groves; There would my ravish'd mind porfue, Such feenes as contemplation loves, Thy fan ptuous dwellings, Rately piles, Thy wealthy, ample, wide domains, Where Amaltheas' bounty imiles, And swells the tribute of thy plains. Or if to pensive thought inclin'd, I'd read thy mournful annals o'er, And view the time when wars combin'd, To chafe those blessings from thy shore. When thorny roles ting'd with blood, Rais'd fierce commotion through the land, And victory suspended stood, And wav'd the laurel in her band. Ill-fated Henry! then I'd mourn The flormy tempest of thy reign! Thy weeping confort left forlorn, Thy fon too, number'd with the flain! A tear should blot the guilty page, Where Rutland dies in early bloom, Fell'd by the hand of favage rage, And doom'd by flaughter to the tomb. And when from hist'ry's tragic stores I turn'd, to view thele horrors cesse, I'd blefs the power that guards our shores, And suppliant ask eternal peace. But cease, my Muse, these lays of art, Nor more prolong th' ambiguous ples, Ah! Love forgive, my conscious heart Revokes the firain, and turns to thee! Thine is the wish that foudly roves, That thus inspires th' enraptur'd theme, That leads the Muse to Northern groves, And wafts her fight to Humber's ftream.

» a Robin, which has lately taken up his Residence in the Cathedral at Briftol, and accompanies the Organ with his Singing.

SWEET, focial bird! whose soft harmonious lays, Swell the glad song of thy Creator's praise, Say, art thou conscious of approaching ills? Fell Winter's storm:—the pointed blass that kills? Shunn's thou the savage North's unpitying breath? Or cruel man's more latent snares of death? Here dwell secure; here, with incessant note, Four the soft music of thy trembling throat.

238 ANNUAL REGISTER, 1770.

Here, gentle bird, a sure asylum find, Nor dread the chilling frost, nor boist'rous wind. No hostile tyrant of the feather'd race, Shall dare invade thee in this hallowed place; Nor while he sails the liquid air along, Check the shrill numbers of thy chearful song. No cautious gunner, whose unerring sight Stops the swift eagle in his rapid flight, Shall here disturb my lovely songster's rest, Nor wound the plumage of his crimson breast, The truant school-boy, who, in wanton play, With viscid lime involves the treach'rous spray, In vain shall spread the wily snare for thee. Alike secure thy life and liberty. Peace then, sweet warbler, to thy flutt'ring heart; Defy the rage of hawks, and toils of art: Now shake thy downy plumes; now gladlier pay Thy grateful tribute to each rising day; While crowds below their willing voices raise, To fing with holy zeal Jebovab's praise, Thou, perch'd on bigb, shall hear th' adoring throng, Catch the warm strains, and aid the sacred song, Increase the solemn-chorus, and inspire Each tongue with music, and each heart with fire.

Part of the LAST CHORUS of the Second All of Scatti

RAIL is the state of visionary man, His pleasures transient, and his life a span: At morn he blooms, with conscious pride elate, At eve he shrinks, and dreads impending fate. So the gay flow'r that decks the woodland glade, Is doom'd to blossom, and is doom'd to fade. When Fate demands our tributary breath, Then say, O reas'ner! what thou dread'st in death? Oft, on a dunghill, Virtue's left to rot, Its worth neglected, and its charms forgot; Whilst gaudy villains reap the wish'd-tor prize, And ill-got trappings strike our wond'ring eyes. How round the heart the foft affections twine, When the tear falls at injur'd Virtue's shrine? But oft we stretch our aid to worth in vain And pity adds but to a life of pain. The rose that scents the zephyr's balmy wing, Beneath its leaves retains a poignant sting. No real joys from wealth or fortune flow, Nay length of life is but protracted woe.

#39

Then what is death? Why should the name affright, The empty bugbear of a winter's night? Why should we shudder at this final blow, Which foothes each care, and drowns the voice of woe? Let minds which float on Fancy's airy wing, Paint fields Elyfian and eternal spring; Let fad enthutiafts form a dreary cave. And feel the blast which curls Cocytus' wave: Be mine the lot to pass unheeded through Life's mazy path, and take a transient view Of fleeting blifs, while now and then a (mile Plays on my lips, each forrow to beguile; Not over fond of life, nor fearing death, Content and tranquil I'll refign my breath; For, though with airy joys our fancies teem, Sure life and death are but an anxious dream.

FAME and bis COMPANIONS. A poetical Fable. By the Rev. Mr. R-.

Thappen'd once upon a time,

(A phrase made choice of for the rhime)

Water and Fire agreed to stray,

With Fame, the partner of their way.

Fire was a noisy, rattling blade,

Water, a bashful, gentle maid.

Nor let the wise with wonder read

That two such contraries agreed;

For greater opposites than these,

The love of Fame unites with ease.

Through various realms they travell'd long, Went often right, but oft'ner wrong. Fire sometimes miss'd his proper road, And in a Miser's chimney glow'd; Water, mistaking her defign, Intruded frequently on wine, While Fame, deluded by the crowd, Lodg'd with the crafty and the proud.

Thus, men of different tafte, in vain Attempt one project to suffain; For while they dream of doing wonders, They lead each other into blunders.

At length, with various errors tir'd,
Their first defign a change requir'd;
Water and Fire to gain their ends,
Propos'd to part—but part as friends:
Each was to leave some mark behind him,
That t'other, at a pinch, might find him.

240 ANNUAL REGISTER, 179d.

Where sprightly verdure decks the ground, (Says Water) " I shall still be found.

"With wealth and pow'r sometimes I dwells

"But oftener in the hermit's cell.

"Banish'd from feasts by nobler claret,

" I seek the raptur'd poet's garret;

"Where trade prevails, my torrents flow,

My streams where bending offers grow."
Where circling clouds of smoke aspire,

* You're fure to meet with me (fays Fire);

Deep in the bowels of the mine,

• And in the stars above, I shine;

In every house on winter nights,

In every verse the poet writes;

· Illuminate, as whims prevail,

A city, or a glow-worm's tail.

"Comrades, (says Fame) I own I'm loth

"To tell my temper to you both;

" When lov'd and courted by my friends,

" My care their ev'ry step attends;

When view'd with a neglectful eye,

" Stung with th' affront, at once I fly.

Since this the case, from either side,

" It gives me forrow to divide;

"You, when you please, by certain signs,

When Love or Interest inclines,

"Again may meet, tho' now you sever;

 But—whom I leave, I leave for ever."

Written by a Brewer's Daughter, on her Father's discharging his Goeth for getting in Liquor.

TONEST William, an easy and good-natur'd fellow, Wou'd a little too oft' get a little too mellow: Body Coachman was he to an eminent Brew'r, No better e'er sat on a box to be sure; His Coach he kept clean—no Mother or Nurses Took more care of their Babes, than he took of his Horses: He had these, aye, and fifty good qualities more, But the business of tippling cou'd ne'er be got o'er; So his master effectually mended the matter, By hiring a man who drank nothing-but water. Now William, says he, you see the plain case; Had you drank as he does, you'd have kept a good place. Drink water! quoth William,-had all men done so, You ne'er wou'd have wanted a coachman, I trow; For 'tis Soakers like me, whom you load with reproaches, That enable you Brewers to ride in your Coaches.

WISD

.•

WISDOM and HEALTH.

OME roseate Health, my temples bind With thy celestial wreath;

And thou, blest Wisdom, on my mind

Thy choicest odours breathe.

As dearest friends together live,
Like them you pine apart;
Health gone, not Wisdom e'er can give Pure rapture to the heart.

If Wisdom sly the youthful breast,
Not smiling Health can gain
To it the cordial balm of rest,
A mind exempt from pain.

Come then, twin daughters of the skies, Here make your social stay; The moment either from me slies, Desth snatch my soul away.

On the DEATH of the MARQUIS of GRANEY.

Why fall the streaming tears from ev'ry eye? The noble Rutland's brow with sadness spread, Proclaims that Grandy, generous Grandy's dead! To sate all must submit, the great, the brave, The sage philosopher, and courtly slave; And when pale death dissociates the soul From her weak tenement, the mansion whole, To native earth return'd, there mould'ring lies, But virtue pure exists, and death desies: Hence all thy ancestors, O Grandy! live, Their noble deeds our faithful annals give: Nor shall thy worth be less inroll'd with same, As great thy merit, and belov'd thy name.

T. L:

#A

ANOTHER.

OF courage, honour, charity the boaft,
Was noble GRANDY—but though early loft,
Though early mingled with the honour'd dead,
Each Muse a tear upon his hearse shall shed;
Shall strive the memory of his worth to save,
And plant with laurels his distinguish'd grave.
Yet. XIII.

An Account of Books for 1770.

A Journey from London to Genoa, through England, Portugal, Spain, and France. By Joseph Barretti, Secretary for foreign Correspondence to the Royal Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture. [In 4 vols. 8vo.]

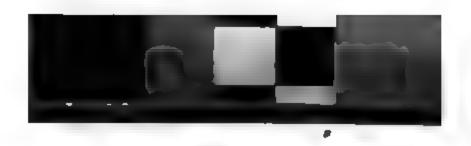

Whom we have formerly had occasion to make favourable mention of as a writer, from his account of the customs and manners of Italy, published in the year 1768) is a foreigner; nor will the attentive reader want any proofs of it. Indeed from the general purity and propriety of the diction, we should almost suspect that these little trips in the language, were not undesigned; but were left by the author as a fort of mark, to prove his title to the work.

We have mentioned the propriety of the diction, but it were doing great injustice to this gentleman, to confine his praise as a writer to meer propriety of diction; we must do him the honour of owning, that he has attained to that masterly command of the language, that would not discredit the very best of our own writers.

The work before us is the story of a journey digested into letters; and in the character of epistolary writing, we have not, perhaps, in the language, any thing more to be commended. It preserves the true genius of that mode of compostion; and we cannot but regret, that the fourth volume is rather a diary, and consequently wasts that engaging and interesting manner that characterizes the three sist volumes.

The author seems in his preface to apologize in some fort for his frequent egotism, and his venturing to make himself the bero of his own tale: but in fact, the man who writes his own journey much be his own hero. Befides which, the circumstance of drawing his remarks on the customs and masses of the people, from incidents of the journey, and thereby making them, as it were, part of a flory, is a very happy and dexterous method of instruction. The Fandange for one example out of a thousand, we all knew was a Spanish dance; but Mr. Barretti carries us with him, we find the people here and there, and every where employed is the dance; we make one in the party; and are more convinced of his opinion that the Spaniards are a lively people, than if he had spent an hundred pages to consete the vulgar notion of their unconquerable gravity. Though the scene is laid in Portugal, of some of the extracts that we shall make upon this occasion; yet as the dance, and the manners in this inflance, are the same in both countries, and the actors here, composed of both natices;

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS. 243

t includes the one, gives an ive description of the other, author, giving an account of asks who danced in the at Estremor, proceeds as

, number of them flopped in t where fome ladies fat in a y, and there they began a

A young fellow amongst ngularly attracted my attennd indeed that of the whole 19, with his vimble capers sceful motions. I have aleen the Portuguele dance in , and to give them their due, on (of those that I have seen) has any dance performed perfons, to exhibarating as andango. The Trescone of sicans, the Furlana of the ans, the Corrente of the rines, and the Minnet or mable of the French, are flat sauces in comparison of that one which I saw executed hat balcony, by that young d a boy dreffed in woman's

But dances cannot be ed by words, nor can I conyou any idea of the Fanbut by telling you that mb was in such a motion as be called with propriety a and harmonious convulsion whole body. I have heard h master in Lisbon blame is and say it was no dance at t what dance will be apby a Frenchman that is not clion of his country? He idea of gracefulness but practised on the operaParis.

inhabitants of this country, as the Andalusians and the ans, were famous for dancing fo far back as the times of the Romans, and their young women used then to go and dance at Rome and in other parts of the Roman baipire, where they eafily captivated the hearts of confuls and proconfuls, as the female dancers of France go now to Italy, Germany, and England, to enamour Signors, Minbeers, and Mylords. Martial mentions, with fatyrical peevishness, the Betick and the Gaditan female dancers; and the eldest Scaliger, somewhere in his poeticks, fays fomething of the dancing anciently used in the provinces that lie this way. You are lucky, my brothers, that I travel without a Martial and a Scaliger. Had I their books, I would not let this opportunity flip without making as great a waste of erudition as our Bartoli the antiquarian does fo often."

We shall now attend our traveller to Elvas, where he fays:

kind of gallery, which opened into feveral rooms full of people. This gallery was foread with men who flept wrapped up in their cloaks. As I advanced amongst them I felt the floor shaking; and as my head has been filled with earthquakes ever since I reached Portugal, it occurred on a sudden that the ground was shaking; but presently was sensible that the concustion was caused by my moving along that ill-constructed floor.

As I was walking and waiting for my supper, some young muleicers came out of the side-rooms. One of them began to tickle his guittar, and another produced a song to the tune. They had scarcely gone on three minutes with their performance, when the sleepers started up.

R s

vbile

while more than thirty people came out of those side-rooms; and a dance was begun. A man cut a caper by way of reverence to a woman, and the woman advanced immediately to dance the Fandango There is no possibility with him. of conveying to you any just idea of their hilarity, nimbleness, and elasticity. There were four Spanish and fix Portuguele semales. Out of the ten I took only notice of One was a brownish girl called Terefuela, whom I foon found to be the best singer of them The other two were filters; the younger so renowned in the towns around for a beauty, that she goes under the appellation of la bella Catalina. The elder is not so handsome, but has such eyes! What a pity the comparison of the stars is no more in fashion.

The dresses of these women were all gaudy, especially the Spanish, who are come from Badajos with some male friends to see Elvas-fair. I must repeat it, that I have seen various dances from Parenzo in Istria to Derby in England: but none of them is comparable to what I saw here to-night. It is true that their gestures and attitudes are fometimes not so composed as one could wish: yet, if I was possessed of the abilities of Martial, instead of running down the Fandango and the Seguedilla, which I fuppose were the dances he satyrized, I would write a thousand epigrams in praise of them, of Teresuela, of Catalina, and most particularly of Paolita, who has those eyes I mentioned! Oh this Paolita!

Both the Fandango and the Seguedilla are danced either at the found of the guittar alone, or the guittar accompanied by the voice, which is an advantageous addition when the guittarist happens to have a good voice. Both men and women, while dancing, give a double clap with their thumbs and middle fingers at every cadence, and both dances (the Fandango especially; are rather made up with graceful motions and quick striking of their heels and soes on the ground than with equal and continued Reps. They dance close to each other, then wheel about, then approach each other with food eagerness, then quickly retire, then quickly approach again, the man looking the woman steadily in the face, while the keeps her head down, and fixes her eyes on the ground with as much modelty as the cas put on.

I had slept but poorly for three nights together, and was so much tired with this day's journey, performed a-foot for the greatest part, that I was just debating whether I should, or not, go supperiess to bed. But this unexpected seas changed my thoughts infantly, and instead of going to rest, I should there gazing with my whole soul absorbed in delight.

The fellows who but a moment before were sleeping on that sloor, without the least ceremony, or the least shame of their rags, danced away with the gaudy, as well as with the dirty women (for some of them were dirty enough;) nor dd any of the company show the least partiality to age, to dress, or to beauty, but all seemed to dance merely for dancing-sake. I was a little surprized to see a shabby rascal take up so clean a girl as Teresuels, who was the sacst of them.

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS, 245

all, and look sweeter upon ian any petis maitre would at upon a rich and tender v. This would not have been ed in any of the countries I visited, where the ill-dressed company with the ill-dressed, he fine with the fine, without freaming of such mixtures as ractifed in this part of the s corner of this gallery there urge table. Upon the table oth was laid, and my supper i. There I sat down to cat, at ceremony or shame, in my ving almost done, Batiste put: me a large English cake by Madam Kelly. This cake up into slices, and placing pyramidically upon a plate, to present it round to the, paying them a Castilian iment that I had been a trof an hour in composing, of them with the most disemsed countenance picked up ce, some with a how, some is smile, and some with a kind z cake being thus disposed, I I to the gentlemen (muletafs-drivers, and all) and them Fidalgo's and Cavalinvited them to drink the of the amables Baylarinas ble for dancers) which they all th the noblett freedom and ft afacrity; and much was meral joy encreased by this i pièce of outlandith manners. l of them, who till then had y deigned to look on the geiro, or feemed afraid to to him, now thook hims by ad, and each had something to me either in Spanish or ucle.

To the ladies, after the cake I ordered glasses of water, because I knew that to offer them wine would have spoiled all the good I had done, and the offer construed into a gross affront; in such esteem is sobriety amongst these people. One of them, who was with child, sent to ask a slice of the ham, and her example was followed by the rest."

To fill up the picture, we shall now attend our author to Madrid, where, in the account he gives of the Carnival customs, we again meet the Fandange, as we do indeed upon many other occasions.

"The carnival customs have undergone some change at Madrid, as the King has built there a very grand hall, called el Amphitheatro, where thousands refort twice a week during the carnival-time, Any body marked is admitted there for only twenty reals (not quite five shillings) and passes there the whole night with as much pleafore as fuch a place can afford. There the dancing place is spacious enough for three hundred couples to dance at a time, and there are feats round it, amphitheatrically disposed, with three large galleries over, which admit are or az thouland people more. The hall has four spacious stair-cases at the four corners, that lead up to the galleries, and to several large rooms, where people may have hot and cold suppers at choice, coffee, chocolate, lemonades, and other refreshments, every thing near as cheap as at home. A confiderable number of waiters attend, all uniformly dreffed in pompadourcolour. Befides these conveniences, there are two large rooms with four beds in each, one for the men, R 3 ne other for the women, who hould happen to he taken suddenly ill; and there are physicians and furgeons regularly attending, as well as four dancing-masters to direct the country dances, and teach their various motions and evolutions to those who do not know them well. Normult I omit to mention two fmall rooms with inscriptions over their doors, one Jaula per los páxaros, the other Jaula por las páxaras; that is, a cage for the cock-birds, a cage for the henbirds; in plain language, a jail for the men and a jail for the women. Should any body raise any disturbance, or behave with any indecency there, he would be shut up for the night by the guards attending at the entrance-door.

I have seen above fix hundred people dance at once the Fandango in that amphitheatre; and it is not possible to give an idea of such a rapturous diversion. The enthufialm that feizes the Spaniards the moment that the Fandango is touched, is a thing not to be conceived. I saw hundreds of them at supper, quit instantly the tables, tumble precipitously down the stair-cases, throng promiscuously into the dancing place, face about for a partner that was found in an instant, and full a dancing, beeth men and women, with fuch a vigour as to beggar all description. the place ample enough, there is not one of them that would remain a simple spectator, as many are forced to be. Those who are forced to it, fland gazing from the feats below or the galleries shove, with sparkling eyes and lin.bs trembling, and encourage the dancers with clamour and clapping of hands. There is a small printed book, intitled, Bajle de mascaras, &c. printed at Madrid in 1763, that sets forth the laws to be observed at the amphitheaue. Should any body contravene any of those laws, he would instantly be thrust into one of the Jaulas. The band there conside of forty instruments, that play alternately twenty at a time, so that the dancing is never stopped as long as the night lasts; that is, from nine o'clock at night till six in the morning."

The great objects of travel, and what would draw the attention of the statesman, the lawgiver, or the commercial politician, were not to be comprehended in the Mort space of time that Mr. Barretti allowed himself to spend on his tour; he, however, spent that little time so agreeably to him and his readers, that we must regret that he did not afford himfelf more leisure. He went very fast indeed through Portugal, which does not appear to be his favourite country, He seems there to feel some of those national prejudices that we all complain of, are all ashamed of, and perhaps have all experienced more or less. But our author, for the most part, generously carries the antidote for the poilon which he may have scattered in his haste.

In Spain, our author's prejudices (if he has any) are all on the good-natured fide; and as this country had seemed to him an object more engaging to his affections, and more worthy of his attention; we regret that he did not sojourn a while longer in it. While his prejudices contribute to his satisfiction, and render him a kind spectator of what he saw, we are pleased pleased to indulge his preposses-Sons: but when he blindly adopts the wild infatuated politics of an uninformed bigotted people, we are obliged to quit him, and to lament that he has rendered himfelf liable to objections that no other writer of this age is subject to; he is indeed the only man who, at this time, can find either good fense or good policy in the eruel treatment which the Morifcoes met with in that country. So neat a mafter in language, could not, however, omit an attention to the various tongues that are spoken in that kingdom, and the reader may be curious to fee an extract from his differtation on the Bikayan language.

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS.

The Biscayan language, or Bascoenze, as they call it, according to the idea that I have been able to form of it, must be divided at least into three dialects; of which the first, or mother-tongue, must be called Biscayan, the second Navarran, and the third

The Biscayan dialect, or motheratorgue, I take to be that, which is spoken through that part of Biscay, the inhabitants of which consider the town of Bilbao, or rather that of Orduna, to be their capital. The chief seat of this dialect, or tongue, I take to be that, which is spoken in either of those towns, only six Bafoue.

The Navarran dialect I call that which is spoken through the best part of the little kingdom of Navarre: and as Pampeluna is the capital of that kingdom, it is to be supposed that the puret Navarran is spoken at Pampeluna.

leagues diffant from each other,

The Basque dialect I term that which is spoken through that track of country, called Pais de Buique by the French, to whom it belongs. That Pais is chiefly formed by thirty-three villages and their territories, all fubject to the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishoprick of Bayonne. And as the most confiderable of those thirty-three villages is San Juan de Luz, there, suppose, the best Basque is spoken, the chief people of the Païs de Basque residing in that village, which the French term a hearg or wille, to give it fome preeminence over the rest of those villages.

247

The most capital Bascuenze-work is doubtless the solio Dictionary, compiled by father Laramendi, a Jesuit. The dictionary bears the title of Trilingue, because it runs in Bascuenze, Castilian, and Latin. As it has been printed only once, it is now become so searce, that I could not find a copy of it any where, much to my disappointment, as I am informed that its presace, though penned in a most turgic strain, contains a great deal of rare erudition.

Next the Dictionary comes the Grammar, composed by the same author, and oddly intitled, E! impssfible vencide, The impassibility conquered. In that grammar the Bafquenze is explained by the Caf-I am told it has gone ulian. through feveral editions. I have that which was printed at Salamanca, in 1729, and have repeatedly locked into it; but not yet to any purpose. In the prologo, or preface, it is faid, that el B.genenus es una lengua que congenia poco con las etras, The genius of the Biscavan bears no great affinity to that of other languager; and my reader will easily give credit to this affertion, when he is told, that you say in Spanish, for instance, that bread is good para aquel que le come, " for him subs eats it;" which phrase is rendered in the Biscayan language by one word only: jatenduenarentnat. But, though this is only one word, says father Laramendi, we must consider it as a compound of several; as jaten stands for the verb comér; du for the accusative lo; en or end for the relative que; and arentnat for the pronoun aquél, sollowed by the article para,

Ř 4 cakij

How easy a language thus constructed is to be learned, this only specimen may possibly give an idea. But, were it ever so easy, no great proficiency could be made in it by Andying it out of the country where it is spoken, as, besides *Laramendi's Dictionary and grammar, the number of books printed in Bascuenze is, as I said, quite inconsiderable. Eleven small volumes of Spiritual Discourses and Pious Meditations, a translation of Kempis's Imitation of Christ, another translation of Scupoli's Spiritual Combat, a short Catechilm, about half a dozen imall Collections of Prayers in profe, and of Spiritual Songs in verse, are almost the only works to be found printed in this language. I leave my reader to judge, whether it would be possible to learn it out of the country, by means of the small portion of it that is contained in so limited a library. But, was it even

I remember to have once read, in an English magazine, an account of an Irish priest, who, travelling through Biscay, could make shift with his Irish tongue, to understand the Biscayans, and be understood by them. But whether the possible, would it be worth the while?

anthor of that account imposed upon the public or not, let the reader determine by the help of the following transcription of the Lord's-prayer in Biscayan and Irish."

We must refer our curious readers to the original for this specimen, in which the Lord's-prayer is divided into sentences, and given in Latin, in Biscayan, and in Iris, and by which the two latter languages seem to have no connenies or resemblance.

The Life of Edward Lord Herbert of Cherbury. Written by himself.

HE ingenious editor of this work, with all that just and natural admiration which an editor commonly bears to his author, admits that his hero had perhaps some vanity, surely some wrong headedness: the admission is indeed act a forced one. But allowing his vanity, and his wrongheadedness, which was very much the cossequence of his vanity, he was, whether you confider him as a public or a private man, a person of coafiderable merit, which will induce the good-natured reader, more to lament than condemn a fort of feminine vanity, that led him to a too folemn avowal of perforal qualities, that are, as he says, indeed scarcely credible, and if they were, are of no merit; and yet he calls God to witness to their truths, as of things in themselves excellent and praise-worthy.

We can scarce however agree with the ingenious editor, that the whole relation throws singular light on the manners of the age. The age he lived in, does not seem to have considered our author as a mach

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS.

mach lefs fingular person, than we confider him at this day: Sir Edward Sackville, who was a man of as much rank and confideration as himfelt, declined to have any thing to do in his wanton quarrel with the governor of Lyons. In all prohability, he was in his own time considered, as he must be now, as a wery troublesome and yet respectable member of fociety. Perhaps we have the advantage of our anceftors in this particular, as Lord Herbert is a much better character to read than to have lived with; but his life, and the life of every man who has at all flood in a conspicuous light, will be a pleasant, and possibly an instructive entertainment, who writes from his real feelings, as Lord Herbert certainly does: it is in fact the history of his fervants and of his horses, as well as of himself, and thereby carries us most agreeably through all his scenes: we will therefore prefent the reader with his boar-hout, which is told in a natural and lively manner; and possibly the reader may find himfelf almost as much interested for the dogs as for the knight.

" One time also it was my fortung to kill a wild boar in this manner; the boar being roused from his den fled before our dogs for a good fpace, but finding them press him hard turned his bead against our dogs, and hurt three or four of them very dangeroully, I came on horseback up to him, and with my fword throft him twice or thrice without entering his fkin, the blade being not so fliff as it foold be; the boar hereapon turned upon me, and much endangered my horse, which I perceiving sid with my fword against the boar. who by this time had burt more dogs, and here happened a pretty kind of fight, for when I throst at the boar fometimes with my fword. which in some places I made gater. the boar would run at me, whose tofks yet by ftepping a little out of the way I avoided, but he then turning upon me, the dogs came in, and drew him off, fo that he fell apon them, which I perceiving ran at the boar with my fword again, which made him turn upon me, but then the dogs pulled him from me again, while to relieving one another by tures, we killed the boar. At this chace Monfieur Difancour and Mennon were prefent. as also Mr. Townsend, yet so as they did endeavour rather to withdraw me from than affirt me in the danger."

Our next extract will give a pretty good idea of the work and of the man; as it is a feetch of his ministerial conduct, and a fample of his personal whime.

" And now I shall mention some particular passages concerning myfelf, without entering yet any way into the whole frame and context of my negotiation, referring them, as I faid before, to a particular treatife; I speat my time much in the vilus of the princes, counsel of flate, and great persons of the French kingdom, who did ever pooctually requite my visits: the like I did also to the chief ambasfadors there, among whom the Venetian, Lou-Countrey, Savoy, and the united prioces in Germany ambaffadors did bear me that respect, that they usually met in my house, to advite together concerning the great affairs of that time : a little out of the way, and leaving for as the Spaniard then was so pomy horse with my lacky, returned tout that he fremed to affect an universal monarchy, all the abovementioned ambassadors did in one common interest strive to oppose him: all our endeavours yet cou'd not hinder, but that he both publickly prevailed in his attempts abroad, and privately did corrupt divers of the principal ministers of state in this kingdom. I came to discover this by many ways, but by none more effectually than by the means of an Italian, who returned over by letters of exchange the moneys the Spanish ambassador received for his occasions in France; for I perceiv'd that when the said Italian was to receive any extraordinary great fum for the Spanish ambassador's use, the whole face of affairs was presently changed, infomuch that neither my reasons, nor the ambassadors above-mentioned how valid foever cou'd prevail; tho' yet afterwards we found means together to reduce affairs to their former train; 'till some other new great fum coming to the Spanish ambassador's hand, and from thence to the aforesaid ministers of state, altered all. Howbeit divers visits past betwixt the Spanish ambaffalor and myfelf, in one of which he told me that tho' our interests were divers, yet we might continue friendship in our particular persons; for, said he, it can be no occasion of effence betwixt us, that each of us strive the best he can to serve the king his master: I disliked not his reasons, tho' yet I cou'd not omit to tell him that I wou'd maintain the dignity of the king my master the best I cou'd; and this I said because the Spanish ambaffador had taken place of the English in the time of Henry the fourth in this fashion, they both meeting in an anti-chamber to the Secretary of State, the Spanish amhassador leaning to the wall in that posture that he took the hand of the English ambassador, said publickly, I hold this place in the right of the king my master, which small punctilio being not resented by our ambassador at that time, gave the Spaniard occasion to brage that he had taken the hand from This made me our ambassador. more watchful to regain the honor which the Spaniard pretended to have gotten herein, fo that tho' the ambassador in his visits often repeated the words above-mentioned, being in Spanish Que cada uno haga lo que pudiere por fu amo; let every man do the best he can for his master; I attended the occation to right my master; it happened one day that both of us going to the French king for our feveral affairs, the Spanish ambassador between Paris and Ettampes, being upon his way before me in his coach, with a train of about 16 or 18 persons on horseback, I sollowing him in my coach with about 10 or 12 horse, found that either I must go the Spanish pace, which is flow, or if I haited to pass him, that I must hazard the suffering of some affront like unto that our termer ambassador received; propofing hereupon to my gentlemen the whole business, I told them that I meant to redeem the honour of the king my master some way or other, demanding further whether they wou'd affift me? which they promising, I bid the coachman drive on; the Spanish ambassador seeing me approach, and imagining what my intention was, fent a gentleman to me, to tell me he defired to falute me, which I accepting, the gentleman returned to the ambaifador, who alighting from his coach attended me in the middle of the bigh-

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS. 251

highway, which being perceiv'd by me I alighted also, when some extravagant compliments having past betwirt us, the Spanish ambassador sook his leave of me, went to a dry ditch not far off, upon pretence of making water, but indeed to hold the upper hand of me while I past by in my coach, which being observed by me I lest my coach, and getting upon a spare borfe I had there, rode into the faid dry ditch, and telling him aloud, that I knew well why he good there, bid him afterwards get to his coach, for I must ride that way: the Spanish ambassador, who underflood me well, went to his coach grumbling and discontented, thô yet neither he nor his train did any more than look one upon another in a confused manner; my coach this while passing by the ambassador on the same side I was, I thortly after left my horfe and got into it : it hap'ned this while, that one of my coach horfes having loft a shoe, I thought fit to stay at a fmith's forge, about a quarter of a mile before; this shoe cou'd not be put on fo foon, but that the Spanish ambasfador over onk us, and might indeed have past us, but that he thought I wou'd give him another affront; attending therefore the fmith's leafure, he flayed in the highway to our no little admiration, untill my horfe was Speed; we continued our journey to Estampes, the Spanish ambastador following us fill at a good didance.

I shou'd scarce have mentioned this passage, but that the Spaniarda do so much stand upon their pundonores; for confirming whereof I have thought sit to remember the answer a Spanish ambassador made to Philip the second king of Spain, who finding fault with him for neglecting a bulinels of great importance in Italy, but he con'd not agree with the French ambaffador about some such pundonore as this, said to him, como a dexado una cosa di importancia per una ceremonia! how have you lest a businels of importance for a ceremony; the ambassador boldly replied to his master, como por una ceremonia? vuessa majesta misma no es sino una ceremonia: how, for a ceremony? your majesty's self is but a ceremony.

Howfoever the Spanish ambassador taking no notice publickly of the advantage I had of him herein, distembled it as I heard 'till he cou'd find some fit occasion to resent this passage, which yet he never did to this day.

I shall relate now fome things concerning myfelf, which 'tho they may feem fearce credible yet before God are true; I had been now in France about a year and an half when my talour, Andrew Renly of Bafil, who now lives in Blackfryers, demanded of me half a yard of fatin to make me a fuit more than I was accultomed to give, of which I required a reason, saying, I was not fatter now than when I came to France; he answered, is wastrue, but you are taller: whereunto when I wou'd give no credit, he brought his old meafures, and made it appear that they did not reach to their just places; I told him I knew not how this hap'ned, but howfoever he fhou'd have half a yard more, and that when I came into England I wou'd clear the doubt, for a little before my departure thence, I remember William Earl of Pembrook and myfelf did measure heights together at the request of the Countels of Bedford,

and

and he was higher than I by about the breadth of my little finger; at my return therefore into England I measured again with the same Earl, and to both our great wonders found myself taller than he by the breadth of a little finger; which growth of mine I cou'd attribute to no other cause but to my quartan ague, which when it quitted me, left me in a more persect health than I formerly enjoyed.

I weighed myself in ballances often with men lower than myself by the head, and in their bodies Aenderer, and yet was found lighter than they, as Sir John Davers Knight, and Richard Griffiths now living can witness, with both whom I have been weighed; I had also, and have still a pulse on the crown of my head; it is well known to those that wait in my chamber, that the shirts, waishcoats, and other garments I wear next my body are fweet, beyond what either eafily can be believed, or hath been observed in any else, which sweetness also was found to be in my breath above others, before I used to take tobacco, which towards my latter time I was forced to take against certain rheumes and catarres that trouble me, which yet did not taint my breath for any long time,"

The following specimens of his conduct at the siege of Juliers, will be sufficient to give an idea of his knight errantry.

One day Sir Edward Cecill and myself coming to the approaches that Monsieur de Balagny had made towards a bullwark or bassion of that city, Monsieur de Balagny in the presence of Sir Edward Cecill and divers English and French captains then present, said, Monsieur, On dit, que vous êtes un des plus braves de vôtte nation, et je suis Balagny, allors voir qui faira le mieux; They say, you are one of the bravest of your nation, and I am Balagny, let m fee who will do best; whereupon leaping suddenly out of the treaches with his sword drawn, I did in the like manner as fuddenly follow him, both of us in the mean while ariving who shou'd get foremost, which being perceiv'd by those of the bullwark and cortine opposite to us, three or four hundred hot at least, great and small, were made against us. Our running on forwards in emulation of each other was the cause that all the shots fell betwixt us and the trench from which we fallied. When Monfieur Balagny, finding such a storm of bullets, said, "Par Dieu il sait bien chaud, it is very bot here;" I answered briefly thus, " Vous ca ires primier, autrement je n'iray jamais; You shall go first or else l will never go;" hereupon he ran with all speed, and somewhat crouching towards the trenches, I followed after leafurely and upright, and yet came within the trenches before they on the bullwark or cortine could charge again, which passage afterwards being related to the Prince of Orange, he said it was a strange bravado of Balagny, and that we went to an unavoidable death.

I could relate diverse things of note concerning myself, during the siege, but do sorbear, least I should relish too much of vanity; it shall suffice that my passing over the ditch unto the wall, and of all the nations there, is set down by William Cross Master of Arts, and soldier, who hath written and printed the history of the Low-Countries."

After

ACCOUNT OF BOOKS.

After relating a quarrel which happened between him and Lord

Walden, he goes on thus:

" Being among the French, I remembered myfelf of the bravado of Montieur Balagny, and coming to him told him, I knew how brave a man he was, and that as he had but me to one trial of daring, when I was last with him in his trenches, I would put him to another; faying I beard he had a fair mistress, and that the scarf he wore was her gift, and that I woold maintain I had a worthier mistress than he, and that I would do as much for her fake as he, or · any else durst do sor his; Balagny hereupon looking merrily upon me, faid, if we shall try who is the abler man to ferve his mifrels, let both of us get two wenches, and he that doth his befinels best, let him be the braver man; and that for his part, he had no mind to fight on that quarrel; I looking hereapon fomewhat disdainfully on him, faid, he spoke more like a Paillard than a Cavalier, to which he answering nothing, I rid my ways, and afterwards went to Monfieur Terant, a French Gentleman that belonged to the Duke of Montmorency, formerly mentioned; who telling me he had a quarrel with another Gentleman, I offered to be his fecond, but he flying he was provided already, I rode thence to the Engl in quarters, attending fome fit occasion to fend again to the Lord Walden; I came no fooner thither, but I found Sir Thomas Somerfet with 24 or 12 more in the head of the English, who were then drawing forth in a body or fquadron, who feeing me on borfeback, with a footman only that attended me, gave me fome affroating words, for my quarrelling with the Lord of Walden; whereupon I alighted, and giving my horfe to my lacky, drew my fword, which he no fooner faw but he he drew his, as alfo all the company with him; F running hercupon amongst them, put by fome of their thrufts, and making towards him in particular put by a thrust of his, and had certainly run him through, but that one Lieutenant Prichard, at that infant taking me by the fhoolder. turned me ande, but I recovering myfelf again ran at him a fecond time, which he perceiving retired himfelf with the company to the tents which were near, although not fo falt but I hart one Proger, and some others also that were with him; but they being all at lak got within the tents, I finding now nothing elfe to be done, got to my horse again, having received only a flight hurt on the outlide of my ribs, and two thrufts, the one through the fkirts of my doublet, and the other through my breeches, and about 18 nicks spon my (word and hilt, and so rode to the trenches before Juliers, where our foldiers were."

253

A Sketch of the Philosophical Chanractor of the late Lord Viscount Bolingbroke. By Thomas Hunter, Vicar of Weverham in Cheshire.

HE good intention, as well as the good execution of this work, will naturally recommend it to the friends of piety and religion, which are we hope so namerous a body, that the work may flatter itself with a general good reception.

The author has it feems had the misfortene misfortune to lose his fight, which he modestly pleads as an apology, for any defects the too difcerning critic may fee in his work. We however persuade ourselves, that the humane and reader will find himself prejudiced in the favour of a man, who, though deprived of the greatest bleffing of our human state, can Bill exert his faculties for the good of human kind; and surely there cannot be a greater service to men, than that of exposing the futility and falseness of those bold and bad reasoners, who, like the serpent of old, pretending to raise and enoble our nature, and to teach us wildom, carry us away from that humble path of simplicity and obedience, wherein it has pleased God to permit and direct that poor creature man to look for his falvation.

While we give every praise to the intention, and allow the merit of the execution of this work, we have still our doubts whether these kind of writers, who dignify themselves with the stile of freethinkers. are not, especially after a time, best answered with disdain: while the weakness of mankind, and their madness for novelty, gives a kind of weight to these sorts of works, they feem to call for anfwers, lest a silence on the side of truth should give confidence to falshood; but when their novelty is worn off, the less notice is taken of them, the less they are remembered.

In reality our modern free-thinkers have been but copiers, and it is some respect to truth, that while the remains one and the same, the false reasoner, availing himself of the forgetfulness of mankind, gets a momentary credit by retailing, in somewhat perhaps of a new mode and garb, the forgotten errors and follies of past times, and then lies by himself unheeded and unregarded, till some new sophit, fed and fostered upon his exploded errors, glories in being a new kducer of the unwife and unwary: we cannot however quite agree with our author, that the noble writer usefully and handsomely employs his reason and his rhetoric in decrying school divinity, nor that his Lordship's testimony, added to the church of England writers, is an increase of strangth to our cause; his Lordship's object was to destroy the reverence of our church, as much as that of Rome, and we believe it were better to stand wholly on our own firm ground, than to accept the trescherous affistance of so profane an hand.

Our author, with all his zeal against the philosophical or irreligious writings of Lord Bolingbroke, seems almost of an opinion with his Lordship in his political work, which, however, are fallen nearly into as much disrepute as his philosophical, and possibly not without reason; there is, however, a pompousness of phrase, a shew and affectation of learning, and a sort of glair of elocution, that seems at least to excuse, if not to justify, the admiration that his works once excited.

Our author, however, exempts from his praise the noble Lord's political works, that were wrote for the ends of party, or to gratify passion, or feed resentment.— This is indeed such an allay, as we fear leaves the noble Lord very little matter of praise behind.

The following extracts will give an idea of our author's manner, and enable our readers to form a conclusion on the observations we have made:

لمد

" The knowledge of human nature was easy, and clear to a mind capacious and penetrating like lord Bolingbroke's, and like his, familiar by practice and theory, by conversation and reading, with the history of mankind:—this is the proper school of the passions, where they appear not delineated in the lifeless draught, and with the infipid formality of a recluse profestor, or the vague or crude hypothesis of some new adventurer in moral philosophy, but in causes and combinations, their workings and progress by immediate effects, or remoter confequences, cloathed with circumstances and realized, and, as I would fay, embodied by fact and experience: but he saw still further, not only the general current, but the particular turnings and windings of the human passions;—not only their simple uniform operation, but their effects when combined and complicated, or when operating upon particular parties, from particular principles or interests, or upon fingle characters and in fingular circumstances:—and how each, or all, contributed to the forming in the views of human wisdom, that political crisis, which, according to his lordship's deductions, influenced the subject of his present examination.

We must except from this merit of his political works, the essays that were writteen to serve the ends of a party, to gratify passion, and feed his resentment. In these he has practised some of that subtilty he condemns in the schoolmen. And after all the applause that is given, and due to his great political sagacity, it must be acknowledged, that he has fometimes a refinement in his reflections, and in his deriving effects from remote causes, that would escape the ob-Servation of common sense, and will be found of little use to the common good; as his building for much—nay the whole succession a prudence without piety, and a course of nature without providence, is the baseless fabric of a political vision! and which, civil history might have shewn his lordship, had been by seeming accident, to appearance the most trifling, demolished in a thousand instances.

We may perhaps, not without reason, apply to his lordship the remark which Montaigne has made upon Guicciardini: 'I have obferved, fays he, this of him, that of so many persons and so many effects, so many motives and so many councils as he judges of, he never artributes any of them to virtue, religion, or conscience, as ' if all these were utterly extinct in the world.'—The Frenchman adds; 'This makes me suspect that his own take was vicious; from whence it might happen, that he ' judged other men by himself.' wish there was no reason to apply this to his lordship: but his confesfed admiration of Tacitus might eafily lead him to, or at least confirm him in, both his scepticism concerning providence, and his ill opinion of mankind. He gives you a general, but striking review of times past, just observations on present objects, and rational conjectures of future confequences: he states facts, balances disferent interests, and weighs opposite powers: the genius of the several nations, the temper of the court and of the people are transiently, yet very expressively presented to the reader: he is precise, yet not minute, as he is general, yet not consused, speculative yet practical, resined yet rational and just. He reasons with strength and calmness, debates with temper, contradicts with decency, censures with modesty, and condemns with seeming justice and impartiality. But his excellencies, as a writer, are not confined to politics, and political speculations: he has with much elegance represented, or rather exposed school-divinity and metaphysics: his reason and his shetoric are both usefully and handsomely employed upon this occasion; and subtilties and nonentities exist no where so gracefully, as in his lordship's confutation of them. The scandalous corruptions of christianity by the church of Rome had been abundantly displayed by the protestant divines, by those of the church of England in particular; yethis lordship's testimony to those corruptions, deduced from personal observation and historical records, and a particular develope of the intrigues of emperors and popes, is by no means contemptible or inconsiderable; as the lord Bolingbroke had no party or passion to krve by his judgment on this subject, nor was prejudiced in favour of any particular communion of christians. His indignation is here proper; his figures magnificent, masterly and strong; and if d'Holbein is a great original, my lord is a copier or commentator, whom few can equal. If he is any where more happy, it is in the picture he has given us, of the folly, foppery, superstition, and idolarry of the church of Rose: here we perceive he drew from the life, and had his subject clearly before him. The pencil plays is part in the most admirable manner: the features are frong and firiking; the colours glow, and the figures move. The subject was indeed proper, and suited to his hand. spiritual truth was not to be expressed, but a gaudy, and a pompous ceremonial to be described: a temple, where marble, gilding, imagery, architecture, make to principal a figure; resdering it a scene, much more saited for the imagination of a painter, than the habitation of a God. If his lordship is warm, it here becomes him, and his refentment is pioes.

He inveighs with propriety enough, because with judice, against the licentionsness of sacred interpreters, and their arbitrary practice of giving to many different senies to the same passages of the Bible. It must be further coafessed, that much truth has been faid by his lordship, though invidiously enough of the corruptions of the clergy: and as truth is always on the fide of virtue, much good use may be made of his lordship's labours, on this subject: it may seach this venerable body, if at this day they had need of teaching, that by a conduct contrary to their profession, they give occasion to the enemies of the cross of Christ, and arm insidelity with the keenest weapons against that church, of which they are members and ministers."

THE

CONTENTS.

HISTORY OF EUROPE.

CHAP. I.

State of the Belligerent Powers. Ruffia. Conduct of the Neutral Powers.

Probable conjequences of the war. Turky. Firminess of the Grand Signior. Probability of a Peace. Spain. Falkland's Islands. Great Britain. Portugal.

p. [1]

C H A P. H.

War on the Danube. State of the armies during the winter. Account of the countries that were the jeat of the war. Battle at the river Larga, in which the Kan of the Tartars is defeated. Grand Vizir croffes the Danube. Great hattle fought between the Pruth and the Cabul, in which General Romanzow gained a compleat willory. The Turks purfued to the Danube, and obliged to crofs that river with great lofs. [13]

C H A P. 111.

Bender besteged by Count Panin. Brave desence made by the garrison and inhabitants. The Governor in a sit of despair possons himself; another chosen by the garrison in his room. Globe of compression; a kind of mine so called by the Russians. The place taken by storm and hurned; a great sanghter made. Budwine Tartars conclude a treaty with the Russiana General Romanzow sixes his head quarters at Calpouk, near the Dunube. Ibrailow besteged. Kilia Nova taken. Budogrod taken by Bason Inglession. Turks abandon the citadel of Ibrailow, after a long singe. The Turks being entirely driven beyond the Danube, the Russian armies go into winter quarters. War in Georgia.

[20]

Vol. XIII.

C H A P. IV.

Russan expedition to the Mediterranean. Count Orlow arrives in the More. Insurrection of the Greeks; crucities committed by them. Mistra, Araia, and other places taken. M. salongi taken. Coron besteged. Navarim taken. Patras taken, and the castle bestiged. Several other places inessessally bestiged. Greeks massacred at Patras, and the city burnt. Mainotes deseated. Turkish army arrives in the Morea. Execution of several of the principal Greeks. Moden bestiged by jea and land; actions between the bestigers, and a bady of Turks and Albanians; the stege sinally raised. Russians and Greeks totally separate; the latter retire to Navarino, and soon after abandon the Peninsula. Admiral Elphinstone's squadron arrives from England. Engagements at sea. Turkish steet destroyed in the barbour of Cisme. Captain Palha behealed. Levant Trade ruined. Smyrna in danger. Castle of Lemmos besieved; relieved by Hassan Bey. Enormities committed by the runaway sulms and deserters. Plague at Constantinople. Revolution in Egypt. Aly Bey. [17]

C H A P. V.

Unhappy state of Poland; the plague breaks out in that country. Germany. Conduct of the Emperor. Of the King of Prussia. Prussian troops enter the territories of Dantzick. Changes in the Ministry at Copenhagen, Danish expedition against Algiers. Sweden. Difference between the States of Holland and the Elector Palatine.

C H A P. VJ.

France. Sufferings of M. de Chalctais. Prosecution commenced against the Duke d'Aiguillon, at Verjailles. A bed of justice beld, at which the King puts a stop to the Prosecution by his Letters Patent. Conduct of the Princes of the blood. Arret of the parliament of Paris against the Duke. The King issues an arret, by which that of the parliament is annulal. Grand dejutation from the farliament to Verjailles; the King's answer. Conduct of the other parliaments. D putation from the parliament of Britany; two of its m mbers sent to prijon. The King arrives justicely at Paris, and holds a hed of justice, at which all the papers relative to the projecution are seized, and the decrees of the parliament erased from the Registers. Violent measures tak n with the other parliaments. Arms from the King's council of state. Distress of the people from the scarcity of provisions. Corsica. Expedition to sums. State of Italy. [47]

C H A P. VII.

State of affairs previous to the meeting of parliament. General discontent upon the desermination on the Middleyex oledion. Addresses: Petitions the consequent tonfequence of the addresses. Parliament meets. Speech from the thronts Debates. Amendment proposed to the address; Affair of the potitions, wielcutly azitated: Amendment rejected. Resignations. Motion tending to define the jurisdiction, in cases of contested elections; amendment to the mostion. Motion in the House of Lords. Protest.

С Н А Р. 'УПТ. ¥

Motion for disqualifying certain officers of the revenue from woting for the election of Members of parliament: opposition to it: the motion over-valed. Ciwil lift. Repeal of part of the late revenue all, for imposing duties in the colonies; duty upon tea continued. All for regulating the proceedings on controverted elections. London remonstrance: great debatets. Address to his Majesty.

C H A P. IX.

State of affairs in Ireland, at the meeting of the new Parliament. Augmentation bill paffed. Privy council money-bill, rejected, Supplies raised in the usual manner. Lord Lieutenant's speech and protest; Parliament protogued. Consequences thereof. Motion made here for the Irish papers to rejected. Motion, and resolutions, relative to American offairs; overraised. Bill for reversing the adjudications relative to the Middles election. Debates on the answer to the remonstrance of the city of London. Resolutions proposed in the Hanse of Lords relative to the colonies. King's speech. Parliament breaks up.

85°

	The	CH	i R C	N	IC	LE.		[65
Births for the y	ter 177	0	_		-	_	-	[17 8 [179
Marriages	_	_	-	$\overline{}$	-		-	[179]
Principal prom:	tiens -	-	-	-	-	_		[181
Deaths .	-	_	_		-		-	[186

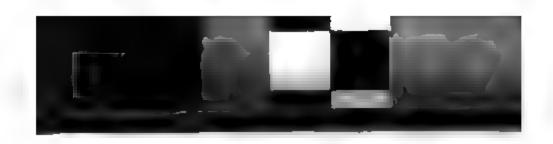

APPENDIX to the CHRONICLE.

Two Protofts of the House of Lords	103
The humble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition, of the Lord Mayor, Alder	men.
and Livery of the City of London; with his Majefly's Answer - !	100
The bumble Address, Kemonstrance, and Petition of the Lord Mayor, Alder	RIN.
and Common-Council of the City of London's with his Majefly's Anja	wer, and for Lord Mayor's Reply [201
A Letter from the Lord Mayor of the City of London, to the Lords of Admirally M Letter from the Lords of the Admiralty to the Lord Mayor, in Any	203
	204
	Good

Coty of a Letter transmitted by the Lords of the Admiralty to the Right the Lord Miyor — — — — — —	His.
The bumble Address, Remonstrance, and Petition, of the Lord Mayor, men, and Commons of the City of London; with his Majesty's Answer Account of the Proceedings at the County Meeting at York	[1514. [2 0 5
A Letter of Thanks from the Freeholders of the County of York to Sir (George Saville, Bart. and Edwin Lascelles, Esq; and their respective Answer. Account of the unhappy Riot at Boston in New England —	1 203 211
Caje of Captain Thomas Preston	[215
Account of the Trial of Captain Presson — — — — Account of the Trial of Mungo Campbell, for the Murder of Alexande	r Earl of Eglingtoun — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	[219
Rights, to the Hon. House of Assembly of South Carolina, in Ans	wer 10
one from the Affembly — — — — — — — — — — — Abstract of an Act to regulate the Trials of controverted Elections, or I	₹224 Vetarni of Members to serve in Parliament	[226
Abstract of an Act, for the better Preservation of the Gume — Abstract of an Act, for preventing the stealing of Dogs —	[237 [228
Abstract of an sict, for resistering the Prices at which Corn is sold in the	ne several Counties of Great Britain — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	ibid. ilege ef
Parliam nt	[229
Extraordinary Conduct of the Regulators in the back Settlements of Carolina — — — — — — —	[230
The Lord Mayor's Queries in respect to the Legality of Press Warrant. The humble Address of the Lord Mayor, Sheviffs, Commons, and C	s [232 Lizen of the City of Dublin — — — —	ibia.
Supplies granted by Parliament for the Year 1770 — — — Was and Meuns for raising the Supplies — — —	[234 [239
	4-57

TATE PAPERS.

H's Myeff's meft gracious Speech to both Houses of Parlia	ment, on Tucides
the 9th of Jonney 1770; with the humble Addresses	of both Houses 14
the Occasion a dilla Majesty's most gracious Answer	- [244
The bumble distress of the Right Un the Lords Spiritual a	and Temporal, and
Commons, in Parliament offimbled, presented March 2 with his beingen is Auf in	3, to bis Majeft;
A Proclamation for encouraging Seamen to enter themselves	on beard bis Ma-
jejly's Ships of War	[:49
His Majesty's moji gratious Speech to both Houses of Parlia	ment, on Saturdes
the 1910 Day of Miv 1770
The humble Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Com London, in Common-Council assembled, presented to his Ma	imons of the City of njefty on Wednesdag
May 30, 1770. on the Birib of another Princess, w	ith his Mojesty's
Answer — — — —	— [251
	· His

His Majesty's most gracious Speech to both Houses of Parliament, on Tuesday the 13th Day of November 1770; with the humble Addresses of both Houses on the Occasion, and his Majesty's most gracious Answer — [258

CHARACTERS.

Of the Russians; from the Account of a Journey into Siberia, made	69 (erder of the King of France	-
Some A. count of the Tartars of Kafan, under the Government of Ruffia	_	16
An Account of the Wotiaks	$\overline{}$	18
Some Account of the Life, Misforiumes, and Character of the celebrate	ď
Favourite, Prince Menzekoff	-	20
Some Account of Count Biron, late Duke of Conrland -	_	27
Of the Coffacks, and the finzular Customs of the Zaporavian Republic	_	20
Of the ancient Scandinavians		33
Of Rollo, the Conqueror of Normandy	_	40
Some Account of the A bigenfes -	-	43
The Character of Constantine the Great	_	44
An Account of the Circoncelliones, in Africa	-	59
Character of Lewis XIII. of France	_	51
A foort Character of the late Sir Joseph Yates -		52
Genuine Anecdates of the Life of the late Peter Collinson, F.R.S.	_	53
Memairs of the Rev. Mr. George Whitefield	-	5#

NATURAL HISTORY.

An extraordinary Czfe of three Pi ber Shoulder —	ns jewallowed by a	Girl, and dif	cbarged at
A Letter from the Hon. Wm. Ham at Naples, to Matthew Maty, I	ilten, bis Majefty	's Envoy Ext	raordinary ticulars on Mount Vefuvius, and Extrait of a Letter from Mr. B.	Gooch, Surgean, o	f Shottifham,	mear Norwich, to Mr. Joseph Warner with the History of the Case rela Of the different Quantities of Rain	ative thereto	-	- 79
over the same spot of Ground Experiments to prove that the Lun	rinonfuefs of the S	_	→ 72
faction of its animal Substances Of a singular Disease, with we of the Invalids in France were	bieb two Butcher	s of the Roya	al Hospital
The case of the Rev. Mr. Wind ralytic Disorder -	er, sobe som cured	by Lightning	of a Pa-
Account of the Needles, in the Isle An Account of the Tailor Bord, with		— an Indian Fors	— 82 # — 83

The Thirt	Twili	bt of	:be G a	!		•		-	85
Thethirty	-lt.r.	r able	. 17, 7 6	r sequel	of the G	onnagra	108 07 106	er erig	88
The Runie	r Chaj	be Or	in the 19th	agic of	vain ve 1 edhr	- -		-	92
Extracts f	70m	pe Va Seka	e o, K. a.	Manuter	icts at	og the Flow	-ial anie	y.	93
Some Acc	lome c	grio.s	Paliages	ca Ara	hic Poer	re Lycai		, a, .,	96
Dress of	the An	ient i	reside		•		-		101
Clause in	the S	alic L	·w	-			and i	_	103
Caje of the	be unb	74 y C	bunden	-					103
Advanta	es auk	bich F	ance de	rived fr	om the a	ancient I	Lonks	-	ibid.
State of &	Trace	in the	8. b and	9 b C.	nturies	•	-	-	104
Specimen	of the	Wit a	nd Satu	e of the	Midau	e Azes		-	105
A Differt	ation d	n Jod	u:u, the	Idol of	Saxeny,	und of t	be March	-	106
Aneciote	of Sha	krjpea	re, neve	r printe	d in bis	Works	-	•	107
•	US	SE F	UL	PΙ	ROJ	EC	ΓS, &	tc.
A Letter	from	Mr.	7. M:	ult to i	Dr. Per	rciwal, e	f Manch	ester. F	'. R . S
					aring S			•	10
Some Acc	count (of an	Oil, tr	nsmittee	d hy Mi	r. George	Brown	igg, of	Nort

109 Improvements and Experiments in Agriculture: - Of Potatoes, and the amazing Crops which they produce by a proper Culture 111 Of Cubbages 115 Of Carross 125 Of Lucerne 1:4

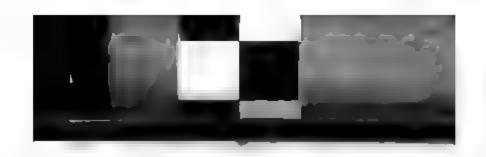

By William Watsen, M.D. R.S. S.

Of Sainfoine 129 On the Number of Draught Cattle used in Tillage 130

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.

An exotes of the Court of Petersburg's in the Reign of the Empress Anne 1;3 Three Letters, supposed to have been written by the celebrated M. Mentesquieu 139 Letter from Voltaire to the Duke of Valiere A Letter from M. Voitaire to Mr. Rousseau of Toulouse, concerning a Letter inserted in the St. James's Chronicle of July 1762 An Account of the noble Aqueduel of Alcantara, by which Life on is supplied 150 An Account of the Manner in which the Punishment of the Kneut was inflitted on the celebrated Mudam Lupouchin, at Petersburgh; with some Observations on the Russian Punishments, and the Effects they produce; and several

C U N I E N I S.
Particulars Mative to the Banishment of Count Lestec and I	_ of a Debauch at the profest King (then Prince) of Pruffia's	151 Cannot ad from the Abbe Millet's Elements of the History of England	157 me the late Miss Talbet, to a New-forn Child -	159 on a Sentence in the Law, called Yein force et dure	161
en Flattery — — —	163
entures of Scarmentado; e fatirical Novel by Voltaire -	165 criminal not always the m? unbappy. A moral Tale -	169
e with a Wife no ungenerous Demand in a linguand -	74
ratory Speech by a no I'-afected Tanner to the County of Be	175
Abingdon the 2d of Ap. it 1649, for the Election of Pembrol
t of the Stire
Speech Spoken by Philip Herbert; late Earl of Pembroke, &	177
eard with mich Content without an Qath -	178
good Humour	180
rigin of Signs denoting Trades	181
of Self-Formenting	186
and Latter which was written by the celebrated Sir Walter	Ralainh
'use Henr . c'deft Sen of Turnes the Eurst	182 try of a popular Charaster in France, very much mentioned, l neren in England
ion on the Various and Absistive of Calegu'a's Horfe -	190
f a Pisture, now painting by Sir J Sona Re wolds -	193 on of a Letter , rom the Emp es Quin to the Dauphin of Fr arrive with the Archduckeft hir Daughter from the Records of the Town of Arundel	195 · ibid.
POETRY.
Grom the Deserted Village; a Poem, by Dr Geldsmith
the New Year, 1-70. By William West Lead, Efg; -	197
THE ATERN A CONT. 1 70. D) OF MINIMO OF ARE LEADING BINE.	201

from the Deferted Village; a Poem, by Dr Geldsmith	_	197
the New Year, 1-70. By William West lead, E/q;		201 be Hon. Mijs Yorke, (afternvards Lany slajon.) By ber on, Charles Yorke, Ejq;		ibid.
dy with a Pr. fent of Pope's Works. By the fime	_ in the Manner of Waller; occasioned by a Receipt to mai
Auchan has I also Do the lane	CA TAK	Zi-ven
Author by a Lady. By the fame		IDIa.
An Elegy. By John Gerrard, Curate of Withycombe	in the	Moor,
	_	205
le from an unfortunate young Gentleman to a young La	dy	By the
	-	207
Action of Dr. King's Latin Epifile, entitled, Antonietic's	Advic	e to the and concerning the Chaice of a Kent. Ru Me Puffel	-	210
and Straw. A Fable — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —	-	217
Kings. A Fable	_	218
Modern Comedies
. By the late Dollor Parnell		$10
· Director Colors Colors	_	320
•		The

The Beggar		2::
To the King of Prussia, on his Recovery. By M. de Voltaire	; 173	eflated
by Dr. Franklin — — —	-	223
To the Merquis de Villette. By the Same -	_	ibic.
Ode for His Majesty's Birth-day, June 4, 1770 -		224
Ode on his Majesty's Birth-day. Said to be written by a wery gr	eat L	aäy c e
the 41h of last June -	_	225
A Specimen of Saragon Poetry, from Aubalfidal Annales Moslem.	ici.	On a
Cat killed in a Dove-bouse -		ibid.
The Horse and the Olive. By the late Archdeacon Paracl	-	226
On throwing by an old black Coat -	-	227
The Expostulation: To Delia. By Lord G. —		225
The Reply. By Lady Mury S		229
Prayer to Indifference. By Mrs. G : Found in Richmond G.	arien	ibid.
Henry and Sopby — — — —	_	231
To Fear — — — —	_	252
Fortune the Foundation of Fame. Translated from Rouseau	-	233
The Petition of the Fools to Jupiter. A Fable -	•	234
An Answer, in the Name of Lo d Chestersield -	_	235
A W fir to the North. By a Lady -	_	230
To a Robin, which has lately taken up his Residence in the C.	a:tes	rai st
Bristol, and accompanies the Organ with his Singing -	-	237
Purt of the last Chorus of the Second AA of Sencca's Troades	_	2,8
Fame and his Companions. A poetical Fable. By the Rev. Mr. R		-, 259
Written by a Brower's Daughter, on her Father's discharging bis	r Csa	_
for getting in Liquor — —		243
Wisdom and Health — — — —		241
On the Death of the Marquis of Granly —		15.7.
Another on the same — — —		1012.

An Account of Books published in the Year 1770.

A Journey from London to Genca, through England, Portugal, Spain, and France. By Jeseph Barretti, Secretary for foreign Correspondence to the Royal Academy of Painting, Scuipture, and Architecture. 4 vol. 8vo. 242 The Life of Edward Lord Herbert of Cherbury. Written by himself. 248 A Sketch of the philosophical Character of the late Lord Viscount Bolingbrike. By Thomas Hunter, Vicar of Weverham in Cheshire — 253

THE END.

